The terrific strength of this strangling grip is revealed in a study by International Labor News Service of bureau of labor statistics figures on the cost of depression to date.

It is shown that, prior to the sweeping wage-cut in steel, the buying power of the 14,000,000 workers normally employed in manufacturing industry had dropped $4,454,000,000 from 1929, a drop of 39 per cent of 1929 total wages, the combined cost of unemployment, part time and wage reductions.

Tremendous Trade Losses.

That is the amount of money taken away from the merchants of the nation, through chiseling away the earnings of workers. This astounding fact is perhaps the most dramatic lesson yet brought forth of the extent to which merchant well-being depends upon worker well-being. Because of unemployment and wage reductions, the merchants of America—the butchers, grocers, clothing dealers, landlords, etc.—have had their sales cut four and a half billion dollars a year without taking into account the further effect of the wage cuts just put into effect by steel and surrounding industries.

The buying power of 14,000,000 manufacturing workers and their families suffered a progressive decline since the middle of 1929, as shown by the reports of the bureau of labor statistics. These reports are in the form of index numbers, indicating the (1) total manufacturing industry employes, (2) total of payrolls, and another index showing the cost of living.

Wage Drop 39 Per Cent.

Comparing June, 1929, and June, 1930, it is evident that there was a decline of 39 per cent in the total payment of wages, and a net displacement of workers amounting to only 26.9 per cent. It is clear from this that the reduction of wage rates was not as great as the displacement of labor, but amounted to a differential of approximately 12.1 per cent, in the actual reduction of wage rates, in that period.

This seems to indicate that the effort to prevent the cutting of wages has had an effect—a very considerable effect, in fact.

But in considering the reduction of buying power, there are the two classes to be considered: (1) those completely displaced, which was accomplished by part time unemployment, to some extent, but which represented total loss of buying power for that unemployed period; and (2) those who remained at work, but received the relatively lower wage rate as shown by the index. Those who were unemployed—well, they lost all their previous buying power, so far as income was concerned. The others had on the average a reduced buying power of about 12.1 per cent less.

Displacement of Workers.

The total wages paid in 1929 amounted to $11,421,000,000, as shown by the census of manufactures figure given for the averages of such data. The net displacement of workers amounting to 26.9 per cent would reduce the number of workers by 2,353,000 in manufacturing only. The total reduction in wages paid would be 39 per cent of the 1929 total, or $4,454,000,000.

Glassblowers Lose A Veteran Official

Branch 92, Glass Bottle Blowers' association, lost a valued officer and a loyal friend in the passing of Robert Elmer Carmin, who died recently at his home in Alton Park.

Mr. Carmin had served continuously as financial secretary of his union for the past eighteen years, and ten years ago the position of treasurer was added to his duties and he had also held that post since that time.

"Bob," as he was known to scores of warm personal friends, had endeared himself to his associates by his pleasant disposition and an untiring desire for helpfulness to others. His loyalty to his organization and his fellowmen was an accepted fact which endeared him to all with whom he came into contact.

A wife and son survive to mourn his loss.

The Labor World speaks for the entire local movement in extending to the bereaved family sincere and heartfelt condolences, and joins with the Glassblowers and other friends in mourning the passing of this staunch trades unionist and good citizen.

Longshoremen Refuse Wage Rate Reduction

New York.—Joseph P. Ryan, president of the International Longshoremen's association, told the representatives of transatlantic shipping lines that his organization would insist on the present wage rates of 85 and $1.05 an hour for straight and overtime labor and maintenance of a 44-hour week in the new contract with the shippers.

In their argument for a reduction in the wage rate by 15 and 25 cents for straight and overtime work, respectively, the shipping men said the longshoremen were paid 30 cents an hour in 1912, and suggested the 1912 rate should be taken as a basis with cost of living adjustments to date. Mr. Ryan replied that longshoremen were not sufficiently organized in 1912 to demand a higher wage.

"The fact that they were paid 30 cents an hour," he said, "does not mean that they were paid a fair wage nor that they were satisfied with their wage. They took that wage because they had to. They are organized today and in a position to demand a fair wage."

CHURCH BODY RAPS CONCERNS WHICH CUT PAY

Declare Wholesale Slashes Unjustified.

SAYS CORPORATIONS ACTED AS DICTATORS

Have Consistently Opposed Intervention to Solve Labor Problems.

(International Labor News Service)

Washington, Oct. 1.—United States Steel and other great corporations are condemned for cutting wages, in the seventeenth of a weekly series of articles on the Encyclical of Pope Pius XI, issued by the National Catholic Welfare conference. "Recent wholesale wage cuts seemed unjustified when measured by the encyclical," says the conference, which declares the great wage-cutting corporations acted like dictators in ordering the reductions.

To satisfy the encyclical, the wage-cutting concerns will have to prove that they could not avoid the cuts by better management, or greater enterprise, or improved methods, the conference says. It continues:

Encyclical Is Quoted.

"They will have to prove that they took organized labor into their counsels to overcome presumed obstacles to a just wage.

"They will have to prove that they have asked the government to help them and their organized employes to overcome the presumed reasons for wage cuts. They will have to prove that the income of their concerns would be unjustly distributed and that labor would get too much if wages were not cut.

"The pertinent passages of the encyclical are as follows:

"'The condition of any particular business and of its owner must also come into question in settling the scale of wages; for it is unjust to demand wages so high that an employer cannot pay them without ruin, and without consequent distress amongst the working people themselves. If the business makes smaller profit on account of bad management, want of enterprise or out-of-date methods, this is not a just reason for reducing the workingmen's wages. If, however, the business does not make enough money to pay the workman a just wage, either because it is overwhelmed with unjust burdens, or because it is compelled to sell its products at an unjustly low price, those who thus injure it are guilty of grievous wrong; for it is they who deprive the workingmen of the just wage, and force them to accept lower terms.

Co-operation Urged.

"'Let employers, therefore, and employed join in their plans and efforts to overcome all difficulties and obstacles, and let them be aided in this wholesome endeavor by the wise measures of the public authority.'

"The great wage-cutting concerns have not acted democratically but like dictators in deciding upon and ordering the reductions. If their move was the right one, they have no means of knowing it, for they have not taken their employes into counsel and they have not asked for the co-operation of government in such union-management bargaining and co-operation. They have consistently opposed intervention to solve the labor problem. They are non-union concerns and have long fought free organization of labor. They are of the type that the encyclical described when it said 'with criminal injustice they denied the innate right of forming associations to those who needed them for self-protection against oppression.'"

Large Crowds See Big Indian Fair

Great crowds which enjoyed the novel program staged at Engel stadium Friday gave indication that the Indian fair sponsored by the local Boy Scouts organization will be well attended throughout the three-day session, grown-ups and "kids" being loud in their praises of the unusual entertainment offered.

Planned events contemplate enjoyable features for all ages, as well as comprising educational features which are at once entertaining and profitable for those who attend.

More than thirty full-blooded Cherokee Indians, it is said, take part in games and feats of skill which are peculiar to the race and which are seldom offered for public entertainment in this section.

The fair will be continued through Sunday, and school children are especially urged to take advantage of the unusual opportunity offered. A small admission fee is charged.

RUBBER CO. GRANTS 5-DAY WEEK WITH WAGE CUT

New York.—F. B. Davis, Jr., president of the United States Rubber company, presented the company's employes with a five-day week with a reduction of one-eleventh in wages and salaries. The cut applies to everybody from laborers up to the president. The corporation employs about 25,000 people.

No Fall Gain In Employment, A. F. of L. Says

Number Out of Work Has Been Steadily Increasing Since Last Spring, According to Monthly Reports.

(International Labor News Service)

Washington, Oct. 1.—The usual fall gain in employment has not occurred this year, figures on trade union employment gathered by the American Federation of Labor show. In normal years, unemployment among trade unionists has usually reached its lowest point by August or September but the number out of work this fall, according to the latest A. F. of L. figures, is still well above the spring level.

Commenting on the A. F. of L. report, President William Green said:

"Our final figures for August show more out of work than in July, although preliminary reports had suggested a possible improvement. And the preliminary figures for the first half of September show another slight increase in unemployment. Industrial unemployment has increased steadily since May. Our weighted figures since the spring low point are as follows: May, 17.1 per cent unemployed; June, 18.2; July, 18.8; August (final), 19.2; September (preliminary), 19.5.

Winter Prospects Serious.

"Without the usual fall gain in employment, prospects for the winter are even more serious. There is little hope for further improvement this year.

"Farmers also laid off some of their help in September with the end of summer harvesting, so that in agriculture and industry unemployment has increased by about 350,000 from July to September and we estimate that nearly 5,600,000 in the United States are now without work.

"Some trades, however, show seasonal improvement. In clothing trades 45 per cent of those unemployed in August are now back at work, although 15 per cent of the membership are still unemployed. A few other trades showed very slight gains—food industries, manufacturing, service industries, street transportation. But unemployment increased in building, metal trades, on railroads and in water transportation, counteracting the gains in other industries.

Building Hard Hit.

"Some trades are suffering especially. In building unemployment has been increasing since June and 52 per cent are now out of work. The water transport trades, longshoremen and seamen, have 33 per cent out of work. in metal trades 31 per cent are unemployed and in manufacturing 30 per cent. In printing there has been as yet no change for the better.

"The report for cities shows unemployment increasing in thirteen, employment better in ten and no change in one.

"The situation is reported as especially bad in Chicago. Jersey City, Cleveland, Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit and Birmingham."

Railroad Unions To Ask Congress To Help Jobless

Twenty-one Organizations Announce Legislation to Shorten Work Day and Work Week Will Be Sought.

(International Labor News Service)

Cleveland, O., Oct. 1.—Twenty-one railroad labor organizations will ask congress to pass legislation shortening the work day and work week as a measure of unemployment relief, D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, has just announced. Action will be sought at the coming session.

Robertson, who heads a special committee of the twenty-one groups, said the specific plan to be presented to congress will not be made until a national study of the railroad labor situation now in progress has been completed.

Mr. Robertson explained that the decision to take the relief program to congress was the result of refusals by railroad officials to discuss the problem with the brotherhoods in joint conference.

"We have made no decision as to what effect shorter hours should have upon wages," Robertson said. "We wanted to thresh that matter out in joint session with the railroads, but they were unwilling to meet us, and so the wage question remains unsettled.

"All of the twenty-one organizations are agreed, however," Mr. Robertson said, "that shorter working hours and a shorter working week are the only means by which the unemployed railroad men can be put back to work." He estimated the number of the brotherhoods' unemployed at 350,000.

A further contributing cause to the decision to taken an unemployment relief program to congress, he said, was the rapid depletion of the brotherhoods' relief funds.

The survey now being made will attempt to obtain every important bit of data available to show the results of the present situation and the possible outcome of tentative relief plans.

AYMON SEES BETTER TIMES IN NEAR FUTURE

Labor Official Sounds Optimistic Note.

SAYS TRADE UNIONS MAKING PROGRESS

Points to Activities in Various Localities and Predicts Organization Wave.

A note of optimism in the midst of a time of uncertainty and pessimistic predictions was sounded Monday night by Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and special representative of the American Federation, in an address delivered to delegates to Chattanoona Trades and Labor council Monday night.

Mr. Aymon's duties call him into the industrial sections in all parts of the south, and he is in as close touch, possibly, as anyone else with affairs concerning the workers. He characterized as remarkable the continued strength in numbers and effectiveness of the organized labor movement in the face of the most trying conditions which labor has ever faced. Mr. Aymon declared that with few exceptions the local unions, central bodies and state federations are intact, and pointed out numerous instances where great progress had been made in organization work in spite of a deplorable industrial situation.

The labor official expressed confidence that the coming months will bring relief from the acute unemployment problem, and predicted that with a business revival will come the greatest organization movement ever witnessed among workers of old and new industries.

Church Group Asks New Economic System

Buckhill Falls, Pa.—Nothing short of a new economic system designed to conserve human values will meet the social crisis brought into sharp relief by the millions of jobless workers whom the owners and managers of industry refuse to employ, was the conclusion of the conference of sixty Protestant leaders, religious editors and social workers from thirteen states who met here to discuss unemployment and related topics.

"The present economic crisis comes both as a spur and a rebuke to the Christian church operating within and supported by the present social order," the round table on long-range economic planning said in its report which was adopted by the conference.

Declaring that "the human fact outweighs the property fact, the ecclesiastical fact, the traditional fact and the institutional fact," and insisting that "the community exists to provide the free abundant life for all its members," the report recommended "the replacement of our present policy of unplanned, competitive individualism by a planned social economy aiming at the conservation of human values."

The report especially stressed the necessity of systematic economic planning by industry or otherwise to "assure regularity of employment," with the abolition of economic uncertainty from the minds of the workers.

The report also urges shorter hours without wage reductions, unemployment and sickness insurance and old-age pensions, the abolition of child labor, long-range planning of public works, and "the turning of public income from the economic waste of the building of armaments."

Rev. Dr. W. Beaven, president of the Colgate-Rochester Divinity school, presented the program, which will be submitted to the churches as suggestions for immediate unemployment relief. It will also be presented to President Hoover's organization on unemployment relief.

Political Sugar

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

The moment American organized labor enters politics it must resign itself to accept the fortunes of political war, and when this is done its fight for a living wage and shorter working hours will become subordinated until they are side issues.

The tribulations of the labor party in Great Britain ought to be a lesson to American organized labor. Under the leadership of their MacDonalds, Snowdens and Hendersons English labor rode into political power on the crest of a momentary socialistic movement in which a small yet influential section of Britain's present-day statesmen took part. When these individual politicians fell English labor descended with them.

That now means a complete reorganization of the labor party, and English labor unions. It also means labor must re-establish its ideals and program in the minds of the people of the English nation. The recent collapse of the British labor party simply meant the undoing of decades of hard work by workingmen to elevate labor in the eyes of the English nation.

Does American organized labor want to go through this needless obliteration of its ideals and wrecking of its accomplishments? If it does not, it must not permit itself to become the political football of "friendly" politicians who offer it political sugar.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Who said: "Support of the labor press is one of the chief duties of workingmen, and all should see that this powerful means of educating the laboring masses as to their rights and duties is sustained and encouraged in every way possible?"

A.—This is from a declaration of the American Federation of Labor in 1882.

Q.—When did the American Federation of Labor first take action on the Mooney-Billings case?

A.—In 1917, when the convention held that year expressed belief that Mooney and Billings were convicted on prejudiced evidence of complicity in the San Francisco Preparedness day bombing of 1916. The convention asked that Mooney and Billings be given a new trial.

RABBI CONDEMNS HOOVER'S JOBLESS RELIEF SCHEMES

Buckhill Falls, Pa.—"Those who stand at the head of our government have been notoriously blind and derelict at facing the full implications of the unemployment problem," said Rabbi Edward L. Israel, chairman of the central conference of American Rabbis and of its social service commission, in addressing the Protestant conference on unemployment, lawlessness and disarmament here. "They have failed to understand that this is something more than a problem of social relief, but one of fundamental economic justice that must be changed and corrected."

He termed economists "mere statisticians drawing us graphs," and said that most business men were "either blind or helpless."

Rabbi Israel is also chairman of the Baltimore employment commission.

RUN-DOWN and WEAK

"I began taking Cardui when in a weakened, run-down condition," writes Mrs. F. S. Perrit, of Wesson, Miss. "I took one bottle, and I seemed to improve so much that I sent for six bottles. After I had taken the six bottles, I seemed entirely well.

"Before I took Cardui, I was nervous, restless, blue and out of heart. I felt depressed all the time. After I took Cardui, all this disappeared.

ABOUT MONEY—WHO HAS IT?

We are taught that money is a medium of exchange.

Under our banking system, money has become a commodity in the markets of the world, with stocks and bonds, subject to combines, pools and corners—and today 6 per cent of the people own or control 90 per cent of the medium of exchange.

Right now five billions of dollars in gold is in storage. And nine-tenths of the credit of the country is housed in the great banking centers. When money is static, standing still, hoarded by individuals or great banking corporations, wealth is static and depressions occur.

To facilitate this control of money, international bankers have forced nations to adopt the gold standard—making a gold basis of value for all money, regardless of its source of issue or redemption basis, because it can be easily controlled and manipulated.

Think of the picnic our wheat growers would have if all other commodities had to be redeemed in wheat.

A recent statement issued by the Federal Reserve bank based on the volume of business transacted through clearing houses in one day indicated that every dollar in actual circulation turned over ninety-nine times and each time carried a charge of interest for use or discount.

Business pays the cost of use of money for 365 days per year, twenty-four hours each day—a total of 8,780 hours per year, but really uses it less than 3,000 hours, making the capital cost at least 18 per cent. This cost is eventually loaded on the backs of the ultimate consumer.

Our national wealth is estimated at 260,000 millions, but against this wealth, billions of outstanding liabilities, national, state, county, municipal and individual, must be charged. Interest payments by the people of the United States on public and private debts practically equals the entire income of the people.

Because of this condition the older financiers are entailing their estates in trust companies, removing their money from the realm of active industry. Governor Norman, of the Bank of England, predicts that if this policy is continued there will be no money in another generation—it will be private property.

Money is a subject little understood by the average man. He has left it to the banker. The unparalleled number of bank wrecks with tremendous losses to depositors show that money is little understood by many of those engaged in juggling it.

Depression Was Inevitable, Frey Tells Convention

Slump Certain as Wage Volume Feell Steadily, While Output Soared, Ohio Federation of Labor Convention Hears.

(International Labor News Service)

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 1.—"We cannot escape the conviction that the depression came principally because the total volume of wages began to steadily fall, while the value of our manufactured products continued rapidly to increase," John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the metal trades department, American Federation of Labor, told the Ohio State Federation of Labor convention here.

The foregoing statement came as the conclusion of an analysis by Mr. Frey of the causes of the depression. Presenting government figures to show that while American industries were enormously increasing the volume and value of their products, there was a decreasing volume of wages being paid, Mr. Frey said:

"It does not require an economist or other technically trained mind to grasp the economic fact that, if the value of manufactured goods increases but the volume of wages remains the same, the wage earners are less able to buy what is being produced. It is in this self-evident economic fact that we find the nub, the core, the very center of the principal reason for the present depression."

Outlines Labor's Remedy.

The remedy for the situation, Mr. Frey said, is to be found in the economic basis for wages adopted by the American Federation of Labor convention at Atlantic City in 1925. He continued:

"That convention deliberately scrapped the previous pronouncements relative to wages. It abandoned former declarations relative to a so-called fair wage, a living wage or a saving wage. The convention declared that unless the workers' real wages, the purchasing power of their wages, increased in proportion to industry's increasing capacity to produce, industry and commerce would be seriously injured.

"This economic basis for wages has since then established itself among economists and those who have given careful study to the major industrial problems. Had our captains of industry, commerce and finance accepted this principle in 1925, the depression would not have occurred. If there had been a slight recession due to world-wide conditions, it would not have affected industry and commerce as has the present depression, for the purchasing power of the mass of the people could have been maintained.

"Unquestionably, there will never be stable prosperity, prosperity which is safe and sound, until the wages paid bear a much closer approach to the annual volume of wealth being created by industry than they have in the past.

"An immediate measure of relief is the establishing of a shorter work week and a much shorter work day. Those now employed must be saved from discharge by dividing up the available work within the plants where they are employed. A material reduction in the number of hours worked per week is, in addition, a long-time necessity."

WHO SHOULD GOVERN?

By JOHN P. FREY

There have been two conflicting points of view relative to industrial relations. Those who believe that employers should have the entire voice in determining terms of employment and conditions of labor, and those who believe that labor has as much right to fix the terms of employment as the merchant or manufacturer has to determine the price at which he will sell his goods.

These two conflicting points of view have been expressed ever since our nation was founded. It was a live issue immediately after our federal constitution was framed in 1787. Shortly afterwards, the famous federalist, John Jay, said:

"Those who own the country ought to govern it."

The modern John Jay says, in effect, that "those who own the industries have the sole right to determine industrial policies."

The point of view did not originate in America. It is as old as history. It was the position of the absolute monarch; it was the attitude of the baron toward his serfs. It underlies the belief which, unfortunately, so many men have held, that the mass of the people exist for the convenience and the profit of a favored few. It is a point of view which is in direct conflict with trade union principles and policies. It is something which clashes with the conviction that all men are created free and entitled to equal rights. In practice it is a policy which must be destroyed if wage earners are to be free men in reality.

There is not a scrap of human experience which justifies the thought that those who own a country or its industries ought to govern it. Wherever and whenever they have, it has brought disaster to the privileged few as well as the majority who were being exploited. In our country it has been evident for some time that a number of those who owned the major wealth of the country believed that they should govern. They endeavored to accomplish their purpose through the rules and regulations, the wage rates, the hours of labor, and shop conditions which they arbitrarily determine.

They endeavored to govern through the influence of their enormous wealth and the political power which this gave them. Then endeavored to determine who the candidates for public office should be, and then endeavored to elect them, so that the men they selected would sit in legislative bodies and on the judicial bench.

They have succeeded at times in setting up the theory that those who own the industries should also have a property right in labor—should own labor—so that we would have the astonishing spectacle in America of men who were politically free, yet at the same time industrially serfs or slaves.

There is a world of difference between those who own a country governing it, and those who are the nation's citizens governing it. Our trade union movement exists, among its other purposes, to assure wage earners that they will have an equal voice with the owners of wealth in determining all of the conditions which affect their opportunities in life so that there will be democracy in establishing standards in industry, in the same manner that free men through their political action establish their standards and opportunities as citizens through legislation.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter I.

PART III: THE THOUGHT TREND OF JESUS' MIND

We have now reached what I am sure all will undoubtedly agree is the most interesting phase of the study of the person of Jesus. As far as space will permit we will for an issue or two look rather closely at the subject of the thought trend of Jesus' mind.

WM. L. MOSS

In the beginning let us set forth this question before us and delve deeply into the records as they stand in the New Testament in seeking the most satisfying and comprehensive answer to the question our ability permits.

"What was the thought trend of Jesus' mind as revealed in His teaching, words and actions that still draws men so irresistibly to Him?"

1. A Paradox. Jesus did not seek out those with whom He wished to associate because they thought as He did. He mingled much with the rich and powerful yet an outstanding note in His teaching warns against both these classes of men. Even John the Baptist, at whose hands Jesus sought baptism on the banks of the Jordan, and John's personal followers as well lived in a manner different from the way of the Master, and so different was this way of life between Jesus and the Baptiser and his group that the two methods were at times contrasted (Mk. 18:22). Still Jesus never once reproved the Baptiser and his followers, but on the other hand publicly associated Himself with them and permitted His name to be spoken in the same breath along with that of John. The answer to this is that Jesus believed motives were of no more importance than acts. He did not ask that men change their personalities. He asked that they change their hearts.

2. Luxury and Want. There was never any hesitancy on the part of Jesus to eat at the rich man's table or to be seen in rich men's company. Matthew, Zacheeus and Nicodemus, to mention only the three best known, were all rich or politically powerful men, and He has permitted His name to stand until time shall be no more closely linked with theirs! On the other hand, there is the Samaritan woman at the well, the once fallen but redeemed and beloved Mary, as well as a majority of His disciples whom we cannot but do otherwise than list as from the ranks of the common people. Why did not Jesus either choose His companions and disciples from either the rich or the poor, or, is there any indication tending to reveal the thought trend of His mind in the fact that He did not do so?

MINIMUM WAGE FOR FOOD AND FUR WORKERS

Standards of a minimum wage for female workers in the food and fur industries have been fixed by recent orders of the minimum wage board of Nova Scotia and Quebec, respectively. A wage of $11 was the amount specified for experienced food-trades workers on a weekly hour basis of not more than 44 nor less than 40 for all cities and towns of 17,000 population and over, and $10 in all towns under 17,000. A minimum wage was fixed at $12.50 for a 44-hour week for fur workers in the city and island of Montreal and within a radius of ten miles around and beyond the island, and at $10 for a 50-hour week elsewhere in the province.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Public officials and industrial leaders, at least many of them, are still hoping against hope that in some mysterious way business will suddenly revive. They are hoping that the cloud of depression will soon lift—so that for another seven years they can forget about unemployment.

In the interest of the general welfare—in the interest no less of private business—those in positions of leadership should not be permitted to forget about the continuing disgrace of involuntary joblessness. But experience teaches that the vast majority will quickly forget if there is failure to adopt a comprehensive public policy looking toward the prevention and mitigation of unemployment.

For a number of years advance planning of public works as one instrument for meeting depression problems was pressed for legislative action. Although reported from committee the plan was held up at Washington until the nation was in the midst of another business crisis. Now, belatedly, the necessity of planning public works long in advance has become painfully apparent. The legislation should have been adopted years earlier. Advance planning would then have come more quickly in the states and cities.

It is of course necessary under present conditions of unpreparedness to endeavor through private and public charity to relieve extreme suffering. It will be a great tragedy, however, if after all of the years of sad experience the importance of constructive action for the future is again ignored. Is it too much to expect that under the importunities of giving for charity intelligent people will also wish to direct some portion of their effort and support in the direction of permanent constructive accomplishment?

Strange ideas of what constitutes a good citizen seem to prevail in California, if reports of a Lake county naturalization case are true. Jakob Hullen, Santa Rosa poultryman, has been denied naturalization by Judge Ben Jones, of Lake county, on the ground that he is "not attached to the principles of the constitution." This ruling was based on Hullen's opinions voiced in court that public utilities should be owned and operated by the government for the people's benefit, and that some day even the farms would be publicly owned.

Hullen's attorney pointed out to the judge that such beliefs were not unconstitutional, and that Hullen was not an enemy of organized government. The court's decision will be appealed.

On the 21st birthday recently of Fraulein Inge Blaaman, only daughter of the German steel king and wealthy industrialist, she was given by her father a special train, consisting of a parlor car, a sleeper and a baggage car.

While Fraulein Blaaman was rejoicing over her kingly birthday present, millions of Germans were on the verge of starvation, dependent for existence on private charity or government doles.

The contrast between the state of Fraulein Blaaman and the state of millions of her fellow citizens is startling and indicates that Germany, despite her extensive experiments along social and welfare lines, has failed with the rest of the world to solve the problem of an equitable division of the products of modern civilization.

What Next!

A successful test of air conditioning of a railroad coach by the use of ice is announced by engineers of the American Ice company. The coach, of standard design, except for the addition of the conditioning equipment, was hauled by the Boston & Maine between Boston and Troy, N. Y., and temperatures 12 to 16 degrees cooler than the outside air were maintained throughout the trip. Costs of operation are apparently very favorable and indicate a new field of ice consumption. Additional tests on other roads will be made to confirm these results.

Labor to Fight Sales Tax Plan, Green Declares

A. F. of L. Head Strongly Denounces Proposal, Declaring It Scheme to Make Poor Carry Burden of Taxation.

(International Labor News Service)

Washington, Oct. 1.—President William Green of the American Federation of Labor has issued the following statement regarding the propaganda being spread broadcast in favor of relieving the well-to-do from taxation and placing the burden upon those least able to bear it:

"The American Federation of Labor is opposed to the imposition of a sales tax.

"It will exercise all influence at its command to prevent the enactment of sales tax legislation.

"It is unfair and unjust that a tax of this kind should be imposed upon the masses of the people, particularly at a time when it is impossible for them to bear any additional burdens of taxation.

"The theory upon which our tax structure has been erected provides for the imposition of taxes upon the wealth of the nation and upon those who are best able to pay.

Rich Should Pay Most.

"The ability to pay taxes rather than the opportunity to collect should govern our legislative bodies in the enactment of tax legislation.

"The cost of government should rest more heavily upon those who receive the greatest benefits, upon accumulated wealth, upon accumulated earnings and those whose earnings and incomes are inadequate to maintain an American standard of living should be protected from the imposition of taxation of this character.

"The sales tax is in contradiction to this theory because in operation it would collect from the poor and the unfortunate, those who are unable to pay and who ought to be relieved, so far as possible, from any burden of additional taxation.

Convention to Act on Plan.

"The convention of the American Federation of Labor which will meet on Oct. 5 will deal very directly and concretely with the proposal to impose a sales tax. It is my opinion that the officers and delegates in attendance at this convention, representing many millions of working men and women, will, in a most positive way, adopt a declaration in opposition to the enactment of any form of sales tax legislation.

"The bold proposals recently made by influential members of the United States senate in favor of the enactment of sales tax legislation ought to awaken the masses of the people to the seriousness of the situation.

"Unless an aroused public opinion makes itself felt the sponsors of this sales tax legislation will exercise all efforts at their command to force the enactment of this legislation at the next session of congress. Labor regards it as a duty and an obligation to oppose most strenuously the enactment of sales tax legislation."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

STARVATION PRICES RULE IN BIG TOBACCO MARKETS

Wealthy Corporations Pay Less Than Cost of Production for Season's Crop, Spreading Gloom and Dismay Among Farmers of Eastern North Carolina, to Whom Low Prices Mean Hunger and Deprivation.

(By Staff Correspondent.)

Wilson, N. C., Sept. 30.—The giant tobacco corporations have answered the crying appeal of this critical year 1931 with starvation prices for the golden weed. Price averages on most of the seventeen markets in the bright belt during the opening week were $1 to $2 a hundredweight lower than the prices that prevailed during the opening week of the market last year.

More than 3,000 eastern Carolina farmers flocked here for the opening day. Many of them brought their entire families along, and the world's largest tobacco market took on a holiday appearance hours before the opening bidding on the nine warehouse floors.

Hopes Run High.

The men congregated in little groups and eagerly discussed the prospects for better prices, prices that would leave something over after the time merchant and the banker and the landlord had gotten theirs. Their hopes were high, for Clay Williams, new president of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company of Winston-Salem, had expressed a pious hope that prices would be considerably higher than last year. The Reynolds concern buys heavily on the bright belt markets.

The women folks and the younguns, quite evidently dolled out in their Sunday-go-to-meeting best fixings, window shopped and built air castles and dreamed dreams. They picked out just what they would buy when the crop was sold on the floor of the warehouses that morning—for prices were bound to be good this year.

Prices Stay Low.

The market opened and the auctioneers began their unholy lingoes that remind a mere spectator of the incantations of an oriental priest. Prices opened low. Prices remained low. They ended the day 17 cents higher than last year. But even so, prices paid on the floors here were several cents a pound less than the actual cost of raising the golden leaf that has become a brazen curse to eastern Carolina farmers.

Agriculturists have proven that it costs a minimum of $10 a hundredweight to raise the weed. During the first day of this season's market, 503,526 pounds of tobacco were sold on the floors of the nine warehouses at an average of $7.82. Last year, the opening day saw local sales amount to 490,496 pounds at an average of $7.65.

Prices Spell Tragedy.

Starvation prices on the tobacco market spell tragedy in eastern Carolina. Starvation prices for the weed mean hunger and debt on eastern farms. Starvation prices to the grower mean increasing millions in profits for the giant tobacco corporations. The Reynolds company cleared $34,000,000 last year out of low prices to the growers. It ought to clear more next year, for this year's prices are lower than those of 1930.

The market here is not even typical of the bright belt as a whole. It is about the best in the bright belt, which produces 60 per cent of the state's tobacco crop.

Sales and Prices.

The sales and average price per hundredweight on the principal markets the opening week were as follows:

Wilson, 1,731,574 pounds, at $8.25; Greenville, 1,480,832 pounds at $7.34; Goldsboro, 368,016 pounds at $7.61; Kinston, 1,514,718 pounds at $7.98; Williamston, 380,523 pounds at $6.54; and Robersonville, 435,025 pounds at $6.39.

Starvation prices on the bright belt tobacco markets prevail in this critical year of 1931. Starvation prices mean hunger and suffering to thousands of people. Starvation prices amass excessive profits for the soulless tobacco corporations.

Henderson's Career In Labor Movement

London, Eng.—Arthur Henderson, the new leader of the labor party in the house of commons, has been connected with the British labor movement either as a worker in the factory or a labor official all his life.

He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1863. His parents were shopkeepers. His school education was very brief. At 9 years of age he began his apprenticeship as an iron molder and is still a member of the union. Until he was 30 he earned his living at his trade.

In 1903, along with Keir Hardie and Will Crooks, he was elected to the house of commons as a member of the labor representation committee, the forerunner of the labor party. He was appointed paymaster-general and labor adviser to the British government in 1916, and was a member of the government mission to Russia in 1917. In 1926, he was elected president of the labor and socialist international. He served as home secretary of the first labor government in 1924, and as secretary of foreign affairs in the second labor government which took office in 1929, and served in that capacity until the new national government was formed in August, 1931.

Henderson received his training as an orator as a lay preacher in the Wesleyan Methodist church, and has always been a deeply religious man. He is a non-smoker and a non-drinker. One of his greatest objectives is for world peace, which has been strengthened through the death of his eldest son at the battle of the Somme.

His son Arthur is a lawyer, a member of the labor party legal advisory committee, a lecturer in industrial law at Ruskin college, Oxford, and the author of a standard book on "Trade Unions and Law," published in 1927.

"Efficiency" Motion Study for Clerks

Washington. — Secretary Lamont's department of commerce is educating retail grocery merchants in the art of increasing the number of unemployed by the skillful application of the Taylor system of motion study to retail clerks.

In a detailed description of "lost motion" and "unnecessary steps" which the department's efficiency experts discovered in its time study of clerks in retail grocery stores, the department says that "utilization of labor efficiency is the prime essential of expense reduction."

The experts found the time spent by the average clerk in securing an item from stock ranged from 30 to 90 seconds. They claim this is altogether too long and should be reduced.

The commerce department urges retail merchants to study the activities of their clerks to ascertain lost motion, unnecessary steps, and similar inefficient methods of work, and declares their elimination will make available a considerable period of time for new productive activities.

The department does not recommend that retail grocers reduce the work week from six days to five to keep at work the clerks who have corrected their lost motions and in that way enable the employers to operate their stores with a smaller number of clerks if the regular work week continues after the time study labor displacers have finished their job.

British Workers Want Jobs, Not Doles, Union Official Declares

Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, Sept. 25.—"We had a big row in parliament about a new unemployment bill called the anomalies bill," says John Hill, general secretary of the United Society of Boilermakers and Iron Shipbuilders, in the official journal of the society. "This bill sets up a board to examine doubtful claims for unemployment benefit.

"An unholy alliance of tories and their 'press' lords, backed by employers' organizations, have filled the air with wails about the wicked and fraudulent workers, who, rather than do honest work, prefer to rob the state by drawing doles under false pretenses.

"I am one of the Trades Union Congress General Council which agreed to the general principles of the anomalies bill, and after all that has been said against the bill, which is now an act, I am satisfied that I did the right thing. There is more honesty and virtue amongst my class than there is amongst our exploiters, but there are a few black sheep in every flock.

"I would be neglecting my duty if I gave benefits to members of our organization who are out of benefit. Equally, I would be a bad citizen if I, knowingly, gave state money to an imposter.

"Given decent conditions of employment, there is not one per cent of our registered unemployed who would not prefer to earn their living rather than live on doles or charity.

"If the anomalies act investigates and proves this, it will give the lie to the wicked insults which are hurled at the heads of our unfortunate brothers, who, like the laborers of old, 'stand about all the day idle because no man hath hired them.'

"But the anomalies act is only a sop to Cerebus. It is given to save the unemployed from further starvation and possible revolution. It is no cure. There is only one cure for unemployment, and that is to give men work.

"The present captains of industry can neither feed nor employ the citizens. It is now the duty of the state to provide for the twenty per cent of the workers who are now the surplus of capitalism. This is already acknowledged by all political parties, who have each put acts on the statute book for insurance or relief.

"The problem of unemployment has grown too big and too costly to be cured by relief or insurance in idleness. The demoralization of present methods condemns them.

"Let us grasp the truth of this—work, not doles. Let us agitate, educate and organize a demand for the opportunity for all to earn their daily bread."

German Labor Minister Opposes Wage Cuts; Outlines Idle Relief

Frankfort-on-Main, Germany, Sept. 25.—"I emphatically reject the viewpoint which regards an attack on wages as the panacea for recovery of German economy," Adam Stegerwald, German minister of labor, told the General Trades Union Congress in a speech outlining the attitude of the German government toward various industrial questions affecting the workers.

"Abandonment of compulsory arbitration and conciliation in labor disputes," he added, "is likewise out of the question, with no statutory change in that direction contemplated."

He said the grave problem is the continued depletion of the social insurance fund, which makes it questionable whether this, together with an emergency tax, can carry the unemployed through the winter. But he assured the congress that as long as the present government is in office "the utmost possible will be done for the workless and the core of the German social insurance scheme will be maintained."

On government measures for relief of the unemployed, the minister said: "I calculate that the reich and the communes will have to provide 2,000,000,000 marks ($480,000,000) between now and the end of March. Of that amount 500,000,000 will go for rent and 80 per cent of the remainder for food and coal.

"Now the consumer often pays double what is received by the producer. This practice cannot be kept up next winter in respect to the workless, for whom arrangements must be made enabling them to procure daily necessities at reduced prices."

Special winter measures under consideration by the government, Herr Stegerwald said, include reduction in working hours as far as possible without damaging production of exports; periodic interchange of employed workers and the workless to distribute the burden of unemployment more evenly and so far as it can be done without reducing efficiency or increasing insurance costs; installation of kitchens in the larger towns, and investigating to what extent payment in kind could be introduced.

The congress closed with a ringing declaration by Chairman Brandes that the proceedings were an indictment of the capitalist system and the leaders responsible for that system.

The congress has 5,000,000 members.

Maintenance-of-Way Union Holds Pay Scales, Despite Long Slump

(International Labor News Service)

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 1.—In his address to the annual convention of the Brotherhood of Maintenance-of-Way Employes, President F. H. Fljozdal said:

"This is the first time in the history of this brotherhood that a business depression has hit Canada and the United States this hard and lasted this long without our craft being faced with reduced opportunities to work and many more thrown out of work entirely, but up to this date no general demands for reductions in the basic rates of pay have been made.

"By practicing economy wherever possible we have been able to place the brotherhood on a sounder financial basis than it has been for years.

"The vigor and militancy of the brotherhood was never better demonstrated than in its successful contests with seven dual organizations, one of which is in Canada. The six in the United States were completely routed and have been disbanded. The one in Canada is weaker than it had been."

CONTRACTOR JAILED FOR $56 WAGE DEBT

Atlantic City, N. J.—Recorder Joseph Altman sentenced Albert Shore, a sub-contractor, to five days in jail for refusing to pay a $50 fine for non-payment of $56 wages to Joseph Dillon, a mechanic. Shore presented the plea of financial inability. Altman's action was buttressed with an opinion by Atty.-Gen. Stevens. The charges against Shore were brought by a representative of the state department of labor.

This is said to be the first time a man has been sent to jail here for non-payment of his debts.

PINCHOT TO SUMMON SPECIAL JOBLESS SESSION

Harrisburg, Pa.—Gov. Pinchot announced that he would call a special session of the Pennsylvania legislature before the end of the year to act on the unemployment problem. He said he would recommend the issuance of long-term unemployment relief bonds amounting to from ten to twenty million dollars, depending upon the needs of the jobless. The bonds would be sold immediately so that relief funds would be available this winter.

WAGE INCREASE FOR WOMEN.

A measure enacted this year by the Massachusetts legislature increases the rate of wages for women employed as cleaners in the state house from 50 cents an hour to 54½ cents an hour or a weekly rate of $18 for 33 hours, with 55 cents an hour for overtime.

COAL MINERS OPPOSE REDUCED UNION DUES

Hazleton, Pa.—The boards of Districts Nos. 1, 7 and 9 of the United Mine Workers of America rejected a proposal advanced in the recent Scranton convention of District No. 1 by which the amount of dues paid to the international union would be reduced.

The proposal called for the international share of the monthly payment of $1 to be made 40 cents instead of 50 cents. The men from Districts Nos. 7 and 9 maintained a United front against the proposal. It was held that the international union in its reorganization work in sections of the bituminous field requires all its usual income to cope with the situation.

HAVANA CAR STRIKE ENDS.

Striking motormen and conductors, who have tied up operation of the Hanava electric railways for the last six weeks, have compromised with the company and agreed to work on a flat 26 cents per hour basis. The Cuban government had threatened to operate the lines with non-union labor.

A special dispatch from San Francisco to the Washington Daily News says:

"A public statement by Warren K. Billings repudiating an alliance with Tom Mooney in their fight for freedom was regarded as an indication that Billings will seek a parole.

"The two men, convicted of complicity in the 1916 Preparedness day explosion and sentenced to life imprisonment, have protested their innocence and demanded pardons. Parole opportunities have been rejected because they would imply an admission of guilt.

"In the statement issued from Folsom prison, Billings said that because he 'conceded to the demands of Mooney and the others' he has become a nonentity in the case."

LAEMMLE CANCELS FILM COMPANY'S WAGE CUTS

New York.—The salary reductions affecting between 1,500 and 1,800 employes of the Universal Pictures corporation, which went into effect last May, were rescinded by Carl Laemmle, president of the company, who said he was restoring the wage rates because of increased sales and a feeling of confidence in the future.

The wage increases were said to average about 15 per cent in the home office in New York and in the California studios and foreign offices.

Mr. Laemmle is understood to be the first executive in the motion picture industry to restore former wage rates which were quite generally reduced some months ago.

CONGRESSMAN FAVORS FEDERAL 5-DAY WEEK

Boston, Mass.—"The five-day week is one of the means to combat the menace of the machine, which by 1940 will have displaced more than 6,000,000 workers," Representative John W. McCormack said here in an address favoring the five-day week for federal employes. He claimed that unless measures are taken to regulate it, labor-displacing machinery will destroy business itself.

PLANS PROVIDE FOR EMERGENCY RELIEF AS WELL AS FUTURE

Labor's Congress Opens Two-Weeks' Meeting at Vancouver.

Executive Council Report Flays Bankers, Assails Nuisance and Sales Taxes, Supports Employment Service, Frowns on Unemployment Insurance and Calls for Age Security.

Washington, Oct. 8.—WORK!

That is the supreme issue laid down by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report to the annual convention in Vancouver, made public upon the opening of the convention.

The right to work, upon terms and conditions of decency and with constant progress is labor's paramount issue, as laid down in this unusually voluminous report.

The council sets forth an immediate program for dealing with unemployment and sees down the road to the future with a separate long-range program.

Minimum Work Forces Demanded.

The immediate program demands assured employment for minimum work-forces and calls upon each of the nation's three million employers to at once add two workers per employer, to put six million at work.

Between its emergency and long-range programs, the council pours solid shot into the ranks of big bankers for their wage-cutting policies, takes a powerful wallop at the fallacy set up by some employers that wages must come down because living costs have come down and deals with a voluminous program of legislation. It speaks highly of the work done by the United States Employment service under John R. Alpine.

Long-Range Program.

The long-range program for stabilization of industry and elimination of unemployment is:

1—Calling of an economic conference by the president.

2—Establishment of a permanent national labor board, to study conditions and make facts public, to be representative in character and to give labor a place of equality with other divisions of the economic world.

3—Immediate five-day week and shorter work-day.

4—Maintenance of the wage-structure and of wage standards.

5—A guarantee that all now employed will be continued in employment and the spreading of work so that all may have some.

6—Prohibition of child labor.

7—Stabilization of industry, especially seasonal branches, by planning removal of peaks and valleys.

8—A more scientific planning of production to procure permanent balance.

Dry Act Change Asked.

The council calls for modification of the Volstead act and bitterly assails the sales tax. It strikes a bold note for organization of workers into trade unions, making rock-bottom fundamentals out of work and organization.

"The American people want work," says the council. "They demand work. They abhor charity and resent the imposition of the dole."

As to organization: "Only a union has the independence, the power and the authority to assume responsibility for keeping wage-earners' progress abreast social and economic progress."

In keeping with this philosophy —as old as the movement in this country—the council does not favor public unemployment insurance, though it records its support of old age security and plans introduction of proposed legislation looking toward that end.

"Lowest Bidder" Fallacy Hit.

Of particular importance to all building trades is the council's recommendation for legislation to abolish the "lowest bidder fallacy." Comptroller general's decisions would be overturned by the proposed legislation. McCarl has ruled that contracts for government work must go to "the lowest responsible bidder" and any bidder who can furnish a bond is, in his view, "responsible." The council wants legislation providing that contracts shall go to the "bidder whose bid, conforming to the specifications, will be most advantageous to the government, price and other factors considered."

PUBLIC WINS CONCESSION IN WAGE BATTLE

Postoffice Workers Given Increase After Unusual Newspaper Publicity.

Chattanooga daily newspapers, backed by organized labor, won a partial victory in the fight to have the minimum local wage scale paid common laborers on the job of wrecking buildings on the new postoffice site.

A Chicago concern which secured the contract initiated a wage scale of 15 cents per hour for a nine-hour day, but following publications indicating an aroused public sentiment the management has announced that an increase to 20 cents per hour and compliance with federal law respecting the eight-hour day will prevail in the future. Prevailing scale for common labor in Chattanooga is held by those best informed to be 25 cents per hour.

The concession was gained after a suggestion by a prominent local citizen, given first-page prominence by the afternoon paper, that the concern be boycotted in the proposed sale of material from the wrecked job.

The Times championed the cause of the laborers and contributed effective publicity to the campaign to force the Chicago concern to increase the pay scale on the project.

Fight Wage Cuts; Obtain 5-Day Week

Vancouver, B. C.—The five-day week and shorter work day to relieve unemployment, militant resistance to wage reductions, and a demand for increased real wages are the outstanding features of the annual report of James O'Connell and John P. Frey, president and secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor.

In regard to wage reductions, the report said:

"There are no moral, social or economic justifications for reduction in wages. Every attempt to reduce wages should be met by active organized opposition. The public should be made aware that efforts to reduce wages are the results of the employers' ignorance or indifference to economic facts or their incompetence in management, or greed, or a combination of the three."

The report charges that the dismissal of men over 40 years old and the setting up of an age limit of 40 or 45 in many industrial plants is largely due to the so-called welfare plans of some corporations and to group insurance, whose cost to the employer was said to be reduced in proportion to the youth of employes insured.

The report claims the business depression which began in 1929 was caused by the fact that while real wages had increased only 13 per cent between 1921 and 1929 the returns to industry increased 72 per cent, and the dividends paid to stockholders increased 265 per cent. These statistics, the report concludes, "make it evident that the division between the return to capital and the wages paid was so inequitable and uneconomically unsound that our producers suddenly discovered in 1929 that there was no longer a market for the goods they were endeavoring to sell."

Fifty Years of Labor Progress

(American Federation of Labor Executive Council's Report to the 1931 Convention)

Our report for this year features an account of the federation's stewardship after fifty years of service.

The purpose for which the federation was organized was to co-ordinate the policy making of trade unions and to promote the organization of workers in trade unions, in order that those human beings employed in the production processes of industry, commerce, and services might be in a position to have opportunities for better living.

The purpose and activities of the federation affect directly the lives and opportunities of over 2,500,000 wage earners and their dependents, and indirectly progress for 29,500,000 of the citizens of our nation.

This large group of citizens even when not identified with the organized labor movement very largely follows the leadership of the federation in work problems, and in emergencies looks to us for counsel.

Our record for fifty years shows that we have made progress in our efforts to secure recognition of wage earners' rights and in incorporating into public policy principles leading toward acceptance of workers' right to an opportunity to work.

We are in the formative period of a new age in which associated activity is the essential method of our various undertakings. In the preceding period when our primary need was to conquer the resources of our continent, property claims had a priority accorded by social sanction; in this period we are to define the rights and equities of the producers and to advance co-ordinated claims with priorities to none.

The spirit of co-ordinated activity is co-ordination—progress with the co-operation of all groups instead of progress against or at the expense of one or more groups; co-operation in economies and management instead of price cutting and disorganization of the market; co-ordinated efforts of all groups instead of specially privileged groups.

In our report on unemployment and the program we outline for dealing with it, we have been guided by basic principles that should underlie balanced progress.

We have further shown that these same principles underlie international relations.

The method of approaching all these various areas of relationships is the same—voluntary organization to conserve the value of individual initiative and to develop ordered control for groups and associations of groups, and to provide them with the necessary economic and political tools and opportunities.

We believe constructive progress can be made by facing the momentous problems before our nation with understanding of the changes taking place, guided by principles and not by formulas.

The central problem is how to produce goods adequate to supply the needs of all and distribute the income from production equitably among all engaged in its production, so that all shall have the use of the products of industries as the means for a good life in accordance with steadily progressing standards.

$36,697,979 Benefits Paid by Trade Unions

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 8.—Over thirty-six million dollars were paid in benefits by the standard national and international trade unions of the United States and Canada in 1930, according to the report of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to the annual convention of the federation.

The amounts disbursed for the various forms of benefit follow:

Sick	$ 3,649,703.15
Death	18,527,095.00
Unemployment	3,311,279.50
Old age	5,910,995.41
Disability	3,234,066.93
Miscellaneous	2,064,839.57
Total	$36,697,979.56

In 1928 the total benefits amounted to $32,818,924.54, and in 1929 reached $32,242,444.40.

"It is interesting to note," the council states, "that the expenditure of over $36,000,000 for 1930 in all forms of benefits represents an average payment of over $100,000 per day through the year. These figures present a striking example of the manner in which our trade union movement is meeting the needs and necessities of its members."

Rail Workers Demand Shorter Work Week

Cleveland, O.—Twenty-one railroad trade unions will ask the United States congress when it meets in December to enact legislation providing for a shorter work week for railroad employes as an unemployment relief plan.

D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, heads a special committee charged with making a national survey of railway labor conditions. The survey will be used as the basis for the details of the plan presented to congress.

"We have made no decision as to what effect shorter hours will have upon wages," Robinson said. "We wanted to thresh that matter out in joint session with the railroads. But they were unwilling to meet us, and so the wage question remains unsettled.

"All of the twenty-one railroad brotherhoods are agreed, however, that shorter working hours and a shorter working week are the only means by which unemployed railroad men can be put back to work."

Robertson estimated the number of unemployed members of the railroad brotherhoods at 350,000.

In 1916 congress enacted a law which gave the railroad workers the basic eight-hour day.

LAMONT URGED TO TAKE PRISON GOODS CENSUS

Washington.—Eleven important organizations interested in convict labor products urged Secretary of Commerce Lamont to include in future censuses of manufactures data regarding the production and distribution of institutional made goods.

The resolution adopted by the organizations states that "the facts in regard to institutional industries which are operated both for maintenance and production purposes and all allocation of prison labor are essential as an aid to finding a basis for the reorganization of prison industries of many states which will be necessary by the time the federal convict law becomes effective in January, 1934."

The organizations participating in the conference included the American Federation of Labor, and the national committee on prisons and prison labor. Edward F. McGrady represented the A. F. of L.

NOTICE!

Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council will meet Monday night at 7:30 o'clock, in regular session. All delegates are requested and expected to be present, as matters affecting every local union will come before the meeting for discussion.

Pay Tribute to Departed Brother

Branch 92, Glass Bottle Blowers Association, at its last regular meeting adopted the following tribute to the memory of Robert Elmer Carmin, who passed away recently at his home in Alton Park:

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom and mercy has deemed it wise to call unto Him our worthy and loyal member, Brother Robert Elmer Carmin; and,

Whereas, Brother Carmin has served Branch No. 92, G. B. B. A., officially for a number of years, his efficient and faithful performance of his duties makes it befitting that we record our appreciation of him. His genial manner and pleasant disposition endeared him to all who knew him; and,

Whereas, the sudden removal of such a life from our midst leaves a vacancy and shadow that will be deeply realized by all the members and friends of this organization and will prove a serious loss to the community, and realizing also the loss of a loving husband and an affectionate father; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of Branch No. 92, G. B. B. A., extend our sincere condolences and heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved widow and son, and we express hopes that even so great a loss may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well; and, be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Branch, a copy be given to the bereaved family, and that they be published in The Labor World.

SHARE OF RELIEF FUNDS FOR IDLE TRADE UNIONISTS

New York.—The Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York adopted a resolution designed to obtain a proportionate share of municipal and state unemployment appropriations for jobless members of labor unions. The council also urged that members of organized labor be included on all committees for the distribution of funds among the unemployed.

GIFFORD PLACES WOLL ON JOBLESS RELIEF GROUP

Washington.—Walter S. Gifford, director of the president's organization on unemployment relief, appointed Matthew Woll, third vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, a member of a committee to consider the federal public works program in relation to this winter's unemployment problem. The committee is headed by William C. Proctor, of Cincinnati, O.

TIMES EDITORIAL INTIMATES GREEN PLAYING POLITICS

Writer Taken to Task by Prominent Citizen.

Declares Editor of Morning Paper "Buries His Head in the Sand" and Ignores Grave Dangers That Confront the Nation—Stamps Green Man of Courage.

Under the heading, "Too Much Revolution Talk," the Times Wednesday morning published, editorially, a veiled insinuation that recent utterances by President William Green, of the American Federation, pointing out the dangers to American institutions in the present crisis, were made "for the purpose of spurring employers to greater efforts to create jobs and maintain wage levels." President Green is referred to as a "supposedly responsible" citizen, and the intimation is plain that Mr. Green does not know what he is talking about.

The editorial has been the cause for much comment and considerable resentment so far as it relates to the president of the American Federation of Labor, and The Labor World has been urged by many to publish an expression on the matter.

A communication received Wednesday from a leading citizen, who requested that his name be withheld, covers the situation quite satisfactorily from the standpoint of local trades unionists, and this paper is indebted to said leading citizen for expressing the viewpoint of many on the Times' outburst.

It follows:

Editor The Labor World:

Wednesday morning's Times contained an editorial attack on Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, which I for one believe is unjust and which calls for an answer. The Times' specious reasoning concerning the nation's crisis is also surprising, and that the editor of a daily newspaper should bury his head in the sand and dismiss the dangers that confront us now is indeed unfortunate.

Mr. Green is taken to task for solemnly warning against the tendency of the times to regard lightly the catastrophe which has forced millions into the ranks of the unemployed, and which has brought stark want and suffering to their families. His sincerity is by inference questioned, and it is intimated that he and scores of other national figures who have expressed opinions similar to his are "uninformed."

Which calls forth the question, "Who is uninformed? Who is excitable and hysterical? Who is taking the sane and sensible view of our difficulties?"

Who is the blind man but he who having eyes shuts them and will not see? Who is the fool but he who, ostrich-like, buries his head in the sand and says I am safe? Who is he who calls himself a patriot and will not do all in his power to meet the dangers of his country with courage and fortitude because, forsooth, his own personal possessions must be sacrificed to his brother's need?

Those who shut their minds to new thoughts and who harden their hearts to their neighbor's tribulations; those who say he is unpatriotic who has the vision to see our present world as it is and to cry out against the injustice which is everywhere apparent; who shut up their hearts to a brother's need, and who denounce those who endeavor to point a way out of our present difficulties, are but adding fuel to the flames and prolonging the return of prosperity and peace of mind for all our people.

Is William Green any less a statesman because he has the eye to see, the heart to feel and the courage to speak in behalf of the workers of America?

Today we need men of courage, of compassion and of prophetic minds—courage to take their places of leadership at whatever cost to themselves in public criticism or personal sacrifice; men whose hearts think

SAYS HUNGRY PEOPLE MUST BE FED OR SHOT

"Supposedly Responsible" Congressman Declares Situation Is Menacing.

Missoula, Mont., Oct. 8.—Congressman John M. Evans, in an appeal for support of a drive by the Red Cross for funds with which to relieve widespread suffering in Montana, declared that the state and country face one of the "most menacing situations in history."

"Last February," he said, "the senate voted $25,000,000 as a contribution to the Red Cross to feed hungry Americans. Mr. Hoover refused to accept a contribution from the federal treasury, saying it would be a 'dole' and would undermine the stamina and manhood of the American people.

"This winter, if it is necessary to feed starving people, we will vote money out of the treasury, or Mr. Hoover will take money out of the treasury to pay soldiers to shoot down the people.

"And whenever they begin to shoot down American citizens because they are hungry, some future poet or historian will write the story of the 'shot that rang around the world.'"

U. S. Job Service Reaches All States

Vancouver, B. C.—The employment service of the U. S. department of labor is given the unqualified support of the executive council of the American Federattion of Labor in its report to the federation's annual convention.

The last congress appropriated around $500,000 to build up the service, and Secretary of Labor Doak appointed John R. Alpine, a former member of the executive council, to develop it into a nation-wide employment system. There are now employment agencies with subordinate branches in every state.

The Executive Council expresses the opinion "that this action will mark the beginning of the organization and establishment of a national employment system which will be serviceable and helpful in a most satisfactory way to every state and to every community. We are firmly of the opinion that the government should render service of this kind and that all help possible should be extended to the unemployed free of cost to secure employment and to avail themselves of every opportunity to secure profitable and satisfactory employment.

"We urge national and international unions, state federations of labor and city central bodies to avail themselves of every opportunity presented by the national employment service to secure work for the unemployed, and to co-operate in every possible way with the United States employment service system and with the state employment agencies created by this national employment organization under the direction of the department of labor."

OLANDER MADE MEMBER OF ILL. OLD AGE COMMISSION

Springfield, Ill.—Gov. Louis L. Emmerson appointed Victor A. Olander, secretary of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, a member of the commission authorized by the last general assembly for the purpose of conducting a study of poverty and dependency in old age. The commission consists of seven members, headed by Senator Charles H. Thompson, of Harrisburg.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter 1
PART III : THE THOUGHT TREND OF JESUS' MIND

2. Luxury and Want. (Continued from last week.) There is a distinct revelation of the thought trend of Jesus' mind contained in the fact that He associated freely with both the rich and poor and chose His disciples, not from any one class of people, but called them regardless of their worldly possessions. He called individuals and they were always chosen not because they represented any one social level but to do a work. That work was to follow Him, learn of Him and carry on His labors after what He knew was His inevitable end.

WM. L. MOSS

Jesus would not select His disciples from only one class of people for the simple reason that He knew no one class possessed all the virtues and the other class none. Both luxury and want are equally bad. Both involve undue temptations. Both are physically hazardous. Having been reared in a home neither rich nor poor, Jesus was in a position to realize this and did not have his social prejudices to fight down in order to believe it. He knew that luxury interferes with one being intimate with his fellowmen and that poverty means either absolutely no worthwhile purpose in life, or if not that it can only mean one other thing, physical unfitness to take part in the work of the world because of chronic fatigue or undernourishment brought about because of a lack of food.

3. A Keen Observer. In spite of the fact that Jesus sought His strength in solitude and prayer, setting thereby the example for all of us, He looked out upon life and saw it through the eyes of a poet. No poet has surpassed Him in voicing a sense of the joy of living nor in describing the beauty existent in the world, a beauty all too often overlooked by mankind. When Jesus spoke of the lilies of the field being clothed with glory greater even than Solomon's the world checked His statement with the mark of approval, declaring it also the best of its kind ever made. His defense of the woman taken in adultery brought before Him by her equally but secretly guilty accusers has drawn from the world unbounded praise. His simple yet perfect narration of the story of the Good Samaritan is quoted by the followers of every religion. His unyielding belief in the redemptive qualities of the human soul has both astounded and won the admiration of the world. (To Be Continued.)

ILL. PREVAILING WAGE LAW UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Springfield, Ill. — The prevailing rate of wage law enacted by the 1931 legislature is unconstitutional and void, according to a decision by Judge Charles G. Briggle in the circuit court here. The decision was rendered in an action brought by Harry A. Mayhew against Oscar Nelson, state auditor.

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

WILL WE FIND A WAY?

The present management of business in the United States under the policy which it has followed, and which it now proposes to follow, cannot possibly employ all the men and women who as American citizens are entitled to an opportunity to earn an honest living.

For the last ten years this has been the case.

Neither the United States Chamber of Commerce, the great banks, the trade associations, the government, nor any of the political parties has proposed any program looking to the systematic employment of the entire people of this country.

Opportunity was to be found, fifty years ago, out on the prairies and in the mountains and valleys of the great west. Any man could go and take up his own home, and could always find a living.

The prairies are preempted. The mines have been filed upon—and largely gathered in by the corporations. For millions of people—for a constant percentage of the population—for a certain number of Americans—it can only be said: "They are not wanted." Who these may be, is determined by the whims of chance and accident. Some of them are bankers now; some are storekeepers; some are mechanics; and many are farmers. Nobody knows just who they are. But their number can be estimated, in terms of a rising index number.

Every improvement in the efficiency of machinery, for farm or factory, increases their number; and every new engineering wrinkle or management device adds to their multitude. But who they may be—only God knows, and He has not told anybody yet.

"But we will get past this depression," you say.

In the wage cuts and machine improvements, the next depression has already begun.

The depth to which depression has struck in many places almost passes relief. Few stories more poignant, more illustrative of the human suffering, caused by this business and industrial collapse have been told than one brought from Johnston City, Ill., by the United Press.

Johnston City is a coal mining town. In the little Washington Avenue Baptist church devout citizens gathered to pray for the end of the depression. Ninety per cent of the miners of the town are idle.

Here to this little church came the miners and their wives, in exemplification of their faith, as if to a place of last resort, a haven, a refuge. "The majority of my people are poor, miserably poor," said the pastor to a reporter, "through no fault of their own."

The pastor prayed and tears coursed down his cheeks. There were many others who wept—wept at the sight of human misery and helplessness. They offered prayer, they sang "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and then they went out to wait—for they can only wait. There is nothing else for these fathers and mothers to do. What greater tragedy can there be?

THE HYPOCRISY OF WAGE CUTTERS

The hypocrisy of wage cutters and the fallacy of their arguments were well illustrated in their opinions on the relation of wage-rate reductions for iron and steel workers to prices for steel products expressed before and after the United States Steel Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and smaller steel concerns actually reduced wages.

For weeks prior to the wage cut writers in iron and steel trade journals carried on a persistent propaganda in favor of the reduction.

Their argument ran like this:

Prices of iron and steel products were too high to secure maximum consumption. Iron and steel manufacturers had not made price reductions proportional to those made by manufacturers of other commodities. Why? Because the wage rates of the iron and steel workers were too high.

It is true, they said, that the weekly earnings of the iron and steel workers had been reduced by part-time employment, but when they did work they were paid the same unit wage per piece or per hour or per day as formerly. Consequently, the steel companies had just as high a direct labor cost as when the depression started two years ago.

This alleged high labor cost, the wage cut propagandists said, prevented the steel manufacturers from making large reductions in the price of iron and steel products and thus reduced trade and held down employment.

This argument was not limited to the iron and steel trade journals. It was repeated by financial writers in metropolitan papers with wage cut orientations, and appeared in many news articles emanating from Wall Street sources for weeks before the steel corporations cut wages ten per cent.

But when the wage cut was finally announced, a revolutionary change took place in the wage cutters' interpretation of the relation between wage reductions and prices for iron and steel products. They suddenly discovered that reduced wages for steel workers had no relation whatever to reduced prices for the commodities which the iron and steel workers make.

A few of these changes of opinion follow:

The Iron Age:

Steel producers see no point in the suggestion that the saving from wage cuts be passed on to buyers.

The Wall Street Journal:

Investigation in the industry indicates that it is the view among leaders that steel prices should be maintained.

New York Times (special from Pittsburgh):

Whatever saving in operating costs the steel companies obtain by the ten per cent wage reduction effective October 1 will be retained by them as an offset to losses, according to authoritative opinion in the steel industry. Nothing is further from their plans, it is said, than any outright reduction in prices or any shading from the levels that have been well maintained in the last three months.

New York Times (special from Chicago):

The contention is that with production around 30 per cent of capacity in this district price reductions cannot be made despite the lowering of wages.

Philadelphia Public Ledger (special from Pittsburgh):

There is no thought in the steel trade that steel prices will suffer a particle by reason of this wage reduction. It would be quite impossible to figure out the influence on different finished steel products, as they involve varying amounts of labor. Sellers have been standing firm on their prices and will continue to do so, while it is improbable that many buyers will even attempt to raise an issue.

Of course the real reason for the wage cut was to transfer the money saved in wages to the stockholders in dividends. But telling the truth before the cut would have brought forth too much public opposition. Therefore the wage cutters camouflaged their real objective with their psychological dope about the wage reduction being reflected in reduced prices for steel products.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

There will be more cynics this winter, as well as more hungry men and women, because hungry men and women are likely to grow cynical.

A valued correspondent writes, commenting upon the decision of the Presbyterians not to ask the president to set aside a day for prayer to end depression.

This correspondent recalls the remark of one hungry man to a minister: "You can't fry a prayer."

The same correspondent recalls that the rector of a wealthy New York parish has written a prayer to be printed and widely distributed—a prayer for relief from unemployment. It is described as a well-worded, pleasant and genteel supplication. Within voice range of the spot where it was written, this correspondent says, a dozen men have killed themselves in despair over bankruptcy, while within the shadow of the church each cold winter's day brings "the dolorous shuffle of ill-shod feet in the lock-step of that tragic commentary of this civilization—the breadline."

There will be more cynics this winter. They will think of their hunger and of the golden hoards of "surplus" wheat and corn—of the great dividends and of the growing death rate of babies.

Perhaps it is one of the hopeful things about the human race that it pokes fun at those who serve as the spokesmen for charity and it does so even in the most pious places. Basically this is not out of disrespect for piety, but out of a deep hatred for charity.

About the only way in which an originally normal person can be made to like charity is to force him to accept charity until he has become debased by its baleful influence, until he has lost hope of self-respect, until normal ambition has been killed by continuous denial.

The dole has given Englishmen a chance to know how long it takes to knock the pride out of men—to get them to like charity and to hate the effort of self-support.

Ambition dies hard enough in most, and so for a majority the process is long. But for a large minority the process is not long. "What's the use?" is the broken lament of some. With others the tide of resentment comes to rule.

The only persons really happy about growing misery are the revolutionists.

And the fires of revolution are fed by the growing despair and cynicism of multitudes.

Perhaps out of this depression great gain will come. Certainly, taking the present as a gauge, any return of normal conditions would find wage-earners better off than in 1929, because up to this time the great employers have not been able to force labor into a state of absolute deflation.

But the greater gain will be in an aroused social conscience. That is something more permanent than dollars, more permanent than scales, more permanent than the recurring cycles.

The proposal of Gerard Swope, one-legged though it is, faulty though it is, contains an admission of responsibility that could have come from no magnate of a decade ago.

We face a winter of tragedy. But the future may be brightened somewhat by the thought that, even though cynicism gains this winter, the knowledge of fundamental weaknesses in our social system grows and with it a sense of responsibility develops. Unless our structure goes to pieces under this strain it will emerge, by all today's signs, a better and a sounder structure. But the emerging had better not be too long delayed.

Dividends vs. Food!

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

When the United States Steel corporation and other steel companies simultaneously slashed wages 10 per cent, a self-evident co-operative action among the steel manufacturers, their excuse for such an act was that the cut in the workers' earnings had to be made for the purpose of reducing steel prices to a level that would attract customers.

But it is noticed no parallel reduction in the price of steel has been announced since the wage cut. Nor has the production of steel been reduced, although the steel manufacturers were told before the wage cut that steel prices must drop 19 per cent and the wages of workers in every industry, including the steel plants, must remain where they are before a demand for steel will reach a satisfactory volume.

It is by lower prices that demand for any product is stimulated. Therefore the recent wage cut by the steel moguls is bound to react in every other direction except in that of the steel market!

The truth of the matter is, the recent wage cut by the steel magnates was the way they figured would best safeguard the present high level of dividend payments, a level established during more prosperous but long since gone times throughout the country.

Lower wages only aggravate the financial stricture. It's like taking a nickel from a man who has only a nickel between himself and starvation. Reducing dividends is never such a calamitous matter. When you take a few dollars in dividends from stockholders who have thousands in reserve they still have left even more than they need to live on.

Executive Council Demands Abolition of Labor Injunctions

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 8.—The slavery imposed on workers by injunction in labor disputes is severely arraigned by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report to the annual convention of the federation, and legislation demanded to take from judges the power they now exercise to use injunctions to deprive workers of their constitutional rights and trade unions of their proper functioning power.

"Since the enactment of the Sherman anti-trust law," the council says, "most of the injunctions have been based upon an alleged interference with interstate commerce.

"The enactment of the Clayton law—intended to limit and restrict injunctions in labor disputes—has only encouraged the issuance of an increasing number of injunctions as well as the severity of limitations and restrictions imposed on labor.

"We are thus confronted with a remarkable and most intolerable situation, one that with the recognition of the right of workers to unite for their mutual protection and advancement, we find the functioning power of trade unions constantly and progressively limited and restricted, and to the point that if all injunctions issued were literally enforced hundreds of thousands of wage-earners would be subject to 'contempt' charges and possible jail penalties, and if like restrictions were generally imposed on all wage-earners, there would be no effective trade union movement in the United States.

"It is indeed a sad and deplorable commentary upon the legislative branch of the government in that it fails speedily and effectively to remedy this situation. Certainly organized labor is not alone in demanding redress and freedom from the chains that are enslaving them to industry and industrial masters. The demand for freedom of workers to unite and to function effectively in the economic as well as upon the political field is being re-echoed on every hand.

"Labor in seeking equal opportunities to unite, freely and fully accorded to all other citizens and groups of citizens, is not asking for special privileges. Indeed, under present legislation and reported decisions wage-earners are in a subservient position, and no democracy can long survive that will not accord its wage-earners equal rights and equal opportunities with all other citizens."

To remedy this intolerable situation the Executive Council has had prepared an anti-injunction bill to be introduced into the coming session of congress, which meets in December, and urges the organized labor movement to use all its influence to secure the prompt enactment of the bill into law.

Government Control of Coal Industry Is Urged by Council

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 8.—Federal legislation classifying coal as a public utility and creating a federal coal commission to regulate the industry on the basis of its interstate characteristics is recommended by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report to the annual convention of the federation.

A bill embodying this principle prepared by the United Mine Workers of America is indorsed by the council.

"The whole scheme of the bill," the council says, "is to end ruthless, cut-throat competition, the wasting of our natural resources, and the wanton depletion of our special purpose coals, which, when exhausted by unnecessary and unwarranted use, for steam power production, will seriously cripple our future by-product, steel, foundry, dye and various other manufacturing enterprises.

"The benefits to be derived by the miners after the bill's passage will still be a matter of conference and bargaining through the various provisions of the measure which nullify the yellow dog contract and remove the coal companies from their buttressed positions behind the protective provisions of federal and state injunctions. Its enactment will enable the mine workers to exercise their constitutional rights of free speech and assembly and their inherent right to affiliate with a trade union for the mutual betterment of all employed in bituminous coal mining.

"The Executive Council has kept closely in touch with all the developments which have taken place in the bituminous coal industry and has given profound consideration to its difficult problems and to the numerous remedies which have been proposed, looking to a solution. We are convinced that the primary requirements necessary to the stabilization of the bituminous coal industry are a thorough and complete organization of the men employed in the industry, the establishment of contractural relations between employers and employes through the process of collective bargaining, and the adoption of a just, equitable and fair wage scale which will in operation provide for a universal labor cost in coal production.

"The Executive Council expresses its great disappointment over the failure of the president of the United States to call a conference of representative miners and operators for the purpose of giving national consideration to the economic, social and industrial problems which affect the bituminous coal industry."

Seven Billion Dollar Reconstruction Bond Issue Urged for Jobless Relief

New York, Sept. 17.—A reconstruction bond issue of seven billion dollars which it is alleged would give work to 5,000,000 at an expenditure of $1,500 per man for labor and materials, is advocated by the Engineering News-Record, an organ of the construction interests.

The paper urges its public works program conceived as a national emergency as a substitute for private charity. It is claimed that road work alone would make jobs for all the unemployed if no other source of work were at hand. More than 2,000,000 miles of road still require improvement from the dirt stage. Reasonable modernization of but half or a third of that mileage within one year would employ every jobless worker, it is contended.

The editorial recalls the heights to which the people climbed during the war emergency in 1917 and 1918 "in carrying out in a few months a vast building and equipment program and putting the county to work for national purposes," and expresses the belief that a similar program could be realized now if society could be mobilized into making war on unemployment with the same vigor that was used in 1917 to make war on Germany.

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR EXECUTIVE COUNCIL PRESENTS EMERGENCY UNEMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 8.—The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor predicts an army of at least 7,000,000 unemployed persons this winter in its report to the annual convention of the federation.

To meet this crisis the council recommends the following emergency employment program:

Maintain wages.

Shorten work hours.

Assure employment to minimum work forces.

Each employer to take on additional workers.

Create work through public building.

Strengthen employment agencies.

Keep young persons in school to prevent their taking jobs from older men and women.

Preference for workers with dependents.

Financial relief from public and private funds.

Wages constitute the workers' buying power. This buying power, the council says, "must be maintained so that demand for goods will be kept up and employment may not fall to any lower levels. It is essential to maintain living standards, for wage levels recover slowly."

"Work-hours should be shortened," the council asserts, "to divide the available work among all workers. We estimate that if unemployment and part time increase as much this winter as they do in normal years, there will be approximately thirty-six hours' work a week for all wage-earners in the United States. The universal establishment of the five-day week would keep the nation's wage-earners at work, making producers and consumers."

In urging employers to assure employment to minimum work forces from November to April, the council declares that if all employers would do this "some 20,000,000 wage-earners could plan their purchases ahead with confidence for six months." The council estimates that "the increased spending resulting from employment assurance, if all employers co-operated, would amount to well over one billion dollars. This is enough to make a decided impression on the trend of industrial production."

On the basis of there being about 3,000,000 employers in the United States, excluding farmers, the council points out that "if all employers were to take on an average of two workers each, all but 1,000,000 of the unemployed would be given work." The council therefore declares that it is the duty of every employer to give work to additional employes at least part of the time. To adjust the number of extra workers to both small and large concerns, the council recommends that "industries and employers should be given quotas of jobs to be furnished, according to their ability to provide work. The allocation of these quotas should be the task of a central board, representing the government and all industrial groups."

In the extension of public works, the council sees a great opportunity for creating work for at least 100,000 jobless during the coming winter, and urges that an enlarged program of constructive public improvements of lasting benefit to the people should be undertaken. The council says the public works should include locally the building of schools, creation of parks and playgrounds, construction of libraries, improvement and extension of streets, sewage and water supply systems. National and state projects would include road building, extension of inland waterways, extension and improvement of national parks, reforestation projects, flood control and irrigation.

"Efficient employment bureaus," the council says, "will be necessary to make any of this work providing program possible. Attention should be concentrated on building up the present system of employment bureaus and supplementing it where necessary."

On the question of young workers the council urges that "every effort be made to keep boys and girls in their teens in school. Not only will their efforts to secure work take jobs from older men and women, but they will find it exceedingly difficult to get work. They will risk wasting their time in demoralizing idleness, where it might be spent in increasing their ability for future work."

The council believes that during the unemployment emergency jobs should preferably be given to workers with dependents to maintain.

The council expresses its belief that during the unemployment crisis limitations should be placed on the employment of married women. "Married women have continued in their trades and callings even when there was no economic necessity," the council says. "Heads of families may be jobless while two breadwinners in other families have positions. Unless these married women hold key positions or have an investment in a career for themselves, we believe that in emergencies they should give way to heads of families. Married women whose husbands have permanent positions which carry reasonable incomes should be discriminated against in the hiring of employes, at least until we are well out of this business depression."

"Because it is never possible to put any program into universal effect," the council concludes, "we cannot expect to provide work for all the unemployed. Without question there will be millions this coming winter who will have to depend on charity to exist. Ample funds should be provided in every community, both from private and municipal sources. These funds should be used to furnish work rather than relief without work wherever possible.

"The collection and administration of funds for relief purposes is of the utmost importance to labor, and labor, with other groups, should be represented on boards responsible for this work."

TIMES EDITORIAL

not in terms of property and wealth, but in the suffering of little children, of the hardships of those sterling mothers who have given us the men who have built our nation—men of toil whose hardened hands and aching muscles have created the wealth that has made our nation the envy of other countries.

Through our American form of government liberty, equality and justice is guaranteed to all, yet we see our courts subservient to the demands of property rights above human rights. The human values in our present system of society have become negligible quantities.

Mr. Josephus Daniels, whose patriotism none can question and whose ability has been proven, speaking before the Current Topics club, of Rocky Mount, N. C., on Monday, declared that we have all of the evils of medieval feudalism and none of its benefits. If men of unquestioned American ideals, and who are of unquestioned American descent, recognize that the labor man today is practically reduced to the position of a serf, it becomes those in editorial positions, in places of authority and influence, to meet the charges that are being brought against our present industrial system—charges that must be met with open minds, with hearts that have the compassion of brother for brother, man for man and citizen for citizen.

This is no time to cry "Peace," when there is no peace. We see men whose backs are bowed with toil in the effort to accumulate a home and a roof to shelter their loved ones stripped of their life savings by foreclosures brought about by unemployment. We see the small merchant who through toiling long hours over a period of years has built up a business from which he hoped to acquire a competence for old age forced into bankruptcy through unemployment of those whom he sought to serve through his business. We see the small banks, created to serve our smaller communities and our small business men, forced to close their doors through unemployment of those who had been their depositors.

Is Mr. Green unpatriotic because he calls upon the heads of our large manufacturing concerns, of our large financial institutions and of our government to take steps to correct conditions which have destroyed the foundations upon which happy homes, prosperous communities and the wealth of the nation have been builded and which have made us a contented people?

Is Mr. Green "excitable and hysterical" when he inveighs against the tendency of those in high places to advise the eating of cake when the masses plead for bread? Is he "uninformed" when he solemnly declares that 20,000,000 people will not supinely starve to death in a land of plenty? Is the editorial writer of the Chattanooga Times so steeped in insincerity that he is unable to recognize honesty and sincerity in the solemn appeals of a national leader whose statesmanship and whose Americanism cannot be questioned?

Of course, the oracular utterances of our morning paper's editorial writer are of no consequence nationally, but local working men will resent this veiled insinuation that President Green is "playing politics" in the present crisis, and will beg leave to disagree with the Times in its inference that starvation for one out of every five is not a dangerous test for a people which has an inherent love for its government and its institutions.

I would suggest that the Times editorial writer, each day before he begins his toil, bring out his trusty typewriter and write, twenty times, the following:

"A HUNGRY MAN IN A LAND OF PLENTY IS A MENACE TO SOCIETY!"

AMERICAN.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

NEW FIDDLER ARRIVES.

The newest addition to Chattanooga's host of musicians arrived in the city early Tuesday morning. This young man will make his home with Mr. and Mrs. Lester Cohn, who are very close relatives—in fact, his father and mother. Herbert Benjamin (as his name will appear in the future) has not yet openly expressed his preference to any particular musical instrument, all his endeavors thus far being used to develop his lyric tendencies. It is predicted, however, that he will be strongly inclined to favor the violin. At any rate, The Labor World is glad to announce that Mrs. Cohn and Herbert are progressing nicely at the Children's hospital.

The local takes great pleasure in welcoming two young men who have recently entered the society. We are speaking of Mr. Stanley Brading, banjoist, pianist and what not, and Mr. Des Keese, brother of the famous Alex, who made musical history at the Tivoli a few years back.

Lloyd Wolfe invites members to come out and fill their tanks with gas at his filling station on McCallie avenue.

It's now "Prof. A. Ralph Miller, president of the Standard School of Music," if you please. Yes, people, it's the same Ralph of Worthy's orchestra, WDOD and points south. Bill Krug is assisting Dr. Miller in this new enterprise. If they're going to teach music, a good place to start would be our local.

Brother Lester Cohn told us the sad news Sunday. Now, it's up to us to pull out someway. Buck Weaver says it's too bad that it takes $75 to bankrupt.

We are glad to see Cooper Null back in town. A good idea would be a special interview for this column of his travels and tribulations.

Mr. Ellis Goodloe is now in business and in great danger of giving up music for anything but pleasure. Ellis is now a real estate man. Members owning property, see Mr. Goodloe in the Provident building.

The Peruchis are back. This time Dan Stipp holds the contract for the music. We wish the orchestra lots of luck. The personnel will probably include, besides Mr. Stipp, Miss Lassater, Bill Krug, Dick Stamper, Ralph Miller, J. T. Holden, Frank Worthy and Earl Van Arsdale.

The Roundtowners are continuing their great work at WDOD. Ramon Pryor is reputed as receiving the majority of the fan mail. Ralph says it's because they don't call his name out like they do John Patty's and Ramon's.

HOOVER'S TAILOR LEADS MOVE FOR PAY REDUCTION

Man Who Makes Clothes of President and Others High in Official Life of Nation Acts as Head of Employer's Organization to Force 25 Per Cent Cut in Wages of Journeymen Tailors.

Washington, Oct. 8.—President Hoover's tailor is leading an attack on the wage standards of journeyman tailors in the nation's capital.

T. E. Gilbert, president of the Merchant Tailors' Exchange, the employers' organization, makes the president's suits, as well as suits for members of the cabinet, senators and others high in Washington official life. His organization has just served demands on Local Union No. 188, Journeyman Tailors Union of America, for a 25 per cent reduction in wages. Gilbert's action is regarded as ironical in view of the stand of the president and the administration for maintenance of present wage scales.

The union tailors, with the strong support of their international headquarters and Gust. Soderberg, general secretary, have expressed determined opposition to the proposed wage cut. They point out that their wages have never been "inflated," even during the period of so-called prosperity, and have been greatly reduced in recent months by part time employment. They see no reason why they should bear the burden of the falling off in trade experienced by the merchant tailors, who make high priced suits, and they say that the employers should be content with lower profit margins. They say the employers can still make good profits, even though their business has decreased, as prices of woolens and other materials are lower.

The move for reduction of tailors' wages in Washington is said by the union men to be part of a nation-wide campaign contemplated by the employing tailors. Similar wage reduction demands are expected to be made by employers in other cities.

BALTIMORE MINIMUM WAGE CASE BLOCKED BY COURT

Baltimore, Md.—Baltimore organized labor was defeated in the first stage of its attempt to affirm the validity of the municipal charter provision making it necessary for contractors on municipal work to pay at least the current minimum wage by a decision of Judge Eugene O'Dunne that the indictments against certain contractors were not specific enough.

The indictments charged five contractors with violating the minimum wage rate provision, but did not name the laborers whom it was alleged the contractors paid less than the current wage nor on what work they were employed.

Judge O'Dunne held these defects made the indictments faulty. The state's attorney's office is considering carrying the cases to the court of appeals.

5-DAY WEEK AND 8-HOUR DAY IN NEW YORK STATE

New York.—The special session of the New York state legislature enacted laws providing for a five-day week on all public works of the state and an eight-hour day and the prevailing rate of wage on highway contracts. Both laws are effective up to Dec. 1, 1932.

WHAT PRICE TELEPHONE SERVICE?

What price would you put on a hundred words exchanged by separated loved ones?

What price on a child's laugh heard a thousand miles away?

What price on a brief phrase, "We're all well now?"

What price on a doctor's midnight direction, on the swift response of the fire department, on the relief of anxiety, the cementing of friendship, the unexpected greeting after a long silence?

What price on success in business, on the smooth running of a household, on leisure or rest without neglect of duty, on shelter in a day of storm?

How can anyone say what the telephone is worth to you?

We set a value on the physical facts of wires, poles, switchboards, instruments, operation.

We set a price on telephone service based on what it costs us to render it today and to assure its continued growth. And the cost of the service is so low that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

RIGHT TO WORK MAJOR DEMAND OF WORKERS

President Green Flays Present Social System.

SAYS BUYING POWER MUST BE RESTORED

"Right to Life and Liberty" Hollow Words to Millions of Unemployed.

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 15.—The demand that organized labor put the right to work into the American bill of rights and condemnation of wage cutting and the inequitable distribution of wealth were the features of a speech by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, at the fifty-first annual convention of the federation.

"A tremendous feeling of social unrest is developing everywhere," President Green said.

"Men who are temperate in the use of language are beginning to speak in no uncertain terms. Standards of life and living must be maintained on a hgh level if our institutions are to prevail. I must warn employers and leaders of industry against the life-destroying, heartless policy of wage cuts.

"In my opinion, the time has arrived when the representatives of labor can take a most advanced position. Thomas Jefferson wrote into the life of our nation the Bill of Rights, which guarantees to all the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. I think labor can well add the right to work.

"Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness means nothing to the man who is out of work."

Attacking the "inequitable distribution of the earnings of industry," which permits the building up of immense fortunes, Mr. Green called for a division of excess profits in the form of wages.

"The wage standards must be built up," he said. "The earnings of industry are mostly inequitably distributed. Instead of corporations declaring a 40 per cent dividend to stockholders they should divide the profits with the workers who have earned it.

"If they refuse to listen, then we will go to the sovereign people through the ballots and bring about a distribution of these large fortunes back to the people through the power of taxation.

"The great army of the unemployed stands as a menace to the existing order. No urge is as powerful as the hunger instinct. It cannot be be controlled by social laws.

"In the United States we are facing the third workless winter. Savings were exhausted last winter.

"Shall we make paupers out of men strong, willing, anxious, begging for work? Men are afraid of banks. Men are afraid of unemployment. Men are afraid of wage-cutting. The buying power is paralyzed—frozen. Men will not spend money.

"Eight million cannot buy. Forty million will not buy. Prosperity will never return until the buying power of the nation is restored."

American Federationist Extending Usefulness

The American Federationist, the official journal of the American Federation of Labor, has extended its usefulness especially in the fields of unemployment prevention and economic statistics on the progress of the workers, the Executive Council of the federation points out in its report to the federation's 1931 convention at Vancouver.

"The number of trade union readers has steadily risen," the report said. "Inquiries from this country and abroad for special articles in the magazine have notably increased. Additions have been made to the number of universities and governments of foreign countries which regularly receive it. An increasing number of business men, industrial undertakings and research groups are turning to the magazine as an authoritative source for indispensable information. Immediate courses in economic and history group of trade unionists are using the American Federationist as a text book.

"It is our plan to make the magazine increasingly useful during the coming year through the discussion of current problems of wage-earners and problems of the home as well as the job.

"During the past year we have added a supplement for children. We believe it is important that children should grow up with understanding and respect for trade unionism. The principles of unionism learned in childhood will bear fruit later in union membership."

OFFER TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF A VETERAN

Machinists Recall Early Activities of Jas. E. Thompson, Charter Member.

Tribute to the memory of James E. Thompson, charter member of Lodge 56, Machinists, is paid in resolutions prepared by a committee from that organization by instructions of the regular meeting this week. Mr. Thompson, who passed away last week at his home, 629 Cypress street, was a charter member of the old Chickamauga lodge, formed in Chattanooga in 1894, and also of the reorganized Success lodge, No. 56, which has functioned since 1900.

Mr. Thompson was a resident of Chattanooga for forty-five years. He had from the formation of a Machinists' union been a loyal and active member, and although he had reached the age of 65, was present and participating in the regular meeting a few days before his passing. His worth to his union, and the esteem in which he was held by his fellow members, is indicated in the resolutions adopted by a committee composed of W. L. Wergin, Dave Sivley and William Millsaps, as follows:

Whereas, it has pleased an all-wise Providence to call from our midst our friend and brother, James E. Thompson; and,

Whereas, Brother Thompson was a charter member of this organization and during its entire existence had rendered every service within his power to its upbuilding and the benefit of his brother workers; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we record our deep appreciation of his worth as a trades unionist, and deplore the passing of a veteran who numbered his warm personal friends by the hundreds; we will miss his wise counsel and his personal friendship, and his place among us will be hard to fill; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, furnished the relatives of our deceased brother, and The Labor World for publication.

Rail Carmen Note Death of Member

Passing of Samuel H. Stofle, long-time member of Lookout Lodge, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, is noted and deplored in resolutions adopted by the lodge at its last regular meeting, as follows:

Whereas, the hand of death has snatched from our presence a beloved friend and brother, Samuel H. Stofle; and,

Whereas, the loss caused by his going is felt very sharply; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That an expression of our sympathy be sent to the members of the family of Brother Stofle. We realize that our words may sound cold in this hour of deep grief and heart-suffering, yet our expression is one of deep sincerity.

Our loss cannot for a moment compare with that sustained by those of immediate kinship; yet the ties of friendship that bound close together have been severed and we are conscious of a loss.

Memory of long associations will not easily fade. Our minds will carry the recollections of one who was held in highest regard, and whose life was an inspiration to many. Whatever principle of moral life, business or social life that was reached was most rigidly adhered to in personal example.

Characters such as this cannot be removed without being aware of the going. The community can ill spare those who by their daily living make the sphere in which they move the better for having had their lives placed there.

Our friend died in the firm conviction that the parting would be but for a short tme. He would not have us grieve but live in the expectation of a greater day:

"There is a world above,
Where parting is unknown,
A long eternity of love,
Formed for the good alone;
And faith beholds the dying here
Translated to that happier sphere."

Be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and furnished our deceased brother's family and The Labor World for publication.

Resolutions on Death Of Mrs. R. S. Barnes

Chattanooga Typographical union, at its last regular meeting, appointed a committee, consisting of W. L. Gardner, H. S. Kennedy and Wallace Miller, to draw resolutions expressing the sympathy of local printers to a brother, Robert S. Barnes, who recently was bereft of his wife and helpmeet. The resolutions follow:

"Whereas, Mrs. Mary Katherine Barnes, wife of Brother R. S. Barnes, departed this life on Sunday, Sept. 13; be it

"Resolved, That we express to Brother Barnes our sincere sympathy in his great loss; and, be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, a copy furnished Brother Barnes, and a copy to The Labor World for publication."

IT'S TIME FOR REAL ACTION WHEN ONE MAN CAN ROB A MILLION

One banker who sits at the head of the executive committee of one of the great industries has issued an order for wage cuts that will affect one million people.

Senator James Couzens, of Michigan, makes that charge. He does not use any weazel words. He says just that, in plain words.

"These people," the senator says, "are at the absolute mercy of this one banker, whose mandate also is affecting the security of other industries."

One banker can reach into the pay envelopes of a million people!

* * * *

Senator Couzens is more than a millionaire himself. He has so many millions that he can afford to—and has offered to—give a whole million this winter to relieve hunger and cold.

This man can be presumed to know what he is talking about.

They say trade unions are not needed. They say any man can walk up and have it out with the boss. They say—the union haters do—that we must have freedom of contract for each man and his boss.

* * * *

When one man can trim a million, the million need to be organized if they are ever going to stop getting trimmed.

* * * *

Of course Senator Couzens doesn't mean the wages of a million workers are menaced by this order. He means that by this order a million, including wage earners and their families, will suffer.

He doesn't name the industry, but is it United States Steel?

* * * *

Much of our present industrial depression has come upon us because one man can trim a million!

To ever stop that eternal skinning and trimming, there must be trade union organization stronger than we have ever known.

Labor must be organized so strongly that it can see that the millions do not get trimmed.

Labor must take its rightful, proper place. It must enforce a great growth of democratic practice in American industry.

* * * *

The tax against which the American colonists kicked when they threw the tea overboard was pin money beside the tax this one man takes out of the millions when he arbitrarily cuts their wages.

When one man can trim a million we have something to kick about.

But there is no use just tearing the air with howls. There is no use merely raving. There is no use in mere excitement. Anybody who beats the drums today wants to know pretty sure which way to march when the troops start moving. Mobs of millions merely destroy.

Trade union organization must come first. Unless there is that there will be no relief—just nothing doing.

Trade union organization means discipline, knowledge, understanding.

* * * *

There is mighty little progress toward anything today without real understanding, based on knowledge.

So many of us know so little about the great complicated machinery of industry, its ramifications and puzzles, that one man finds it easy to trim a million.

That one man knows pretty nearly all about it.

* * * *

Above all, he knows how weak are the millions. He knows they are not organized. He knows they do not know the facts about the industry in which they live and he knows that to them the financial structure is just a nightmare.

But, when one man can trim a million—take the very hide off their backs—it is high time for the million to start to think and then to organize and then to participate, intelligently, patriotically, earnestly, in the industrial life of the nation.

* * * *

How long are we to have the spectacle of one man trimming a million?

Think that over during this depression with its unemployment and its great stores of surplus capacity and surplus commodities.

Milligan Likes Printers' Home

Following card from R. J. Milligan, who has for many years made Chattanooga a regular stop on his apparently aimless itinerary, and who is known and liked by thousands of his fellow-craftsmen throughout the country, will be of interest to many friends among the local typos. Mr. Milligan, as his card indicates, has been a resident of the Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs, Colo., for the past three months in an effort to recuperate from a more or less failure in his generally robust health.

The old-timer says:

"Hello. I have been out here nearly three months, and am getting better. This is a wonderful place. Give the boys my regards."

Lon Guill Returns To Old Home Town

Lon Guill, who was formerly one of the best-known paint contractors in Chattanooga, has returned to the "old home town" after an absence of seven years in Chicago. Mr. Guill has formed a partnership with E. L. Blair, and under the firm name of Guill and Blair, Painters and Decorators, is located at Sixth and Broad streets.

George Perry Goes To Broadway Shop

George W. Perry, president of Local 415, Journeyman Barbers, has accepted a chair at the Broadway shop, and is occupying his time these days shaving and shearing customers and talking (when he gets a chance) at 830 Broad street.

Mrs. Mary L. Hix Goes to Reward

Mrs. Mary L. Hix, widow of the late Judge J. C. Hix, and stepmother of Harris D. Hix, newly-elected president of Chattanooga Typographical union, passed away Wednesday afternoon at the home of a relative, Mrs. Ernest Holmes, with whom she resided. Mrs. Hix had been in ill health for some time. Funeral services were held Thursday afternoon from the home, conducted by the Rev. T. S. McCallie, and interment followed, in the Confederate cemetery, where Judge Hix is buried.

The Labor World extends sympathy of the local movement to Brother Harris Hix and the other surviving relatives.

OPERATORS SIGN NEW CONTRACT WITH PUBLIX

Bijou Operating Company Also Agrees to Renewal of Old Wage Scale.

A one-year agreement was signed this week between Local 259, Moving Picture Projectionists, and the Publix theaters in Chattanooga, which includes the Tivoli, State and Rialto. The Bijou operating company also is a party to the new scale, which it is announced contains all the features of the working agreement just expiring, and maintains the old basic scale.

Negotiations were carried on for the union by a contract committee consisting of John B. Blanton, J. B. Lowry, Leo Vick, Roy Hipp, Pat Neligan and W. C. Belcher. It was said that the conferences were marked by a spirit of friendliness throughout, and members of the committee expressed gratification at the splendid relations which exist between the "engineers" and their employers.

Negotiations with the Independent theaters are being carried on by the same members representing Local 259, the agreement with the latter company having expired thirty days later than that with the Publix houses.

KEEPS MOONEY OFF AIR.

Warden James B. Holohan, of San Quentin prison, California, announced on Oct. 2 that he would not permit Tom Mooney "or any one else in the prison" to make an address over the radio. The warden's statement was made in connection with a report that radio station WOR, Newark, had asked Gov. James Rolph, Jr., of California, to permit Mooney to "state his case to the whole world."

Mooney is serving a life term in San Quentin after conviction on perjured evidence of having participated in the Preparedness day bomb explosion in San Francisco in 1916.

OLD-TIME LEADER DEAD.

William Thompson, printer, who during the Knights of Labor strike in Rochester, N. Y., in 1887, helped found the Evening Times, which later was merged in the Times-Union, died in Rochester recently, at the age of 72 years. Thompson was employed on the Democrat and Chronicle at the time of the strike. He and other union printers launched the Times, first issued as the Appeal, to present the side of the strikers. He was made foreman. He was with the consolidated paper at his death, and had been a member of Typographical Union 15 for forty-five years.

"Frozen Custard" Declared "Unfair"

The new so-called "frozen custard" station on Market street between Eighth and Ninth was formally declared "unfair to organized labor" at Monday night's regular meeting of Central Body. It was reported that the management had employed non-union craftsmen in repainting the storeroom, and executive board of Central Body was given little consolation in their efforts to adjust the complaint brought by the Painters.

Prevailing Rate Law Guards Union Wage

The prevailing rate of wage law enacted by the last congress, requiring contractors and subcontractors on public buildings in the United States and the District of Columbia to pay adequate wages, is of great value in maintaining union wage rates, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor stated in its report to the 1931 convention of the federation in Vancouver.

"The law provides," the council's report said, "that every contract in excess of $5,000 in amount, to which the United States or the District of Columbia is a party, shall contain a provision that the rate of wages for all laborers and mechanics employed by the contractor or any subcontractor shall be not less than the prevailing rate of wages for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil division of the state in which the public buildings are to be located, or in the District of Columbia, if they are located there.

"It also provides that in case any dispute arises as to the prevailing rates of wages for work of a similar nature which cannot be adjusted by the contracting officers, the matter shall be referred to the secretary of labor for determination and his decisions thereon shall be conclusive on all parties to the contract. The act became effective April 2, 1931.

"Representatives of the government charged with the responsibility of carrying out contracts testified before the committees of congress that in the event any contractor failed to pay the prevailing rate, as determined by the department of labor, payment on the contract will be withheld until he complies with the law. It was also stated by the same officials that any contractor who refused to pay the prevailing rates of wages would be considered as an irresponsible bidder for public building contracts."

The Executive Council requests organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to report violations of the wage rates. The information will be used to support such amendments to the act as may appear necessary to secure complete protection of wage rates.

IMPORTATION OF OUTSIDE LABOR IS PROTESTED

Central Body Officials Say Policy Unfair to Workers and Merchants.

Newspaper reports of the importation of outside labor in mass for construction of the new Ringgold road has drawn a protest from the executive board of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council against the principle of bringing in large numbers of laborers for local projects while many hundreds of Chattanoogans are unemployed.

Central Body officials, in a resolution adopted Thursday, declare that such a policy tends to further aggravate the jobless situation, and further that it is an injustice to Chattanooga merchants, and will not help the "unfortunate situation" in which many of these merchants now find themselves because of unemployment.

The position of Central Body's committee was given as follows:

Whereas, the daily newspapers report that a local contractor contemplates bringing into this city a considerable number of laborers from another section for work on the Ringgold road;

Resolved, That we believe such a policy, if made the rule for local work, would only aggravate a very serious unemployment situation in which many of our local merchants now find themselves because of unemployment of hundreds of Chattanooga workers; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we respectfully protest against any wholesale importation of labor, even though such labor is not directly affiliated with our organizations, as opposed to the public welfare, and urge upon our local employers and our county and city governments to give preference to our own citizens when labor is employed in mass on local projects.

Sale of Prison-Made Goods Restricted

Encouraging progress has been made in restricting the sale of prison-made goods in competition with articles made by free labor, according to the report of the American Federation of Labor Executive Council to the 1931 convention of the federation at Vancouver.

The Hawes-Cooper law was passed by congress in December, 1928. It becomes effective on Jan. 19, 1934. It provides in general that goods made wholly or in part by inmates of state penal institutions shall, when transported into any other state or territory for use, be subject to the state or territorial laws regulating the sale of prison-made goods.

Since then Illinois, Maine, New York and New Jersey have enacted satisfactory laws prohibiting the sale in those states of prison goods made in other states. The Pennsylvania law, the council pointed out, is inadequate and must be amended.

"Our aim," the council said, "is to have every state adopt the state-use system and then prohibit the sale within its borders of convict made goods manufactured and produced in other states. The fact that the four states named have enacted legislation prohibiting the sale of convict made goods manufactured or produced within or without their jurisdiction in competition with free labor will influence the legislatures of other states to amend their laws and adopt similar legislation.

"New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey have been favorable markets for the sale of convict made goods. With these markets taken away the legislatures must enact laws in self-defense. Those states which manufacture and ship convict made goods into these states will have to change to the state-use system.

"State federations of labor in states where these laws have been enacted will not have such a difficult time in securing the enactment of this new legislation. Most of the governors of the several states have indicated a desire and expressed a willingness to co-operate in every way possible in order to meet the conditions that will follow the application of the Hawes-Cooper act when it becomes effective."

Edith Elizabeth Frost Newcomer

C. Arthur "Shorty" Frost is all riled up, and the editor of The Labor World has been hiding out for the past week—and it's all because that well-known member of Local 175, Electrical Workers, furnished a news item for this paper last week which got lost. The item concerned the arrival, at a local hospital, of little Miss Edith Elizabeth Frost, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Arthur. "Shorty" was so excited when he was interviewed he had forgotten the exact date of the little lady's arrival, but declared she weighed the approved ten pounds. Mrs. Frost and the little un are now at their home, 1201 Duncan avenue, and "everybody's happy" over the big event.

LABOR MOVING FOR CHANGE IN WHOLE SYSTEM

Convention Demands Readjustment Economic Order.

FAIRNESS TO MASSES KEYNOTE OF MEETING

Rumblings of Discontent Never So Deep or So Openly Expressed.

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 13.—The permanency of institutions depends upon the conviction by the people that they are dealt with fairly. Fairness to the masses today means work. There must be work and wages. "Work for all," is the slogan with which President William Green opened the annual American Federation of Labor convention here and work has been the keynote throughout.

The alternative of revolution was not missing from discussion. President Green drew upon the teachings of history and declared that those in position of power "may go too far." The rumblings of discontent and resentment have never been so deep, nor so openly brought into the light.

Moreover, no convention of the American Federation of Labor has ever moved so far in demanding fundamental changes in the economic order. The proposal for a national economic council would, whatever may be thought about it, bring about a drastic change in the control of industry, as to its relations with wage-earners, stockholders and bankers.

The department conventions, too, pressed home the demands of labor for work. The Metal Trades Department adopted vigorous demands for work, declaring that if a resort to such measures as unemployment insurance becomes necessary, the economic structure, and not labor, will be to blame.

Department Heads Re-elected.

Department officers were re-elected. Tribute was paid to James O'Connell, president of the Metal Trades Department, in his enforced absence.

This convention of the federation is notable, not alone because it is being held in the trough of a world depression, but because it marks the Golden Jubilee of the American Federation of Labor. It is not escaping attention that at the turn of a half century of fighting life, this year finds organized labor engaged in one of its most gigantic fights—a fight to mold the economic order to a design calculated to bring justice to the masses.

The one rift in an apparent concord of demand for work and wages has come from the building trades department, where instructions were voted to introduce in the federation convention a resolution making it mandatory for unions affiliated with the federation to affiliate with their proper department. This resolution is aimed at bringing the Carpenters, Bricklayers and Electricians back into the building trades department. Several courses are open, among them reference of the resolution to the executive council.

Union Label Goods Essential for Labor

Vancouver, B. C.—More thorough organization of the workers in trade unions and mobilizing union workers to buy only union labeled goods were stressed as major means for benefitting the workers in the annual report of George W. Perkins and John J. Manning, president and secretary-treasurer of the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor.

"If we are to preserve our economic freedom, we must thoroughly organize the wage-earners," said President Perkins. "Organize and keep organizing is the topmost, all-important issue before us today.

"We must do everything in our power to make uninterrupted customers for what we and our fellow workers produce. The real way to do this is to organize the workers, regardless of how or where employed. One of the real simple and inexpensive, but manly, ways to do this is to demand the union label, shop card and button on everything we purchase."

"The possibilities of good to our movement," Secretary - Treasurer Mannng said, "through the rigid cooperation of purchase power of only union labeled goods and service by 4,000,000 workers staggers the imagination. Instead of millions of dollars' worth of non-union goods stocking the shelves of the retail merchants, they would be seeking us to learn where union goods could be found."

In the broad extension of the purchase of union label goods, Secretary-Treasurer Manning saw an opportunity for greater service to trade unionists and the general public. "It would mean a shorter work day, with a more vigorous and independent manhood and womanhood, a happier and healthier childhood, and a better world to live in for all."

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter I

PART III: THE THOUGHT TREND OF JESUS' MIND

2. A Keen Observer. (Continued from last week.) How fully Jesus realized men and women felt their lives had some kind of connection with the lives of others is easily traceable in His teaching and ministry. With a knowledge that men and women were conscious of their social purpose but had only a dim understanding of how and why their lives linked up with the lives of others Jesus set to work, following His baptism at the hands of John the Baptist, preaching His gospel. It was not a destructive gospel, for Jesus Himself said He came to fulfill and not to destroy, although it was a new and revolutionary sort of preaching. It called for a complete regeneration of men's idea of God and of personal goodness. From the beginning of His teaching ministry Jesus built upon the common belief of His time—a belief that included the oneness of the Godhead and a purpose of men on earth.

WM. L. MOSS

Yet until the advent of Jesus men's idea of God was at best only a warped vision of the Father and their understanding of why they existed as men was shot through and through with selfishness. Jesus undertook to impart to men a true revelation of the Fatherhood of God and to teach them why they were on earth and how therefore they should act. From the beginning He knew well enough from personal observation of men and women around Him that He must choose with extreme care a method that would convey this double revelation. So He chose a method so simple a child could understand it, and yet so profound the greatest thinkers of every age have failed to exhaust it as a subject.

The basis of this method, and the heart also of His gospel, was that every single human life was to the Father of equal value—He had no pets or favorites. Jesus' observation of men and women was that they had no clear understanding of this and He began to teach them that no property was worth so much as the life of one of their fellowmen no matter how humble that life might be. He taught the life and personality of every individual are of supreme value—all else in life, except our love for God, is subordinate to this one fact. (To Be Continued.)

Science has contribed a system for getting exercise in bed, even when one's limbs are in a plaster cast. The treatment is simply the flashing of duly interrupted electric currents through idle muscles, with a small Westinghouse motor driving the mechanism. The currents provide the exercise and the exerciser may smoke or read while being treated.

Deserve better working conditions by aiding other workers to secure them. Demand the UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD.

Restless, could not sleep

"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would have to lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.

My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

The People versus Rulers

Almost in the same breath mighty moves toward some new kind of guidance for industry were announced this week by the American Federation of Labor and the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Such proposals have been showered heavily upon the nation within the past few months. It becomes clearer that "the good old days have gone."

The Chamber of Commerce proposes a national economic council of "three, or at most five," men. That looks like superpower and that is what it is.

The American Federation of Labor goes to democracy and the ways of democracy for the structure which it believes necessary in this age of machine and power production.

The Chamber of Commerce has a measure of democracy within its own structure, but big business wants democratic practice only for itself. It wants a franchise based upon wealth, as did certain of the fathers of the country in the early contest between autocracy and democracy.

If ever we are to have a workable, sound and solidly grounded franchise in the world of industry in this nation it must be based upon manhood, not upon property. Upon the distinction between men and money rests most of the difference in view between labor and those others who have come forward with propositions for control of industry.

Labor wants government of industry by its people, not control of industry by a handful of overlords. As surely as the sun rises the coming years must see a great and drastic rearrangement within industry. Primarily future prosperity and future permanence of governments will rest upon these things: Wages, hours of labor and voice commensurate with status and service.

Industry throughout the world is sick. Wheels do not turn. An authority tells us that two-thirds of the world's population is BELOW THE POVERTY LINE! If we look forward at all we must look forward to a world in which PEOPLE come into a new importance. They can come to that point only through self-expression.

"We who are about to die salute thee," they said to the Caesars.

But we, today—we are about to VOTE!

Superiority of Trade Union Policies

The flexibility of trade union policy to meet the exigencies of labor in periods of revolutionary changes in production is brought out by the report of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor to the 1931 convention of the federation.

In discussing the interests of the workers in the progress of industry and society and the desirability of trade union representation on boards having any jurisdiction over labor matters, the council says:

> To prevent progress from being badly balanced by too much income going into capital goods and too little into the pockets of wage-earners; to make sure that work hours are decreased in proportion to productivity increases instead of letting machines produce unemployment; to make sure that production experience is put to service in eliminating wastes; to make sure there is available producing workers competent, resourceful, and skilled, are union functions.
> Only a union has the independence, the power, and the authority to assume responsibility for keeping wage-earners' progress abreast social and economic progress.

Nor does the council mince words in describing the retrogressive influence of employers who outlaw the trade union from their plants:

> Employers who have been fighting trade unions, who have refused their employes the right to organize, who have refused to meet effective representatives of their workers in order to negotiate terms and conditions of work, who have opposed the shorter work day, and the five-day week, who have resisted wage increase, have stood squarely against the road to progress and have opposed their own best interests.
> The union is an instrumentality of progress. It manages the business interests of wage-earners so that they can make progress. Sustained progress does not come from trusting to chance; it comes from thought, planning and organization to put plans into effect.

The executive council also sees clearly that any scheme of economic planning, whether by industry or government, will not be complete or equipped for proper functioning unless organized labor is represented:

> Organization of workers in unions under their own control is essential to planning on a broader basis and to planning for related groups where interests are interdependent. In fact, unless labor participates in the councils, national planning and balanced progress are impossible. Unorganized, labor cannot participate in a representative group.
> Organization of workers in trade unions is a highly commendable and essential movement which should be accepted as public policy.

In this connection it is significant that the so-called "labor representation" in the economic planning scheme proposed by Mr. Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric company, for the electric industry ignored the trade union and set up the company union to represent the workers. The executive council describes "company unions" as "company controlled and company kept organizations of the workers."

Unions the Tools of Labor's Progress

The superiority of trade unions, based on voluntary association, to government institutions, based on compulsion, as the medium for improving labor conditions and protecting the workers, is stressed in the report of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor to the federation's 1931 convention.

In discussing trade unions as tools of progress functioning in the interests of the workers as well as of all the people, the council says:

> One of the most important contributions the American Federation of Labor has made to the nation is the development of labor institutions along principles of adequate compensation for wage-earners so that they will be able to order their own lives instead of applying to government agencies and funds for provisions for emergencies. Trade unions have been working toward standards of independence and self-competence which we believe are the proper standards for human development.
> Steering our course by principles of voluntarism, we have steadily resisted efforts to impose compulsion upon workers whether in the form of investigation, arbitration, or governmental regimentation. By our insistence upon voluntarism, we have helped to prevent the crystallization of class barriers and have kept unrestricted our opportunities for progress. At the same time we have been struggling to give wage-earners the agency and methods for making use of these opportunities.
> Our policy has been to avoid the extension of government regulation and control to private industry. We have always welcomed the fact-finding, service functions of government—these are help without hindrance.
> Our fifty years of service have helped to give this country upstanding workers with the highest wage levels in the world and the highest standards of living. We have ahead of us the problem of extending these gains to backward areas while steadily advancing the standards for those in the front ranks of progress.

The council's declaration reaffirms the position of the American Federation of Labor that the purposes to be accomplished by the trade union movement are unlimited and that the structure of the trade unions is flexible enough to enable them to function efficiently to realize every definite goal in the wage-earners' plan for social progress.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Postal savings deposits have reached a new high figure and as a result, employes in the postal savings division of the postoffice department have been working an extra half hour without extra pay since Oct. 5.

The department found it necessary to hire more men, or to require overtime work of present employes and decided on the latter course, department officials explained.

In view of the national administration's stand for the maintenance of wages and working forces, the postoffice department's course seems strange. With the unemployment situation serious, it would seem that the department should be putting on men when extra work is necessary, rather than making present employes work a longer day. Is the postoffice department looking backward instead of forward? Its action in requiring men to work overtime without extra pay gives good ground for asking this question.

Considerable deflation of business ego is one of the few beneficial effects of the present depression. Captains of industry and would-be captains are not so sure they know it all as they were in the days of so-called prosperity. Subordinates are finding that business executives are more amenable to suggestion than when profits were easy and quick. This humbler state of mind on the part of business executives is all to the good. It even gives hope that some day leaders of business will frankly admit they made a mess of things and will be willing to listen to organized labor's plans for the prevention of unemployment and depression.

Analyzing the total of $53,000,000,000 estimated by the bureau of the census as spent in retail sales in the United States in 1930, the women's bureau estimates that about one-tenth of the entire amount may be attributed to the 10,778,794 women in gainful operations. This is done on the basis that the average expenditure of the gainfully occupied women would be at least $10 a week for retail sales for fifty weeks in the year, or a total of something over $5,000,000,000.

Using the average of expenditure, the women's bureau gives over one billion dollars as a conservative estimate of the amount of retail sales for which the gainfully occupied married women are responsible. Although the total number of such women in 1930 has not yet been published, the bureau assumes that the number will be at least as many as the two million in 1920, and probably more, judging from available data from several states.

While this analysis is only an approximation, it does indicate vividly the importance to the American economic scheme of maintenance at least at as high a level as the present of the purchasing power of the woman worker, whether married or single.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

THE period beginning with 1834 and closing with the panic of 1837 was one of most extraordinary trade union activity and marked the close of the ephemeral labor political party movement which had been gaining force since as early as the 1820's. As we have not heretofore treated of this first and what so far has proved to be the last entry of labor into the political arena as a distinct labor party we will now briefly consider this phase of the labor movement in this country.

The first workingmen's political party appeared in Philadelphia in 1827-1828 and the New York party was organized in the first quarter of 1829. In labor centers throughout the country enthusiasm in support of these parties ran high, although in many such centers concerted action was not always taken to affiliate with them. One of the great forces in establishing these labor parties was G. H. Evans, editor of the famous labor paper, the Working Man's Advocate, a labor journal which had for its chief editorial plank the elimination of distinctions of class and rank in America. Had the advice of Evans been followed by both capital and labor co-operatively the industrial history of the United States in the decades following would have been far pleasanter than it has been.

Tammany Hall was then, as it is today, the great political power in New York City and the results of the election of 1829 thoroughly frightened the leaders of this organization, for the labor leaders were proving their strength in no small way, so Tammany proceeded to destroy the workingmen's labor party. The Philadelphia party also disappeared into thin air after an eventful but short life and our first and last labor-political party passed out of existence by 1831, never again to be resurrected.

The chief effects of labor's experiment with a political party may be summarized as follows: (1) Passage of a mechanics' lien law by New York, (2) abolition of imprisonment for debt, (3) increase in the appropriation funds for educational purposes, especially for free public schools, and (4) the establishment of conclusive proof in labor's mind that its best interests could be served not by direct political action as a labor party but through its support or non-support of political candidates by individual workingmen who had received their advice in this respect from their local organizations, of which committeemen had questioned candidates and passed on the measures they were supporting which affected the interests of labor.

This, in more or less modified form, has continued until today to be the procedure followed by trades and labor councils throughout the country in regards to political election matters.

ing so it deliberately slanders Mr. Brown on three separate and distinct counts. In the first place, it prints his picture; and if you know Mr. Brown, you realize what a serious charge this is to bring against a gent. In the second place, it labels the picture "Handsome Hal," thus pointedly calling attention to that pulchritude to which we have already referred in somewhat veiled terms. And, thirdly, in the headline it refers to Mr. Brown as an "ancient pipe-fixer." And also refers to him as "Big Frog." We hope that Hal sues for damages. And collects. It is needless to say that we will help him spend the money, as we try to be neighborly in such matters.

The Truth!

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Nobody seems to have paid much attention to a stray remark made by Rome C. Stephenson, president of the American Bankers' association, before that body recently at the opening of its fifty-seventh annual convention. Without a trace of a smile on his face Mr. Stephenson solemnly told his associates, among other things, that the "people of the nation have become extravagantly economical."

If Mr. Stephenson had explained this "extravagant economy" is really an "extravagant lack" of the means with which to buy even the necessities of life he would have come nearer hitting the truth. People can't spend what they haven't got—at least they can't do their "spending" honestly. Wage-earners, the people who form the bulk of our "over-the-counter" buyers, can't have anything to spend if they are not given the opportunity to earn it. The common people are certainly not the hoarders of money during this depression. They have none to hoard!

What we would like to see is for men of influence and high position to right-about-face in their attitude as well as reverse their public remarks and begin to tell our business leaders the truth instead of giving voice to wise-sounding but meaningless phrases. The truth never hurts anybody—for long. It will of course be painful to our capitalistic friends for a short while, but there is no doubt about their recovering. And when they do recover from the shock of hearing the truth from the lips of men of their own crowd and if they are big enough to profit by what they hear the depression will dissolve as surely as it came on us.

CLERKS' OFFICIAL DROPS DEAD.

Joseph A. Stanton, age 50, vice-president of the National Federation of Postal Clerks, died recently in New Orleans after an illness. He had been an employe of the New Orleans post-office for fifteen years.

Always demanding the UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD is evidence that you are a real live member of organized labor.

The Enquirer-Sun says:

H. F. Brown, formerly of Columbus, now of Chattanooga, draws what you might call real publicity in The Labor World, published in that city that modestly calls itself the Dynamo of Dixie. Mr. Brown visited here not so long ago and something was said in this column about the honor thus conferred upon the old home town. The Labor World reprints these paragraphs on its first page. In doing so it deliberately slanders Mr. Brown on three separate and distinct counts. In the first place, it prints his picture; and if you know Mr. Brown, you realize what a serious charge this is to bring against a gent. In the second place, it labels the picture "Handsome Hal," thus pointedly calling attention to that pulchritude to which we have already referred in somewhat veiled terms. And, thirdly, in the headline it refers to Mr. Brown as an "ancient pipe-fixer." And also refers to him as "Big Frog." We hope that Hal sues for damages. And collects. It is needless to say that we will help him spend the money, as we try to be neighborly in such matters.

The Truth!

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Nobody seems to have paid much attention to a stray remark made by Rome C. Stephenson, president of the American Bankers' association, before that body recently at the opening of its fifty-seventh annual convention. Without a trace of a smile on his face Mr. Stephenson solemnly told his associates, among other things, that the "people of the nation have become extravagantly economical."

If Mr. Stephenson had explained this "extravagant economy" is really an "extravagant lack" of the means with which to buy even the necessities of life he would have come nearer hitting the truth. People can't spend what they haven't got—at least they can't do their "spending" honestly. Wage-earners, the people who form the bulk of our "over-the-counter" buyers, can't have anything to spend if they are not given the opportunity to earn it. The common people are certainly not the hoarders of money during this depression. They have none to hoard!

What we would like to see is for men of influence and high position to right-about-face in their attitude as well as reverse their public remarks and begin to tell our business leaders the truth instead of giving voice to wise-sounding but meaningless phrases. The truth never hurts anybody—for long. It will of course be painful to our capitalistic friends for a short while, but there is no doubt about their recovering. And when they do recover from the shock of hearing the truth from the lips of men of their own crowd and if they are big enough to profit by what they hear the depression will dissolve as surely as it came on us.

Life's Little Irritations.

Because of corns upon the feet I shed
a bitter tear,
And then, betimes, I wept with joy
at corn upon the ear,
Thus sang I many years ago when mine own teeth I had,
But now, alas, I have no teeth, and I am doubly sad;
Not only does the pedal corn still cause the bitter sob,
But eating corn from off the ear is just a painful job!

One Man Trims a Million!

One banker, dominating a corporation board of directors, enforced a wage reduction affecting a million people.

This is the charge made by United States Senator James Couzens, of Michigan.

Senator Couzens, in his statement, raked business leaders and bankers fore and aft.

He pointed out that they pick the start of winter to enforce wage cuts.

He said wage-earners are entitled to something more than a living.

Finally he capped his charge with the statement that ONE BANKER, heading a corporation executive committee, picked the pockets of a million men and women by a wage reduction. "These people are at the absolute mercy of this one banker," the Michigan senator said.

ONE BANKER TRIMS A MILLION PEOPLE!

POWER INDUSTRY DOUBLES BUSINESS EVERY FIVE AND ONE-HALF YEARS

Cincinnati, Oct. 15.—"Every five and one-half years the electric power industry of the United States has been doubling its business," A. H. Kehoe, New York, chairman of the engineering section of the National Electric Light association, told the annual meeting of the association here. Six hundred leaders of the industry are here to discuss problems.

"The industry shares with the automotive industry the distinction of being the fastest growing industry of the country," Kehoe said. "Americans use annually more than 1,000,000,000 kilowatt hours of electricity—more than all the rest of the world put together."

Kehoe, chief engineer of the United Electric Light and Power Company of New York, said this lavish use of "juice" more than any other factor has raised the standard of living of the average American. He predicted even greater gains for the business of producing and distributing electricity as a result of recent progress in "conditioning" of public buildings and the spread of creating "artificial weather" in the home with the aid of electrical appliances.

"With our own firm in New York," Kehoe said, "domestic sales increased to such an extent that our entire business the last year showed an increase of 3½ per cent. The engineering trend is toward larger units of production. Our greatest cost is not the production of power but its distribution."

Work Hours Must Be Shortened, Firefighters' Official Declares

New York City, Oct. 13.—Work hours must be shortened to provide jobs for all willing and ready to work, James F. Chambers, office manager of Local No. 94, International Association of Fire Fighters, declared in radio address broadcast throughout the nation by the Columbia Broadcasting system.

"We are confronted with a situation today which, because of its magnitude and far-reaching effects has no parallel in our history—the question of unemployment and attendant business depression," Mr. Chambers said.

"Government officials are advocating an increase in income tax rates to provide funds to be administered in financing public works. Captains of industry are agitating the floating of so-called peace loans to alleviate the stress of unemployment. These proposals are very fine, but at best they can only be a temporary palliative.

Charity Not the Answer.

"Charity, whether it be the dole of the government, or the beneficence of public or private organizations, is not the answer. The only lasting and conclusive solution of the economic problem which is taxing the minds of leaders today is employment—steady, uninterrupted employment for the willing worker.

"The American man, the head of a family, does not want charity as a steady diet. He is anxious to work. He wants a chance to earn an honest living to enable him to properly support his family in accordance with accepted American standards.

"We are living in a paradox today, when we have the distress and hunger of millions in a land so rich in resources that beside it the dreams of Croesus sink to insignificance. We have built up an industrial structure that threatens to destroy the civilization under which we live. Because of our highly specialized and scientific mechanical processes, which are supplanting manpower in increasing numbers, it is absolutely necessary for our future prosperity and even existence, that we immediately readjust the working schedule of our employes.

Work Hours Must Be Cut.

"There must be a shortening of working hours in all fields of endeavor in order that we may provide remunerative employment for every man and woman who is ready and anxious to proffer their services.

"The firemen advocate an eight-hour working day in the fire departments as a concrete proposal for the solution of this economic problem, because it will be the direct means of placing thousands of men in positions where the attendant purchasing power will in turn be of direct benefit to the local merchant and storekeeper."

Vincent J. Kane, vice-president of the Fire Fighters, also spoke, giving the message of unity and service to the public as exemplified by the Fire Fighters. He pointed out that at the present time his organization comprises some 326 allied locals and state associations. "It is inconceivable that any fire department should not be an integral part of this movement," he said.

The talks were made in conjunction with a musical program presented by the Uniformed Firemen's Glee club of New York City.

Employers Force Long Hours Despite Large Output and Jobless Army

The determination of those who own our industrial establishments to appropriate for themselves the vast increased in the amount of commodities produced by the workers and to refuse practically any reduction in the work-week is expressed with statistical emphasis by the report of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to the federation's 1931 convention.

In discussing the relatively small increase of the workers' leisure by the decrease in the length of the work week the council says:

"Because of the increase in productivity in manufacturing industry, work which took the average man a 59-hour week in 1899 could be done in 47 hours in 1919, but the work-week in manufacturing was actually shortened only from 59 to 52 hours.

"In 1929, work which took the average man a 52-hour week in 1919 could be done in 34 hours, but the work-week in manufacturing industry was actually shortened only to 50 hours. That is, an 18-hour decrease in necessary work time was compensated for by only a two-hour decrease in actual work hours.

"This development in manufacturing is typical of other industries except where unions have shortened work hours through the drive for the five-day week."

The decision of the owners of industry to make millions of dollars in addition to profits by holding the length of the work week up to 50 hours despite the wholesale increase in the workers' productivity enabled the employers to dismiss thousands of workers and throw them into the army of the jobless. On this point, the council says:

"The shortening of the necessary work time without corresponding adjustment in hours of work resulted in increasing technological unemployment. Even in 1929, the year of greatest industrial activity since 1920, there were 2,400,000 unemployed. This is an increase of 1,000,000 unemployed persons since 1920."

In connection with the executive council's statistics it may be pointed out that under our present economic system the manufacturing establishments are the private property of stockholders and operated solely for the benefit of the stockholders. Management is vested in small groups of stockholders who own or control a majority of the voting stock and select the executive officials.

Except where they are coerced by statute law, or, as the council says, influenced by strong trade unions, the length of the work day and the work week for the millions of workers is decreed by the dictatorial authority of the executive officials of the corporations.

It was the owners of industry, acting through the executive officials of industrial corporations, who decreed that in 1929 the work week should be 50 hours, although the workers produced as much in 34 hours as they produced in 59 hours in 1899.

Even now, with an army of between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 unemployed compelling an unparalleled nation-wide drive for charity funds to keep them from starving, the owners of industry refuse to declare the five-day week to atone in part for their anti-social and unpatriotic long work day and work week policy of the last thirty years.

MACHINERY BARRED IN JOBLESS RELIEF PROJECT

Wilmington, Del.—Gov. C. D. Buck has approved a project for the construction of highways in Delaware without the use of machinery as a practical method of providing the maximum amount of work for the unemployed.

The plan embraces the construction of 18 miles of roadway of the dual type. The project already approved will cost $1,000,000 and give work to about 700 men for three years.

Included in Gov. Buck's unemployment relief program is the construction of sidewalks along the state roads to insure the safety of pedestrians. Employment will be limited to bona fide residents of Delaware.

The United States bureau of standards recently announced that it had successfully manufactured a type of paper made solely of cotton fiber in its mill in Washington that will insure the safekeeping of records, particularly those placed in cornerstones, for hundreds of years.

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or the is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the oth fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injus tice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be repre sented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for th to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your o ganization, and non-attendance of union meetings on you part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinio after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you t concur in what has been done and work in harmony wit the officers and other members of your union.

STAGE SET FOR ANNUAL APPEAL FOR CHARITIES

Community Chest Drive Begins Monday.

INSTITUTIONS TO BE BENEFICIARIES

General Realization of "Greatest Need" Lends Hope to Organization.

Beginning Monday morning, and continuing throughout next week, or until the required amount is pledged, the annual drive of the Chattanooga Community Chest will be staged, and plans which have been in the making for weeks have resulted in a strong organization for the appeal to Chattanoogans in this time of greatest emergency.

The goal set is the same as for last year, although it is certain that the greater demands will be made upon each of the charitable organizations during the coming winter months.

Appeal for support of various community drives is nation-wide, and leaders in various walks of life, including President Hoover himself, are pleading for a realization of the necessity for those in more fortunate circumstances to contribute generously toward the prevention of starvation and want.

Chest officials Thursday issued the following statement for readers of The Labor World concerning the campaign of next week:

"In the same way that a doctor diagnoses a case of illness, an accountant checks muddled figures, and a lawyer gives legal advice, so experienced welfare and relief workers care and readjust distressed families and individuals.

"In Chattanooga the Community Chest, with its twenty-two agencies, furnishes the facilities and machinery for relieving with expediency and despatch those men, women and children who find themselves in need of neighborly help from those who are more fortunate.

"President James R. Angell, of Yale university, recently stated, 'At a time when resources are strained to the utmost in supplying demands for relief, the knowledge of the experienced welfare worker is essential. It prevents duplication of effort, avoids overemphasis on one line of work at the expense of others which are equally necessary, and safeguards community committees against the influence of groups whose good intentions are based upon sentiment rather than upon bed-rock knowledge and common sense.

"Welfare leaders have in their possession valuable experience from past emergencies. They know where the greatest strain may come. They know where help is most urgently needed. They have been working toward the long-term welfare program that the community's future will not be neglected in the midst of dramatic campaigns for emergency relief.

"The loyalty and efficiency of welfare workers have been proven by acid tests during the present crisis. Overworked, confronted with increasing burdens, and often inadequately paid, they have carried on with courage and understanding.

"In the face of the more spectacular needs for direct relief, community programs must not overlook provision for organizations engaged in building up health, providing recreation and strengthening morale.

"Distressing as is the present situation, it yet offers an opportunity, a challenge, both to the local committee and to the nation, to awaken to civic and group responsibilities. The new quickened national consciousness. Out of the present crisis serves to emphasize the necessity and the goodness of community planning and community thinking.

"The present emergency may in a way contribute to social betterment in the future.'

"In mapping a program of relief for last winter's emergency the citizens' relief committee followed this line of reasoning precisely. The emergency relief work was carried forward through the channels of the regular established agencies of the community.

"Many people have stated that the ready willingness of the relief committee to work through the chest agencies is nothing less than an indication of the absolute necessity for these agencies at all times.

"The twenty-two agencies of the Chattanooga Community Chest extend the following types of service: family relief, child-care, sick relief, care for the aged, care and protection for delinquent and wayward girls, settlement house facilities, care and protection for underprivileged women and girls.

"In all of these services are essential Chattanooga's unfortunate citizens are to be given a helping hand. The forward carrying forward of this winter's relief work now depends on the people who can afford to give through the Community Chest."

Washerwoman Finds Law Truly "Majestic"

Court Holds It Has No Jurisdiction in Amounts Under $300 and Ella Howell Loses Claim for $180 Insurance.

Cincinnati, O., Oct. 22.—Ella Howell, Cincinnati washer woman, will not get the money an insurance firm owes her, but she now realizes what politicians mean when they speak of the law's "majesty." It happened this way: Ella was insured against illness—or so she believed—until the American Casualty company, which "sold" her the policy, refused to pay the claim. It was only $180, but big corporations, anxious to "protect" the other customers, must not do things rashly.

The company could afford to go to law—it hires its lawyers by the year. Ella got judgment for $86.24. The company appealed and the higher court hearkened to its prayer for dismissal—"for want of jurisdiction as the amount was less than $300." In other words, if Ella had cornered the clothes washing industry, driving every competitor to the wall, justice would not have been so nearsighted. Ella's $180, however, is too small to bother about.

"Why don't you incorporate?" somebody asked the washerwoman. But that again is something Ella will have to learn in detail before she can understand high finance.

Building Groups Band to Promote Industry's Good

Labor Organizations Included in New Construction League, Formed for Co-operative Action and Service.

New York City, Oct. 15.—Nineteen groups of the construction industry, with more than 100,000 members, and representing billions of capital, have formed an alliance "to co-operate for the common good of the industry and better to serve the nation," it is announced by the American Institute of Architects.

Robert D. Kohn, of New York, president of the institute, has been chosen general chairman of the provisional organization, which will be known as the Construction league, and the scope of which embraces a vast army of workers, including the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor. The league will be incorporated in the District of Columbia, and will maintain headquarters in Washington. The number of member associations will eventually be increased to thirty-five.

A joint secretariat will be composed of: E. J. Harding, Washington, D. C., managing director of the Associated General Contractors of America; E. C. Kemper, Washington, D. C., executive secretary of the American Institute of Architects; L. W. Wallace, Washington, D. C., executive secretary of the American Engineering council.

League's Purposes Outlined.

"An effort is to be made to create a medium for co-ordinated action within the building industry," said a statement by Mr. Kohn outlining the purposes of the league. "Each member organization will send representatives to periodic conferences, at which reports aimed to improve the public service of the industry will be submitted.

"Matters of great moment to the entire building industry are under way. Some are being promoted by the architects, others by the contractors, and still others by a score of more important professional or trade organizations of the industry. Each is being carried on with very little, if any, support from the other groups.

"The plan of co-operation contemplated by the Construction league is designed to achieve something more than merely to advance certain desirable pieces of work being done by one or another group. It is evident that in the process of working together to help these enterprises every group will get a better idea of what its place is in the economy of the industry.

Must Benefit Public.

"Little by little each group will find itself depending on the others for criticism of methods and aims and for support for those of its purposes which meet with common approval. And to secure such approval these purposes cannot be selfish. They must be oriented towards eventual benefit to the public at large."

The list of organizations represented includes the American Federation of Labor, Building Department, and the United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters.

BRITISH UNION MEMBERSHIP.

At the sixty-third congress of the British Trade Union congress, held recently, 587 delegates represented 3,719,401 members, while at the congress of 1930, 606 delegates had represented 3,744,320 members. The slight decline is chiefly due to the difficult position of various industries, notably textiles. Apart from these industries, the special organization campaign of the general council last year brought in no fewer than 100,000 new members.

ASK APPROPRIATION FOR IMMEDIATE USE

"Hungry Millions Must Be Fed," Labor's Chief Is Directed to Tell Nation's Lawmakers.

Washington, Oct. 22.—While putting all possible energy behind its program for the development of work and for the creation of a better balance in industry through higher wages and decreased hours of work, the American Federation of Labor will demand huge sums, immediately available, from congress for prompt relief and to supplement local relief.

This additional program was adopted by the executive council following convention adjournment. President Green was directed to go before congress with labor's demand for "many millions" of dollars. "Hunger must be relieved," President Green will tell congress.

Employment Program Approved.

In the final session of the convention the council's entire employment program was enacted into federation law, including reaffirmation for the legalizing of 2.75 beer. The council's report on this issue was sustained and two resolutions of more drastic provisions were defeated. President Green said the legalizing of moderate beer might "be the spark" that would change the whole course of the industrial depression.

In the final session President Green, Secretary Morrison, Treasurer Martin F. Ryan and all vice-presidents were re-elected. The vice-presidents are: Frank Duffy, T. A. Rickert, Matthew Woll, James Wilson, John Coefield, Arthur O. Wharton, Joseph N. Weber, G. M. Bugniazet.

Cincinnati will entertain the next convention.

Hunger Must Be Relieved.

Following the council meeting after convention adjournment President Green issued the following statement, explaining the instructions under which he will appear before congress as soon as it assembles in December:

"Hunger must be relieved, food and clothing and shelter must be supplied the needy.

"The executive council appreciated the fact that local communities will be called upon to do their full share. Likewise the municipal and state governments will be called upon to respond in a liberal way; but owing to the fact that the heavy demands have been made upon local communities for the relief of unemployment since 1929, it is the opinion of the council that the federal government should and must respond through a generous appropriation of federal funds in order to assist and help in a full and complete way the local communities throughout the nation.

To Ask Big Relief Fund.

"For this reason the executive council directed the president of the Federation of Labor to present to congress a strong appeal for the appropriation of a large sum, amounting to many millions of dollars, to be used as an unemployment relief fund and to be used in supplementing the moneys appropriated by local communities, city and state governments.

"It is the firm opinion of the executive council that congress is ready to take such action and that when it meets in December it can be relied upon to make liberal appropriations for unemployment relief and to devise ways and means by which the money can be raised.

"The needs are very great, distress is widespread; consequently the council is fully convinced that congress will respond in a most whole-hearted and generous way."

Coal Problems Discussed.

The last day of the convention was featured by a speech by Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, who criticized the federal government's handling of the union's request for a conference of operators and miners to discuss the situation in the bituminous coal industry.

Mr. Kennedy told the convention that the only way the soft coal industry can be stabilized is by stabilization of labor costs and the only way this can be accomplished is by joint agreement between opeators and organized miners. Recalling that the union had asked President Hoover to call a conference of operators, miners and government officials, he said:

"Secretaries Lamont and Doak practically put the question of a conference to a referendum vote of the coal operators. We knew what the result would be before the vote was announced, as we knew that the Mellon interests, controlling the Pittsburgh Coal company, and others associated with them would not vote with the conference. There was a majority of operators against the conference and the president declined to call it.

Action Called Imperative.

"The bituminous coal industry is so disorganized that something must be done at once and the union is ready to do its share," Kennedy continued.

"The question involved in the opening and developing of new mines when there are too many mines already is one that can be solved only on a national basis. The federal government might better concern itself with trying to stabilize industry in the United States than with seeking to stabilize the rest of the world."

Kennedy concluded by announcing that the miners would fight for passage of the Watson bill providing for control of coal by a government commission.

The convention declared that before foreign nations asked the United States to forego "just claims," meaning war debts, these nations would have to abandon policies which have made for discord and resulting financial burdens.

A resolution asking a bar on immigration from all nations except Canada was approved. The resolution asks that entry of Mexican laborers be prevented before 10 a.m. daily, long after the workday begins.

President Hoover was thanked for appointing John R. Alpine, a former member of the federation's executive council, to establish a nation-wide employment service.

Organized labor was asked to co-operate with the federal government service and with the state agencies created under the department of labor.

Injunction Bill Praised.

The delegates commended the anti-injunction bill, which was drawn up at the direction of the executive council and which will be pressed in the next session of congress. The council was left free to use its judgment as to any possible changes that may be made in the bill.

The federation backed the bituminous coal workers in their efforts to win recognition of their union through the coal fields and their attempt to stabilize the industry through fixing adequate wage rates.

Railway Workers Supported.

Support was voted the railway workers in their efforts to protect their members from unemployment, due to competing transportation factors.

Labor's "nonpartisan political policy," of "rewarding our friends and punishing our enemies" was reaffirmed and it was decided "to leave no stone unturned" to return a congress at the next election favorable to labor's program.

Indorsement was voted of the principle of state income taxes so graduated as to levy higher percentages on larger incomes.

Fight for Mooney Approved.

Efforts to free Tom Mooney, serving a life term as a result of conviction on perjured evidence in the bomb explosions in San Francisco in 1916, were approved, but members were warned not to contribute funds except to the collecting organizations approved by the federation or its affiliates.

AGAIN HEADS FEDERATION

WILLIAM GREEN

Election of William Green to succeed himself as president of the American Federation of Labor brought the convention to a practical close, though important business remained to follow the election.

The convention had recorded its enthusiastic approval of the executive council's recommended immediate and long-term programs for employment stimulation and stabilization and had placed American organized labor firmly on record for an industrial program outstanding among other national programs as the one important example of industrial action and self-reliance.

Public Job Agencies Find Work for 94,246

More Than 42 Per Cent of Persons Registering Placed With Employers, U. S. Employment Service Reports.

Washington, Oct. 22.—In July, 94,246 persons were placed in jobs by co-operating state, city and federal employment offices, representing 42.5 per cent of the 221,244 registrations, the United States employment service reports.

Work was found for 85.7 per cent of the 109,922 men and women sent to prospective employers, the report says.

California led all other states in the number of placements, with 9,761. Registrations there totaled 10,734, requests for help 11,087, and references 11,033. This record was made by 14 employment offices. Five other states placed more than 6,000 persons in July. These were New York, New Jersey, Oregon, Ohio and Illinois.

The 14 Ohio employment offices covered in the service's data effected 8,068 placements out of 16,377 registrations, and 8,620 requests for employes. Illinois accounted for 7,754 placements, while registrations numbered 21,663 and offers of jobs numbered 8,253.

Five Oregon employment offices placed 7,615 persons, while only 5,852 were registered during the month. Placements in New York, by 15 agencies, totaled 7,114 in July. Registrations totaled 28,178.

Out of 14,460 registrations, 13 New Jersey offices found work for 6,491 persons.

Workers of Big Corporations Hit By Market Slump

Heavy Losses, Not Fat Profits, for Toilers Who Purchased Shares of Three Industrial Giants.

Washington, Oct. 13.—A loss in market value running to more than fifty million dollars has been suffered by employe stock owners in only three of the big corporations offering that device to employes, as a result of the stock market drop to date, according to figures compiled by International Labor News Service.

The three corporations are American Telephone and Telegraph, United States Steel and Pennsylvania railroad. There are many other corporations whose stock has been offered to employes as a "good thing" and as an influence expected to bind the worker to the corporation. But these three are outstanding, because of size and for other reasons.

The estimate of fifty million dollars is based upon the assumption that employes own an average of two shares each. They may own more than that amount, on the average.

Big Slump in A. T. & T.

American Telephone and Telegraph has 110,000 employes stock owners. On Oct. 2, 1929, A. T. & T. stock closed at $294 per share. On Oct. 7, 1931, it closed at $130, to use whole dollars instead of fractions of pennies. Fractions are omitted in all of these computations. The loss in value per share has been $164, which represents the loss per share per employe, providing the employe should now wish to sell, or have to sell.

United States Steel has 57,109 employe stock owners. On Oct. 2, 1929, Steel closed at $143 per share. On Oct. 7, 1931, it closed at $68. The loss per share was $75 and that is the loss each employe has suffered per share of stock held.

"Pennsy's" Loss $68 Per Share.

Pennsylvania railroad has 51,351 employe stock owners. Pennsylvania stock closed at $101 on Oct. 2, 1929, while on Oct. 7, 1931, it closed at $33, a loss of $68 per share, which is the loss per employe per share.

Based on the conservative estimate of two shares owned by each employe stock owner, the total loss suffered by employe owners of these three corporations is $51,616,586.

The market collapse that has taken place since Oct. 2, 1929, has not only crashed the values of the stocks, but many of the employes have been thrown out of employment, while many more, including all the employes of U. S. Steel, have had their wages cut.

Total Loss Staggering.

The picture painted to the employes when stock was sold to them was one of participation in gains. Beside the gains they made, or might have made, the losses they have suffered have been like mountains as to mole hills. They have lost stock values, they have lost in unemployment and they have lost in reduced wages—a total loss that cannot be computed on the basis of any known statistics, but that is staggering when loaded onto the backs of wage-earners.

DANISH UNIONS GAIN.

Thanks to an intensive organization campaign, the Dutch national trade union center has increased its membership during the period 1927-1931 from 200,000 to 300,000 members. In a special appeal to all members who have helped to secure this very satisfactory result, the executive council expresses its thanks for their activities.

LABOR SURVEY NOTES SIGNS OF IMPROVEMENT

Underlying Factors Indicate Gains.

WAGE MAINTENANCE IS HELD ESSENTIAL

Steel Corporation Severely Criticized for Pay-Cut Policy.

Washington, Oct. 22.—Unquestionably underlying factors in the business situation are gradually improving, the American Federation of Labor monthly survey says, though it declares business in the United States has been passing through a "mild panic."

Keys to business improvement are listed by the survey as follows: Debts are being paid off, replacement demand is accumulating; consumer industries continue to increase production; business firms have been improving efficiency; many inefficient units have been eliminated by failure, plans are being discussed to assure jobs for workers this winter.

"These," the survey says, "are influences which create business recovery; it should be remembered that they are progressing steadily although certain other factors at present prevent them from becoming fully effective."

Relief Measures Urged.

The federation estimates the number of unemployed at 5,600,000 and declares that measures to maintain workers' income and provide work for the unemployed are of immediate urgency.

Severe criticism of the United States Steel corporation and Bethlehem Steel for reducing wages 10 per cent is contained in the survey, which says that U. S. Steel apparently intends to take $45,000,000 out of surplus this year to make dividend payments while refusing to use but $5,000,000 of surplus to maintain wages at the old level.

In the case of Bethlehem it is held that surplus apparently will be dipped into to the extent of $17,700,000 for dividend payments by the end of the year and that it would have taken but $3,500,000 of surplus to avoid lowering wages.

"In both cases wages were cut to reduce a deficit created by paying dividends which the company had not earned," the survey said. "Business in general will not benefit from these cuts through price reductions, for the companies are making every effort to hold prive levels."

Emphasis on the importance of the visit of Premier Laval, of France, is led up to by the contention that segregation of the larger part of the world's gold supply in the United States and France was a leading factor in forcing England and some other European countries off the gold standard.

Visit of "Greatest Significance."

"Since France and the United States hold the key to the situation," the survey says, "the visit of Premier Laval on Oct. 22 is of the greatest significance. Readjustments of war debts to the nations' capacity to pay may be considered, coupled with reduction in armaments. Already Germany and France have established an economic commission to study depression problems, an important step toward concerted effort to deal with the world situation. It is obvious here in America that we cannot recover until there is more basis for world confidence."

The federation said that business in this country "has been passing through a mild panic."

"The situation abroad, railroad difficulties, wage cuts and unemployment all have contributed to destroy confidence," it added. "Fear creates dangerous situations, threatening crisis. Many people, frightened for the safety of their funds, have withdrawn their money from banks; bank runs have forced the banks to get ready cash by selling securities for any price they would bring.

"Not only has this caused heavy losses because security prices are very low; the dumping of securities on the market has driven prices even lower, and the bankers' difficulties have prevented the granting of credit for business undertakings."

By giving banks loans on assets that are sound but which cannot be discounted at the federal reserve banks, the federation says, it is hoped that the half billion dollar bank pool created by private bankers at the suggestion of President Hoover will go far to check runs on banks and stock market declines and enable banks to grant credit for business undertakings.

TO SEEK PUBLICATION OF MOONEY REPORT

Senator Thomas D. Schall, of Minnesota, has announced that as soon as congress meets he will offer a resolution providing for the publication of the Wickersham committee report on the Mooney-Billings case, written by Walter H. Pollak and Carl Stern, New York lawyers. Most of the other Wickersham documents have been published and distributed, but the Mooney-Billings report, although printed, has not been made public.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter 1
PART III: THE THOUGHT TREND OF JESUS' MIND

4. Jesus and the Father. On reading any one of the four gospels of the New Testament one is impressed by two facts. (1) That Jesus' burning desire was to make plain to men their soul's relationship to their heavenly Father, and (2) that Jesus was always on the alert to take advantage of an opportunity to impress His hearers with the actuality of this relationship.

WM. L. MOSS

The church has rightly made Jesus' teaching concerning the sonship of man as the keynote of its teaching, although perhaps it has slightly obscured other equally important phases of His teaching.

If Jesus, and later His church, place so much emphasis on the sonship of men in their relationship to the Father then would it not be to the enrichment of our knowledge if we investigated the thought trend of Jesus' mind concerning the subject of not only men's but His own relationship to the Father? Feeling that most everybody who reads these articles from week to week would answer in the affirmative I shall proceed along the lines of such an investigation for two or three issues of The Labor World.

First, let us establish in our minds the nature of Jesus' own relationship to the Father as asserted by Himself and as voluntarily declared by those with whom He walked, talked and lived, both as disciples and casual observers of His ministry.

Second, let us draw our conclusions from the evidence brought in.

The Primary Again

Every once in a while the question of abolishing primaries bobs up for discussion.

The latest flurry comes in a suggestion that Hamilton county democrats revert to the old boss-controlled convention system for naming party candidates for county offices.

Hamilton republicans still maintain this discredited system.

There is one republican office-holder in the courthouse, who, it might be said in passing, was unquestionably the choice of hundreds of democrats as well as republicans.

The present agitation is said to have originated in the desire of two county office-holders to economize in their campaign for re-election, but developments have shown that their opinions are by no means unanimously approved by their fellow-officials.

Charlie Taylor, sheriff, who will also stand for re-election next year, dissents, holding that the people should continue to have the right to choose their own candidates.

Which again raises the sheriff's batting average.

He was one of three office-holders who refused to enter into the more or less ill-fated county wage-cutting scheme.

Judge Will Cummings also is quoted as opposing the suggestion. Score one for the judge.

It has long been the contention of organized labor that the convention system for selecting party nominees is rotten, and there is an endless chain of evidence to support that contention.

There is plenty of room for criticism of the primary system as it is operated. But its imperfections are subject to correction by the whole people.

And whether or not the whole people see fit to correct these evils, it still remains their business.

Lethargy or apathy on the part of the rank and file of any political party should not be seized upon as an excuse for a group of political bosses to hand-pick candidates for public office, with all the attendant rottenness which that system brings.

Correct the evils of the primary system. Let the voters do it.

WORKERS' "PROSPERITY."

The official ballyhooers of employers' organizations and their satellites never weary of harping on the alleged prosperity of the workers in the United States.

In some quarters there is the conviction that this "prosperity" is largely a myth and belched forth as a smoke screen to conceal the tremendous profits appropriated by those who own industry and by ownership have the legal power to exploit labor often to an extent little less severe than the exploitation imposed on the slave workers under the slave labor system of wealth production.

This conviction is confirmed by the figures on income distribution presented by the American Federation of Labor Executive Council to the 1931 convention of the federation.

The figures are compiled from the income tax figures filed with the United States internal revenue bureau. Referring to these figures the council said:

From 1919 to 1927 the income of the average person receiving more than $5,000 a year increased by $2,151 a year; the income of the average wage-earner increased by $176 per year. That is, the average man having more than $5,000 yearly gained twelve times as much as the average wage-earner.

Very few wage-earners have an income of more than $5,000 a year. We may take this group then as representing income receivers outside the wage-earner and the small salaried group.

In 1927, the proportion of wage-earners to those with higher incomes was approximately as 30 to 1.

The federal income tax statements report a little over 900,000 returns which show an income of $5,000 a year or more; their average income was $15,388.

There were over 27,000,000 wage-earners whose average income was $1,205. Would it not be possible to balance the gain of this lower income group and at the same time increase the total?

In the eight years from 1919 to 1927, total wages paid in the United States increased by $9,855,000,000 a year, while total income paid to those with more than $5,000 increased by $5,554,000,000 a year.

Employer statisticians and economists, and those who believe that the principles in the Declaration of Independence and the constitution fully warrant a wealth production system which naturally enables the rich to grow richer and compels the poor to grow poorer, have not been very prolific in analyses of these incomes designed to show the effect of the unbalanced distribution of the increased productivity of the workers on the relative status of the wealth producers. The council fills the vacuum with the following conclusion:

This unequal distribution of the nation's income throws the industrial mechanism out of balance. A large proportion of the income of the rich is reinvested and goes to increase the capacity of industry to produce. When the distribution of wealth is unbalanced industry's producing capacity soon outstrips the buying power of the public.

The council also throws the spotlight on the transcendent inefficiency of those who own and operate industry in taking millions of dollars of their profits from the wealth produced by the workers and wasting huge amounts in building plants so much beyond the consuming capacity of the people that one would be justified in saying that their plant extension engineers were post-graduates of paycopathic wards:

In June, 1929, at the very peak of our present industrial boom when industry reached the highest production in its history, our mills and factories were so much overbuilt that even then they were nowhere near producing up to capacity.

The rates of operation in a number of different industries for which we have figures are given below. If figures for other products were available they would show that this same condition ran throughout industry: Cotton finishing, 60 per cent of capacity; silk spinning, 63 per cent; steel castings, 80 per cent; steel barrels, 62 per cent; oil refining, 83 per cent; paper box board, 77 per cent; Portland cement, 81 per cent; glassware for lights, 46 per cent; glass containers, 82 per cent.

From this wholesale victimizing the workers with small earnings, favoring the owners of industry with large profits, and the waste of industry's profits in unneeded factories, the council reaches the conclusion that indisputable facts are the first requirement in building up institutions to prevent unemployment in a system whose engineers and owners are constantly at work on that form of "progress" which consists in developing systems purposely designed to deprive workers of their jobs and hence of the right to live honestly.

It therefore recommends the creation of a "central fact-finding agency which will measure progress and balance gains in producing power against gains in buying power and the shortening of necessary work time against actual shortening of the work week."

Sales Tax Opposed By AFL Convention

The convention of the American Federation of Labor denounced the sales tax as "an attempt to place an additional tax, in a particularly aggravating way, upon those least able to bear it," and placed organized labor in complete opposition to the enactment of sales tax laws. The action of the convention was an approval of the position of the Executive Council on the sales tax question.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Business depressions often deal a blow to community programs for recreation, education and public health. There is a strong tendency to concentrate on providing absolute "essentials" for the people and the vital importance of so-called nonessentials in keeping up morale and courage is often forgotten. As Linton B. Swift, executive secretary of the Family Welfare Association of America, said recently:

"In a time of unemployment depression, as in any time when human beings are brought face to face with the stark realities of existence and when the fight to live is sharp and bitter, the need for recreation, education and good health is paramount. These are the things that keep men, faced with great odds, sane and balanced. Only the most demanding calls for the actual necessities of life should make us neglect the elements of play and character-strengthening as a necessary part of the community's good life."

It is generally pointed out that one bright spot in the depression picture is the growing acceptance of the five-day working week. It may be a considerable time before the five-day week becomes the accepted thing, but there is no doubt that the present depression, coupled with the present demand of organized labor for the shorter week, and the tremendous increase in recent years, has greatly hastened the day when most workers will have two days of rest a week. This is a boon that will not easily be taken away from the workers and will mark at least one benefit derived partly from the depression.

Night work in the cotton mills of the Piedmont section of the south has recently been increased. It is said by those familiar with the situation that while few women have been employed at night, many boys are being used to replace the women workers. Union men and some of the more progressive employers have repeatedly pointed out that unless night work is cut out permanently overproduction is inevitable.

The situation shows that the much-touted elimination of women in night work has not ended the overproduction evil. Unless night work is stopped entirely, overproduction with its attendant starvation wages, mill deficits and cut-throat competition will continue. The remedy is of course trade union organization of the mill workers, which would stabilize the whole textile manufacturing industry.

"The orgy of wage-cutting indulged in by the major American corporations was observed with less surprise than keen regret by those interested in the American worker. While it was general knowledge that wages were being slashed by legions of less representative industries throughout the country, it was hoped that the major units of the steel and automobile industries would continue to make some semblance of fairness to labor in view of the pledges made at the president's conference, November, 1929, that everything would be done to preserve the prevailing wage scale during the period of depression.

"The sufferings of the present depression period will have been worth the enduring if they only bring home to the American workingman, whatever his trade or occupation may be, that if labor is to become articulate against injustice and unfairness, it must be organized."

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

IT is indeed difficult for us who have never known any other state of affairs than free public school instruction to realize that up until the year 1828, and even as late as 1833, organized wage earners were engaged in a nationwide battle to establish public schools.

For years previous to the dates just mentioned organized labor had taken "Equality among men results only from education" and "The educated man is a good citizen, the uneducated is an undesirable member of the body politic" as its shibboleth in its efforts to bring about democratic education for the masses. A resolution adopted by a meeting of workingmen held in New York City in the fall of 1829 went so far as to declare "that the most grievous species of inequality is that produced by inequality in education," and closed with the statement that the workingmen regarded education as "the only effectual remedy" for "almost every species of injustice."

Hardly a meeting of organized laboring men of that period was held at which the question of free public schools was not discussed, and everywhere speeches and resolutions had as their main theme the thought that if the masses were given free and universal educational suffrage a large part of the country's ills would vanish as the mists before the sun.

The direct influence for the establishment of free schools rightfully belongs to and in all honesty must be given to organized labor. Undoubtedly free schools would have come in time even though organized labor had not fought for and won this phase of our political suffrage, yet until organized labor did bring about the free school system in the United States no concerted effort had been made by any national organization, group or class other than labor itself.

By what it does for you. What, in your home or office, gives you so much for so little as your telephone? . . .

Day or night, rain or shine, with the vast network of the Bell system at your command, the friend in the same block and the friend across the continent are both only seconds distant.

Consider how valuable this easy means of voice-to-voice contact is to every member of the family, in widening the business horizon to make for greater profits—in extending the social circle to make for greater happiness.

Consider also that the constant improvement in the speed and clearness of the service by Bell telephone engineers has made modern American telephone service the yardstick by which the world's telephone systems are measured.

It should be remembered, too, that with all its many advantages, modern telephone service is so low in cost that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

5. We believe in the settlement of labor disputes by peaceable and conciliatory methods.
6. We believe in the mutuality of interest of all persons in industry and are opposed to those destructive forces that would decrease production at the expense of labor.
7. We believe that permanent prosperity for the wage-earner will be secured only when workers become home owners and we pledge our support to every sound movement to attain this end.
8. We believe in a wage system based on the skill and energy of the workman, insuring the advancement of the competent and stimulating the less skillful to greater efforts. We include in this a minimum scale for workmen.
9. We favor strict sanitary conditions and the adoption of modern methods for checking contagious disease, and for the protection of the lives of working people.
10. We favor the safeguarding of the lives of workmen in mills, mines and factories, and laws that will require such safety devices as may be necessary to bring this about and enforce fair conditions of employment for labor.

Peruchi Players Welcomed Back By Lovers of the Spoken Drama

Enthusiastic audiences continued to greet the Peruchi Players at the Memorial Auditorium this week, in the second presentation of the current run, "Nice Women." The play was acclaimed one of the brighest, fastest-moving efforts yet presented by the Peruchis in their many offerings for the approval of Chattanooga audiences.

The Peruchi Players, who enjoyed a record run last year at the Bijou theater, and whose departure following that engagement was the cause of widespread regret, were induced by a group of local lovers of the spoken drama to return to this city for another indefinite engagement at the Little Theater in the auditorium.

"Pa" Peruchi, known throughout the south an an "old master" in the production of stock plays, has assembled a company of artists of which any city twice the size of Chattanooga might be proud, and many who have seen these players during the past two weeks contend that the present company, as a whole, is even superior to that which won the hearts of Chattanoogans last winter. And each and every one is, of course, a member of the Actors' Equity, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor. Besides these union artists, it also might be mentioned that a not inconsiderable number of musicians and stage hands have through the coming of the Peruchis solved the unemployment problem for some time to come. A seven-piece orchestra, headed by William Krug, is a feature of the nightly programs which has received generous applause of the patrons at every performance.

The Peruchi Players are a distinct asset to Chattanooga from a civic standpoint, and a payroll of some $1,200 per week is by no means a small item for local merchants to consider in these days when prosperity is still around the corner.

Next week the Peruchis will offer a new mystery thriller, which is declared to be a "scream" from a comedy standpoint also, entitled, "Out of the Night."

Jurist Declares For Outlawing Hated Contract

Pennsylvania Supreme Court Justice Dissents Bitterly from Decision Upholding Injunction Against Hosiery Workers.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 21.—"A person's freedom to join a labor union or any other organization cannot be bartered away by any contract for the protection of which a court of conscience should ever give any solicitude," Judge George W. Maxey, of the Pennsylvania supreme court, declares in dissenting from the majority opinion of the court upholding the injunction in the Nazareth hosiery workers' case.

Judge Maxey's opinion is one of the most sizzling attacks on the "yellow dog" contract ever made in the United States. He denounces the "yellow dog" as an oppressive bargain which should have no standing in a court of equity and assails the injunction issued in the Nazareth case as an indefensible attack on freedom of speech. He held there was fraud and duress in the Nazareth "yellow dog" contract, as it threatened the wage-earner with the loss of his job unless he signed it.

What makes Judge Maxey's opinion remarkable is the fact that he is a conservative judge and Luzurne county republican boss.

Labor Approves Inheritance Tax

The extension of inheritance and estate tax laws and re-enactment of the gift tax were demanded by the convention of the American Federation of Labor, in accordance with the recommendation of the Executive Council of the federation. In support of its action the convention declared that "taxation should be aimed at acquired wealth and not at the consuming power of the nation's wage-earners."

WAGE CUTS IN AUGUST.

According to "Facts for Workers," the monthly economic newsletter published by the Labor Bureau, Inc., New York City, "The number of wage cuts recorded by the United States bureau of labor statistics between June 15 and July 15 were eleven more than during the preceding 30-day period—242 against 231. The situation, as viewed through preliminary reports of the bureau's compilations, was perhaps slightly better during the month ended Aug. 15. But, as is now known, this was but the calm before the storm. In September the United States Steel corporation posted a notice of a 10 per cent cut for all its wage-earners, and this lead was promptly followed by other steel producers and by other industries."

Grim Reaper Calls Robert L. Keith

Painters Adopt Resolutions Deploring Passing of Brother Member.

Passing of Robert L. Keith, who died last Thursday at his home, 1901 South Orchard Knob avenue, is deplored in resolutions adopted by Local 226, Painters and Decorators, Thursday night, and which were prepared by a committee consisting of Roy Bowen, A. L. Surrett and Homer Tarwater.

Funeral services were held from the Oak Grove Baptist church, of which deceased was a member, Friday afternoon, with the following acting as pallbearers: Active—Joe Farmer, John Smith, H. E., C. H., F. S. and P. P. Thurston; honorary, Joe Eaves, O. C. Mabee, W. D. Canady, E. K. Witt, Horton Morrison, George Tarpley, Frank Fox and Henry Casey.

Union Right to Decline Work Is Issue in Case

Painters Battle for Right to Finish Kitchen Cabinets Built in Other States--Tribunal Grants Review of Case.

Washington, Oct. 21.—A victory that may lead to one of the most important labor decisions yet rendered by the United States supreme court was scored here this week when that tribunal granted a writ of ceritorari to Painters' District Council No. 14, Chicago, in the case brought against it by the government for alleged action in restraint of trade.

The case came up from the Northern division of Illinois district court where Judge Walter C. Lindley had decided against the union. The case involved the finishing of ready-made kitchen cabinets. The union contended that these cabinets, which were interstate commerce articles, should be set in place with only a protecting coat of paint and should be finished on the job. The factory desired to ship them completely finished and the government charged that the union's refusal to do other work in buildings wherein cabinets were installed completely finished constituted undue restraint of trade.

Granting of the writ of certiorari means that the supreme court will hear the case on its merits, giving the union a chance to establish the merit of its position before this tribunal. Had the writ been denied the lower court would have been sustained and the case would have been closed. The union now has its day in the supreme court.

The Electrical Workers did not fare so well. Its Local Union No. 134, Chicago, appealed in the noted Western Union case, but the supreme court denied a writ of certiorari, sustaining Circuit Judge Evans in his injunction against the union. The case involved refusal of union electricians to work where non-union Western Union employes were at work installing call boxes.

At the same time the supreme court sustained the Indiana special tax on chain stores, vindicating the right of states to reasonably tax such chains.

PICAYUNE CONGRESSMEN.

"Owing to the law for a shorter work day on Saturdays for postoffice employes," declared the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in ts report to the 1931 conventon of the federation, "congress refused to increase the wages of the postoffice laborers."

The Junior Times is becoming quite popular among the Times employes. "It is not a puff sheet for the benefit of the bosses," states the Junior staff, and every issue bears out that statement. Every issue contains write-ups about the various departments and the work done in those departments, and write-ups about different employes. Personals about the doings of the employes are scattered about through the paper. And it is profusely illustrated with pictures of employes and their children, And now it is going to include pictures of employes' homes.

Uncle Sam seems to be a popular boss to work for, for a number of Chattanooga printers have their applications in for an appointment to the G. P. O.

LABOR PAPERS TO GET SUPPORT OF FEDERATION

Importance of Maintenance Is Recognized.

COMMITTEE OF FIVE TO CONDUCT SURVEY

Executive Council Authorized to Act in Backing Struggling Publications.

The American Federation of Labor adopted the following resolution by W. M. Ornburn, following a favorable committee report by the committee on resolutions:

Whereas, the weekly labor press is today an indispensable part of the organized labor movement, without which there cannot be a proper distribution of information or a proper presentation of the ideals and principles of the trade union movement; and,

Whereas, the industrial depression has already made serious inroads upon the weekly labor press and promises to make still further inroads, due to the fact that great portions of local movements are impoverished through unemployment; and,

Whereas, it will be a calamity to the trade union movement and to human progress if a weakening of this vital fighting arm of our movement is permitted to suffer in this crisis; and,

Whereas, the strength of the weekly labor press is today more than ever a vital concern of our whole movement and by no means merely the concern of those individuals and local bodies that have been courageous enough to launch such publications; be it, therefore

Resolved, That the president of the American Federation of Labor is hereby directed to appoint a special committee of five, of which he shall be a member, to study the situation surrounding the weekly labor press and news service and to make recommendations to the executive council, these recommendations to be passed before the executive council prior to its winter quarterly meeting; and be it further

Resolved, That the executive council be authorized to give effect to the recommendations of the special committee so that the labor press may be strengthened.

Council Sees Labor Press as Powerful Arm

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 15.—Merited recognition of the great importance of labor papers to the cause of the workers and the valuable assistance rendered the labor press by the American Federation of Labor Weekly News Service were emphasized in the report of the Executive Council of the Federation to the 1931 convention.

"The labor papers constitute a band of sentinels on guard for the welfare of mankind," the council said. "They are an important adjunct of the organized labor movement in all branches of its activities. The Weekly News Service is published by the American Federation of Labor to assist the labor press in this work.

"Employers and the public frequently forget that wage-earners and salary-earners constitute by far the largest economic group and that, therefore, their welfare expressed in wages and hours contribute very largely to the prosperity of the entire community. The local labor papers perform the valuable function of constantly emphasizing this fact. They are a very useful medium for consistently presenting the views of the unions on industrial problems and the proper solution is of the highest interest to labor.

"The influence of the local labor press is considerably enhanced by tie-ups to local labor unions and national and international unions labor news and information which often assists in shaping and settling local labor policies.

"Few labor papers have the equipment or resources to secure material of this character. The material is prepared with regard for the established policies and requirement of the whole labor movement. Responsibility for supplying this information and publicity is a proper and necessary function of the American Federation of Labor. To perform this function the federation maintains the Weekly News Service and furnishes to the labor press without charge. Every possible support should be given to strengthen the labor press. In this work the Weekly News Service performs an increasingly valuable function."

The labor papers should be aided to give the best measure of service to the labor movement," the report concluded. "We appreciate the importance of continuing the Weekly News Service as an effective agency in this direction. Everything that adds to the strength and circulation of the labor press contributes to the strength and power of the labor movement to advance the interests of all working people. It is also an acknowledgment of the fine work performed by the labor press, whose editors too frequently serve the cause of labor without the inducement of adequate financial reward."

The 1910 convention of the American Federation of Labor authorized the publication of the Weekly News Service. The executive council began the publication in April, 1911.

Make Public New Protest On Low Wage

Starvation Pay on Government Works Again Subject of Public Discussion.

Two dollars and forty-two cents for two days and five hours' hard labor was the basis for another resolution of protest from Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night, and the resolution, released by a Central Body committee Wednesday night, again puts Chattanooga workers on record as deploring the tendency of contractors and other employers to take unfair advantage of men who are on the verge of starvation and make fat profits at the expense, possibly, of hungry women and children.

The constant reduction of wages in private industry, affecting workers who are unable to protect their interests, has become notorious, but appeals for fair dealing at least on government works have had some effect through the prevailing wage law passed by the recent congress.

The latest outrage is reported from the contract for resurfacing the Crest road, maintained by the government, on Missionary ridge. Reports of starvation-wages paid on this job have been going the rounds practically ever since the work was begun, rumors having the wages paid to laborers ranging from 10 to 15 cents per hour. Monday, however, a pay envelope was brought to Secretary Matt Gerlach which showed the recipient had earned the princely sum of $2.42, and which was declared to represent two days and five hours at the hard labor of digging postholes. Developments showed that workers were paid 11 cents each for digging the holes, and the result was a "strike" which has been given some publicity.

Following the walkout newspapers have printed statements from contractor and a sub-contractor, each of whom blames the other for the outrageous situation, and the result has been a promise that laborers will in future be paid the generous sum of $1.60 per day.

Capt. W. J. Redner, construction quartermaster for the government, was quoted in Tuesday's Times as stating that the contractor receives more than $5 for each guard rail and wire between.

Central Body's protest, prepared by a committee consisting of Matt Gerlach, W. L. Gardner and W. F. Lange, follows:

"Whereas, persistent reports have been circulated regarding alleged starvation pay offered employes on the rebuilding of the Crest road, on Missionary ridge; and,

"Whereas, latest information supplied this body through a protesting worker indicates a wage of less than $1 per day for unusually hard work; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we again raise our collective voice in protest against any such unfair, un-American and inhuman practice of taking advantage of present deplorable industrial conditions, and condemn with all the vehemence at our command any contractor or employer who is guilty of such policy."

5,600,000 Jobless, AFL Survey Declares

Washington.—There are around 5,600,000 unemployed workers in the United States, according to figures made public by the monthly survey of business of the American Federation of Labor.

"Unemployment increased again in September," the survey says. "Trade union weighted figures now show 19.5 per cent out of work as compared with 19.2 per cent in August and 18.8 per cent in July. Unemployment is now almost at last winter's peak. This increase in the number out of work in industry, together with layoffs on farms after crops are in, brings our estimate of unemployment up to 5,600,000."

"Measures to maintain workers' incomes and provide work for the unemployed are of immediate urgency," continues the survey. "Labor's constructive program includes maintaining wages, shortening hours to share work, assuring employment, creating jobs, strengthening employment agencies, financial relief from public and private funds."

The survey finds that "underlying" factors in the business situation are gradually improving.

Southern Edison Gives Employes 5-Day Week

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Southern California Edison company has placed its employes on a five-day week, according to a statement by John R. Miller, chairman of the board. Miller says the shorter work week provides jobs for 500 employes who otherwise would have been discharged.

WILLIAMS PLACES RESPONSIBILITY FOR HARLAN COAL FIFLD TRAGEDY ON MINE OPERATORS, COMMUNISTS

"Tyranny and Oppression" Must Give Way to Liberty and Justice, Declares Workers' Representative — Flays Un-American Activities of Red Organizations and Their Political Supporters — Gives Detailed Story of Pitiful Plight of Miners, and Compares Conditions in Union Fields of Tennessee.

"Tyranny and oppression" by coal mine operators, who constitute a "modern example of the feudal lords of old," is responsible, primarily, for present deplorable situation in Harlan and Bell counties, Kentucky, and "the policy which created industrial servitude in these sections must be repudiated and liberty and justice restored" before peace shall again reign in that district, according to a statement given The Labor World this week by Ben Williams, field representative of the United Mine Workers of America, who has been stationed in District 19 at intervals during the past several years.

Red organizations which have invaded these fields, with their un-American methods, are bitterly condemned by the veteran trades unionist.

Mr. Williams, asked as to the true situation in the stricken Kentucky districts, talked interestingly of the present status of affairs there, and compared the strife-torn field, with its bitter hatreds and stagnated industry, to conditions in the nearby coal fields of Fentress and Overton counties, Tennessee, where under joint agreement mine workers and employers are producing increasing amounts of coal, to the mutual profit of all, and where confidence each with the other has made for happiness, prosperity and well-being of the entire citizenship.

"Much has been written in the great dailies of America concerning the situation in Harlan and Bell counties," Mr. Williams said. "Newspaper men and representatives of various organizations have endeavored to throw light on the conditions there, and I believe that most of these writers are sincere in their efforts to bring out the truth with respect to the situation. However, first-hand observation will convince anyone that too much stress has been laid upon the absolute power of political tricksters, and the perfidy and arrogance of certain operators, which is the primary cause of this disturbance, has in a measure been lost sight of. While I hold no brief for the maneuvering politicians, I feel that to center the attacks on them will not help in eliminating the true causes for the trouble and thus restoring that peace and happiness to this stricken community which is the just due of American citizens and workers. The invisible dictator, secure in his possession of wealth and power, should have the light of publicity trained constantly upon him and his un-American efforts to establish virtual slavery of mine workers and their families.

"Also, it might be recalled, the trouble may in no case be attributed to the workers, but the underlying causes were oppressive and inhuman tactics of certain coal operators, a result of cut-throat competitive policies. No strike was ever authorized by the United Mine Workers, but that organization did render whatever assistance was possible in an attempt to alleviate distress and to prevent actual starvation and want among the miners and their families. An instance of this is in the fact that the mine workers spent more than $1,000 for gas and oil for trucks and cars to visit surrounding communities and collect provisions and clothing for the starving workers. That this sum was well spent is shown in the results which frequently brought $20 or $25 worth of food, etc., for an expenditure of a dollar or two. Whatever money was secured by this method was distributed as equitably as possible for the purchase of dire necessities.

"The situation was changed by the invasion of the communistic organization under the title 'National Miners' union,' which name has confused certain people who were of the opinion that they were the same as the United Mine Workers of America, which is a bonafide American institution and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The National Miners' union is a communistic organization affiliated to and receiving its orders from Moscow, Russia. Another red organization also came into Harlan and Bell county, the Industrial Workers of the World. Neither of these red organizations believe in joint contracts or the collective bargaining principles. These organizations are opposed to the principles of the American labor movement and the United States government.

"The interests which opposed the regular United Mine Workers of America organization and discharged miners either for being members of or for being in sympathy with the organization, had many of the prominent and active miners arrested and put in jail on trumped-up charges when there was not a bit of evidence of wrongdoing against them.

"The invasion of the red organization assisted the operators and certain political powers by giving them an opportunity to appeal to 'patriotism' and the sentiment of the general public and gave them a smoke screen to hide behind, and the original issue and merits of the real trouble was lost sight of.

"Other elements entered into the fight and appeared on the ground, such as the 'Labor Defense,' the 'National Labor Defense,' the 'Civil Liberty league.' A peculiar and surprising phase of these representatives' actions was that none of them came to the officials of the United Mine Workers of America, but they consulted and apparently co-operated with the National Miners' union and the I. W. W., and representatives of these defense leagues have interested themselves solely in behalf of the two red organizations.

"We are familiar with the policies of the N. M. U. and I. W. W. Neither organization believes in joint contract, and in order to fool the industrial worker who is rebelling against injustice and oppression they formulate demands that they know are impracticable and impossible to obtain, so that should the bonafide American labor movement succeed in bringing about a settlement and having joint contract established they may use their poisonous sheets to tell the workers they have been 'sold out.' The leaders are careful not to tell the workers their real and true policies. They first poison the minds of new members or those whom they are trying to organize by manufacturing the most damnable lies, and they delight in destroying the character of the officials of the American labor institutions. The inner circle of the red and communistic organizations do not want peace or satisfactory relations, because it is not fertile soil to sow their seeds of revolution. They desire and must have conditions where they can appeal to the emotions and sentiments of the workers. They dodge and evade any practical or constructive policy.

"The conditions in Harlan and part of Bell county have been an ideal field for the reds and they have capitalized it for the purpose of sending out appeals to certain types of people to obtain money. No report is ever made of how much finance is received or how much or where disbursed. The workers under the circumstances such as exist in Harlan county are in a desperate state and are easy victims to the impractical and poisonous propaganda of the reds. They are like a man out in deep water and unable to swim. They will grab at anything that is thrown to them.

"I have tried to show you the real conditions in a condensed statement without going into details of numerous things that have occurred, but the main and important question is, What is the cure; what will correct and remove wrongs and substitute reason and justice for the suffering, privation and bitterness that has existed and still exists, and will continue to be so with a possibility of a more serious and dangerous condition to follow.

"Non-union policy with its cut-throat competitive condition is the cause and must be removed.

"Organization of the coal operators and the miners must be established.

"Joint wage agreement must be negotiated and established under the American collective bargaining principle.

"The tyrannical and oppressive policy which has created and established industrial slavery in Harlan and Bell counties must be absolutely removed and liberty and freedom must be real."

Company Stores Gouge Kentucky Coal Diggers

"Inhuman practices on the part of the non-union coal operators in western Kentucky which have been in effect for months are being continued and give promise of extending into the winter," declares the United Mine Workers Journal, the official publication of the United Mine Workers of America.

"What chance the poor miner will have in cold weather, with his small vegetable garden a thing of the past, rests entirely on the coal operators.

"Heading the list of indignities heaped upon the miner's head is the infamous company store, the festering sore on the body of greed and avarice encouraged and supported by the penny-wise-and-pound-foolish coal companies.

"The Pluck-Me store is not a myth in western Kentucky. It is so real that a large part of the miner's trouble rests upon its doorstep. After forcing the miner to work long hours under the worst conditions possible, stealing from him by short-weighing the coal he digs, paying him as low as 15 cents a ton for his labor, the coal company then wallops him again at the company store, where he is forced to trade because he has no money to buy at an independent store.

"A survey of prices charged at company stores and compared with prices at independent places shows an overcharge of from 10 to 65 per cent which the miner is compelled to pay if he desires to keep body and soul together, and ward off starvation from his wife and children."

Rail Mergers Must Protect Rail Workers

Railroad mergers should contain provisions protecting railroad employes and be supervised by the interstate commerce commission, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor declared in its report on the problems of railway employes to the 1931 convention of the federation at Vancouver.

In discussing the decline in net earnings on approximately $26,000,000,000 invested in the railway industry the council said consolidation of the railroads and increase in freight rates had been advanced to remedy the situation.

"Recognizing the economies to be secured through consolidation," the council said, "the railway unions interposed the condition that plans for mergers should include provisions to care for the equities of those employes who would be affected by the changes.

"Railway employes organize their whole lives around their jobs and pour into it all their work capacities. Changes in the industry must take into consideration the consequences to these worker investments as well as to communities.

"We believe that mergers, whether brought about through holding companies or openly, should be supervised by the interstate commerce commission and that this consideration of the personal investment should apply equally.

"Every industry that renders an essential service to society has a right to earn a fair return. We believe the development of competitive conditions in the transportation industry should be carefully watched and studied so that the best interests of the carriers and those served should be steadily maintained."

SEAMEN STRIKE AGAINST DISCHARGE OF FIREMEN

Sydney, Australia, Oct. 28.—The Seamen's union here declared a strike against four steamers, the Canberra, Wear, Time and Dimboola, because the owners of the Canberra discharged a firemen as undesirable.

Brown Kicks In To Chest; May Need Aid Himself

Old-Timer Borrows Dollar From a Friend and Promises More—Maybe.

Harold Freehearted Brown, dean of Labor World correspondents, takes his pen in hand this week to discuss the Community Chest, and holds that the appeal of the needy this year should be heeded in greater measure of sacrifice than ever before. Mr. Brown declares he has borrowed a dollar for an initial payment, and if business gets better he will contribute some more; if not, he may want his dollar back.

The communication follows:

Editor Labor World.

You know, or ought to, that this is the week in which our city has set for some hustling citizens to gather the wherewithal to finance the Community Chest. It's a great idea, I like it, and hope they'll go away over the top, because, I tell you frankly, I may have to call on them for help myself before this thing ends! And there are plenty more in the same fix. But I'm going to subscribe, as usual. Mr. Al Porzelius very courteously asked me to come across, and you know yourself that when Al tells folks to come across with the money, they generally hustle around and get it for him if they have to borrow it! That's what I'm doing. I will subscribe four dollars, payable in quarterly installments, but conditionally. You understand, conditioned upon my personal ability to borrow the other three dollars within nine months, which is an extremely dubious question, I want to say. I've got the first dollar, however, without having to hold up my poor victim, as I happen to have a little "inside information" about him and he happened to have the dollar, which is a wonder. If, however, prosperity succeeds in getting around that now well-known corner, and I succeed in finding a job, I will cash in that obligation, provided Mr. Porzelius gives me 5 per cent off for cash

This way of only having three weeks' work between Christmas and first of following November certainly has its drawbacks, as much as I dislike to work. You know, no native of Georgia ever strikes a lick of work, unless he feels just compelled to do so. I know some that never did a lick of work in their lives, except upon the public roads, when the judge told 'em they had it to do, or else!

Hoping you may be able to double your own subscription this year to our Community Chest, and that I may be able to borrow those other three dollars, I am, yours as ever,

Tennessee Lags In Inauguration Of Five-Day Week

Only 681 Workers Officially Listed as Enjoying Benefit of Shorter Period.

Tennessee lags far behind other states in the matter of inauguration of the five-day week, according to an interesting chart prepared by the Executive Council of the American Federation for submission to the recent convention. But 681 workers are listed as enjoying the shorter work period within the confines of Tennessee. However, since the figures were compiled some progress has been made, an instance of which is establishment of the five-day work week throughout the Southern Railway system.

The state of New York heads the list with 188,089 five-day-week workers. New Jersey comes second with 44,784, Ohio third with 30,464, and Pennsylvania fourth with 30,164.

The complete list follows:

Alabama, 1,273; Arkansas, 7; California, 17,132; Colorado, 2,700; Connecticut, 5,034; Delaware, 240; District of Columbia, 7,602; Florida, 975; Georgia, 1,575; Illinois, 58,657; Indiana, 5,960; Iowa, 1,613; Kansas, 123; Kentucky, 1,582; Maine, 97; Maryland, 7,561; Massachusetts, 16,771; Michigan, 4,672; Minnesota, 2,248; Missouri, 17,054; Montana, 887; Nebraska, 231; Nevada, 520; New Hampshire, 458; New Jersey, 44,784; New Mexico, 78; New York, 188,089; North Dakota, 80; Ohio, 30,464; Oklahoma, 2,152; Oregon, 5,354; Pennsylvania, 30,164; Rhode Island, 1,762; South Carolina, 67; Tennessee, 681; Texas, 3,517; Utah, 65; Vermont, 2,403; Virginia, 525; Washington, 6,560; West Virginia, 346; Wisconsin, 1,936.

Unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor in Arizona, Idaho, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Dakota and Wyoming did not report any members as having the five-day week.

AFL Indorses 51 Union Labels and 10 Cards

The union labels issued by fifty-one unions and union cards issued by ten unions have been indorsed by the American Federation of Labor, according to the annual report of Secretary Frank Morrison to the 1931 convention of the federation.

SIX-HOUR DAY ONLY REAL ROAD TO PROSPERITY

"Eventually, Why Not Now?" Asks Hearst.

GREAT NEWSPAPERS TAKE FORWARD STEP

Call for National Conference to Work Out Plans for Ending Depression.

William Randolph Hearst has come out in support of the six-hour day as the only adequate remedy for unemployment and urges a national industrial conference of employers and representatives of trade unions to discuss conditions for its immediate application.

The reasons which impelled Mr. Hearst to advocate the shorter work day are set forth in an editorial in the Hearst papers headed "Six-Hour Day Eventually, Why Not Now?"

"The time has come for American employers and labor leaders to come to grips with the fundamental facts concerning unemployment," the editorial says.

"Leaders must be reminded that business exists for the service of men. The ironic maladjustments in industry, with glutted markets on the one hand and undernourished people on the other, constitute a serious indictment of management in the large.

"Business has been depressed because executives were slow to discard outmoded ideas.

"In order to sustain prosperity through maintaining an adequate home consuming market, business must share with workingmen more liberally the fruits of the improved industrial efficiency, resulting from greater use of labor-saving machinery and from improved technique of operations. Failure to do so precipitated the present crisis.

"In emphasizing that the time was at hand for another reduction in the hours of labor, William Randolph Hearst pointed out:

"'Labor-saving machinery makes a reduction of hours possible, and, in fact, necessary. Otherwise vast numbers of working people will be thrown out of employment.

"'It has been the habit of the employing classes to take the full benefit of labor-saving machinery and capitalize it, depriving the working people of their due share of the benefit.

"'The advantage of labor-saving machinery should be distributed to the employers in greater profits, to be sure, and to the consumer in cheaper prices; but, above all, to the working people in shorter hours, better wages and better living conditions.'

"With the demand and supply of manpower out of balance, American industry should immediately consider ways and means of adjusting itself to the six-hour day.

"Routine minds will find many reasons why the proposal will not work. The same negative reaction followed the campaign for an eight-hour day instead of a ten or twelve-hour day.

"But, in spite of reactionary rhetoric, the inexorable force of economic pressure is already compelling large-scale industrial experiments in spreading jobs among wider groups of men.

"A leading industrial statistician estimates that general adoption of the six-hour day would increase the present number of wage-earners in industry alone by at least two million persons.

"Under the aegis of the Manufacturing Chemists' association, leading corporations in the chemical industry have recently inaugurated the six-hour day in order to spread available work among the greatest number of workers.

"The president of one of the leading corporations in that industry, in a statement to the Hearst newspapers, declared:

"'While the immediate cause of our adopting the plan was emergency relief, it may well be that it will become a permanent policy.'

"Thus, creative leaders use an acute crisis as an opportunity for building sounder and more humane economic policies.

"A leading American cereal manufacturer, who pioneered with the six-hour day, has reported that the productivity per worker has increased 3 per cent to 4 per cent.

"The Hearst newspapers accordingly urge enlightened employers and representatives of trade unions to confer immediately to discuss conditions under which the six-hour day in industry may be promptly ushered in.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

5. Jesus' Relationship to the Father. Every utterance of Jesus, even when these utterances are isolated apart from the rest of the New Testament, have a peculiar and striking note of authority about them. Is this true concerning only some certain translation of these utterances or is it true of all translations? The answer is this: Wherever Jesus' sayings have been translated with any degree of fidelity to the original thought and language in which they were spoken His utterances retain this note of final authority to which I refer.

WM. L. MOSS

We must therefore endeavor to understand the source of this authoritative note in the sayings of Jesus if we are to know why His teaching on man's social life is to be accepted above that of, say, the teaching of our fellow beings around us or the teaching of any one in the past ages who has set himself up as the teacher of mankind.

If the utterances of Jesus are stamped with an indisputable finality of authority in their tone, an authoritative note which is easily recognizable, then whence came this note of authority? That Jesus as He walked and taught among those who heard Him had the bearing not of one of the ordinary teachers of Israel but of an outstanding leader and prophet is revealed by the New Testament. This is proved by two facts: the first is (1) the bitter and unceasing harassing of Jesus by the scribes and Pharisees from almost the day He began His public ministry to the dark and tragic hours of the night before the crucifixion morning, and the second is (2) the unaffected and spontaneous tributes of the simple folk who were attracted to Him by His fame while He yet taught among them. I shall not elaborate on the attitude of the scribes and Pharisees in this particular series of articles, but concerning the second point (the tributes to Jesus' greatness as a Teacher) I shall go more in detail next week, submitting a list of quotations from the New Testament which will show the nature of the estimation of Jesus by the people who heard Him.

PRESSMEN AID JOBLESS.

New York Printing Pressmen's Union 51, of New York City, which for two years has assessed its 4,000 members $8 a month to create an unemployment relief fund, and in that time has distributed more than $400,000, has voted unanimously to continue the assessment for another six months.

The assessments were to have expired on Nov. 1, but in view of the severity of unemployment and the approch of winter, the members felt that it was necessary to extend further relief to their fellow-workers.

The union distributes an average of $12 a week to its needy members, and the number of men receiving help has totaled 650.

RUN-DOWN and WEAK

"Before I took Cardui, I was nervous, restless, blue and out of heart. I felt depressed all the time. After I took Cardui, all this disappeared.

Wages Lag Behind Labor's Output

The power of the owners of industry to victimize labor with relatively low wages despite revolutionary increases in the quantity of wealth produced by the workers for the owners, is trenchantly pointed out by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

The council also emphasizes the importance of trade unions as an institution to secure for the workers in the form of increased wages an ever larger portion of the wealth produced in order that the buying power of labor may keep pace with the increased quantities of commodities and services produced and thus become an important element in preventing unemployment.

The council points out that the average worker in the manufacturing industries increased his output of commodities 26 per cent from 1899 to 1919, and 54 per cent from 1919 to 1929.

But when it comes to the advance in real wages, expressed by "wage rates per hour in all industry in terms of the goods they will buy," the council finds that "wage rates advanced only 4.2 per cent from 1899 to 1919, compared with the 26 per cent advance in productivity, and 36 per cent from 1919 to 1929, compared with a 54 per cent advance in productivity."

In discussing the lesson to be drawn from these unimpeachable statistical facts, the council says:

> Economic equilibrium depends on keeping a balanced relationship between economic forces. For instance, consuming power must keep pace with producing power, income from trade and industry must be so distributed that it will increase the capacity to buy in proportion as it increases the capacity to produce. When these factors are thrown out of balance, trade and industry can no longer function normally, and we are plunged into business depression.
> It is the task of trade unions to see that the worker's side of the balance is kept up, and that workers advance proportionately with other groups. Wage-earners and small salaried workers with their families form 83 per cent of the nation's population and receive 54 per cent of the national income. Almost the entire amount of this income is spent to buy industry's products and services or to pay rent, for there is little margin for saving.
> In recent years workers have received about $32,000,000,000 a year. The immensity of this sum and its huge influence as an economic force makes it essential that workers' income advance proportionately with industry's producing power. Industry depends on workers' buying; it is a severe handicap when workers' incomes do not keep pace.

Slave Wages on Road Work

The determination of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to secure legislation to prevent the government of the United States from being a party to slave wages on highway construction work paid for in part by the government will receive universal approval.

Congress appropriates millions of dollars every year for highway construction in the various states with the provision that the state governments shall pay an equal amount.

The roads are built either directly by the state government or by the contract system. The federal appropriation laws contain no provisions to safeguard either decent wages or working hours and the prevailing wage rate law does not apply to highway construction. Some officials of the United States government have taken advantage of this situation and favored low wages on highway work.

In its report to the 1931 convention of the American Federation of Labor the Executive Council of the federation tells the story in tabloid form:

> Hundreds of millions of dollars have been appropriated by the government to aid the states in the construction of good roads. In that work the lowest wages imaginable are being paid. For instance, a contract was made by the highway commission of South Carolina with contractors which provided that the wages should be 20 cents an hour but permitted a lower rate of wages for 10 per cent of the employes as low as 15 cents an hour.
> In Idaho, the state laws provide for the prevailing rate of wages. The federal government, however, which contributed to the building of the roads, refused to permit such a clause to be placed in the contract.
> The same outcome resulted in Wisconsin where provision was made by the state to pay 40 cents an hour for unskilled labor on the public roads to be constructed. The federal officials refused to permit the enforcement of the wage rate.
> In Indiana contractors were paying 20 cents and 25 cents an hour which so aroused public opinion that the highway commission refused to give further contracts to those offending. Because the contractors had promised to pay 50 cents an hour, the contracts were taken away. The state is doing the work and paying 40 cents an hour. Similar reports are coming from many states.

Confronted with this collusion between state officers, many contractors, and certain federal officials to impose low wages on workers doing road construction, the council says it will be "absolutely necessary that the prevailing rate of wage law with such amendments as will be made in the next session of congress be extended to road building for which the government appropriates a share.

Retaining Displaced Workers

Labor-displacing machinery installed by the owners and managers of industry enables one worker to produce as much wealth in the form of commodities as many workers produced by former methods.

There are also revolutionary changes occurring in the structure of industry caused by changing demands. Rayon takes the place of cotton. The motor bus takes the place of railroad car and the railroad locomotive.

The result is that hundreds of thousands of workers, after having spent long periods of time in acquiring skill in certain lines and after having worked at one trade for years, find themselves without a market for their wealth producing ability.

To meet this condition the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report on methods of preventing unemployment to the 1931 convention of the federation, recommended the wide extension of vocational counsel and retraining of workers displaced by machinery. The council said:

> If assistance in knowing the jobs available is supplemented by help in adapting work skill and experience to various industries, an element in flexibility is introduced that will help in meeting the problem of technological unemployment.
> The unprecedented rate of technical change in the past decade has made it plain that vocational education should provide opportunities for adults. Services for adults will be most practical when co-ordinated with the work of the employment service.
> The employment service accumulates information on the kinds of work for which wage-earners will be hired and the relative number of employes needed. The vocational counselor should know what industries make use of similar skills so that courses of retraining can be worked out.
> Our educational agencies should consider this problem of vocational education for adults and make provisions to meet it. Experience in this field will in turn be reciprocally helpful in keeping vocational education for boys and girls practical and adapted to industrial and worker needs.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Wherever men gather the talk these days turns to the question of unemployment and the possible return of that thing called prosperity.

When will it return? When will there be jobs? When will there be business?

As time passes one thing stands out as a special symptom of this depression, and of popular feeling. Greater and greater numbers of men who have always hitherto thought everything was all right are now free, drastic and biting in their criticisms.

Pick up your favorite business magazine—chances are you'll find an editorial barb. Even the old Saturday Evening Post has been printing startling facts. Pointing out, for instance, as Matthew Woll did more than a year ago, the terrific American investments abroad, and their purport and sinister possibilities.

Oh, these are great days, sure enough—great days for truth telling.

We can stand truth, great gobs of it.

The great difficulty is to translate fundamental truths into terms that mean something to the man who has never dealt in such big truths.

Those who probe to the bottom of this depression find abuses in terms of billions of dollars.

The unemployed, sleeping in hallways and byways, think in terms of nickels. A nickel is a cup of coffee and a cup of coffee is hope.

Many families lucky enough to have roofs over their heads are thinking in terms of nickels, too.

Mark this down: Until the average man knows what's going on and what needs to be done about it, we may have remedy, but we will have no guarantee the remedy will be permanent.

Billions of American money have gone abroad for what is called investment.

"Securities"—funny word—here at home have gone down so far that states are allowing life insurance companies to quote the June 30 market price to make their books show something decently removed from disaster.

The great telephone monopoly declares an extra dividend, and so does Woolworth.

Many corporations are declaring dividends on stock that represents no money investment—only water—inflation.

Ernest Elmo Calkins, noted business writer, bursts out and says that industry is run by bankers.

Floyd W. Parsons, author, authority, says we—laugh at that "we"—will never get back more than half of the five billion dollars loaned in South America. If that five billion didn't come out of profits which, in large part, could have gone into wages, where did it come from?

Isn't it true that the evil lies buried deeply in the industrial and financial system? That the abuse has been by men controlling industry and finance?

Isn't that, then, the place to put the cure medicine?

There are some who say our worst enemies just now are those who gabble about political nostrums, taking attention away from the place where guilt and responsibility are and centering it on government. May be something to that idea.

But this whole business, somehow, has got to be translated into loaves of bread and pounds of meat and house rent and clothes.

That can be done. Get your mind on wages and hours of work—and to get action on those vital questions, organize into unions. Enough union men in strong, disciplined unions and there'll be no more depression problem—never!

Q.—Has the American Federation of Labor ever met in Cincinnati, selected as the next convention city?

Q.—Who said: "One fact stands out in bold relief in the history of men's attempts for betterment and that is when compulsion is used, only resentment is aroused. Only through moral suasion and appeal to men's reason can a movement succeed"?

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, spoke in commendation of William Randolph Hearst's declaration in favor of the six-hour day.

"I commend highly the stand taken by Mr. Hearst," he said, "and believe the influence he exercises through his newspapers will play a constructive part in bringing this necessary initial step in industry to a realization.

"The introduction of modern machinery and power has increased the productive capacity of the individual in industry 50 per cent.

"How is it possible to operate these machines and supply work for millions six days a week?

"The solution is the shorter work day and the five-day work week, and they ought to be established immediately. We will never rest content until they are established."

NEWS CHAPEL NOTES

By H. CLAY TIMMONS

Howdy folks! Back on the old Labor World again; maybe every week, maybe not so often. Don't know what kipd of a head the skipper will put over this, but it's mostly News chapel stuff this week.

George Butler's idea of DeWitt Miller making over his front page stuff:

"This goes here, and this goes there, walking my baby back home!"

And when Dee is making over that front page and Hooks Underwood is remaking over Bales sports page, there is quite a vocal chorus. Hooks has an intestinal-basso and Dee a nasal tenor.

M. Stevens Cooke (the "M" stands for Munchausen, if you get what I mean) tells this one:

While working in Cincinnati some printer walked up to him and asked if they had any linotypes on the Enquirer.

"Sure," says Milt, "one or two."

"Well, I'm an operator on a model 20," says the hayseed.

"Well, brother," gibbers Milt, "you sure are out of luck. There ain't a twenty on the floor."

And then there was the youngster among a dozen or so in a gang making a tour through the shop, who picked up a slug and wanted to see the man who had the job of pasting those letters in such a straight line on a piece of lead.

All types of gaming have become de trop over here since the acquisition of a head janitor, or "building superintendent," as he terms himself. He even was going to have a couple of the fellows fired for playing checkers for a cent a man left on the board.

SEZ WHICH

When this depression's over, says I to "Soupy" Smith, I'll buy some bones for Rover; I'll feed my kin and kith. Their vitals won't be achin' for meat and custard pies; I'll feed them beans and bacon 'till the grease runs out their eyes. You'll hear some happy shoutin' at my house on the hill; the landlord won't be doubtin' that he'll collect his bill. I'll stop the dealer's wagon to pitch coal in the yard; I'll have my pantry saggin' with sugar, peas and lard. When they veto prohibition, or give us beer and wine—when we see this condition, I'll have you out to dine. You may bring your wife and mother and sup a while with me; your wife may fetch her brother, his wife and children three. But in this trying hour when I am growing thin, won't you let me have some flour to fill my empty bin. Won't you let me have some "taters" to drive the wolf away; some cabbage and tomaters, some oats or clover hay? I hate to make a holler about this thing at all, but could you let me have a dollar? I'll pay you back next fall. My coat and pants are tattered; my feet are on the ground. Though I am badly battered, I'll soon come back around.

When business gets better, says "Soupy" Smith to me, then you may be my debtor for a dollar—maybe three. You may have some jam and jelly from my all but empty shelf, But while I'm hurting in my belly I'll keep it for myself.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

LAST week we briefly noted organized labor's insistence that free public school education be made a part of American political suffrage and we learned also that it is due to organized labor's efforts that the public school system was established in this country. Our consideration of labor's fight for public school education for the masses is the event in labor's history in this country which all but closes these editorials on the pre-Civil war period. The one highlight in labor's history which we must consider before taking up the Civil war period is that of the land reform movement initiated by organized labor.

Following the panic of 1837 the air was full of panaceas for the alleviation of the suffering among the masses in this country. The advocacy for homesteads for the idle was the chief issue which engaged people's minds. Let us quote from the Working Man's Advocate of 1845: A meeting had been held in New York City to consider pushing the homestead movement and in one of the resolutions adopted at this meeting it was declared "that in our opinion the best method of putting an end to Feudalism and Land Monopoly would be for the Legislature to pass a general law limiting the quantity of land" one person could own. The idea being to distribute the land among the many instead of permitting it to be held by the powerful few.

Horace Greeley during the agitation for free homesteads pointed out two ways in which the city laborer would benefit by free homesteads: (1) Some competitors would be drawn to the newly opened lands, thus tending to raise wages, or at least to prevent lowering the rate of wages, and (2) there would be an increasing demand for the products of manufacturers and small workshops, thus increasing the demand for labor.

Peruchis to Play At Record Prices

Peruchi Players, who have been responsible for a number of innovations in the theatrical line during their long engagements in Chattanooga, will inaugurate another startling policy when, beginning next Tuesday, admission prices will be reduced to a level possibly never before known in the history of stock.

Manager "Tommy" Thompson announced Thursday that the new admission scale will be the lowest ever attempted by a high-class dramatic stock company, within his knowledge, and certainly the lowest ever for a Peruchi company in the many decades which this veteran producer has played the south.

Entire lower floor of the Memorial Little Theater, where the company has delighted Chattanoogans during the past three weeks, will be sold for 35 cents per admission, at night performances, while balcony seats will be offered at 25 cents. Corresponding reductions will also be made in matinee prices, when all seats will be available at 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children.

Mr. Thompson stressed the fact that the Little Theater now is the only theater in Chattanooga offering real musicians, with a splendid eight-piece orchestra directed by William Krug. He urges patrons to phone early for reservations, as the new scale is expected to fill the theater to capacity at each performance.

The Peruchis are playing this week a mystery drama which is declared to be one of the best of its type ever offered Chattanoogans, and increasingly large crowds have enjoyed each performance. Next week a sparkling new comedy, "What Anne Brought Home," will be presented.

It's so awfully simple to demand UNION GOODS and SERVICE that it is simply awful more trade unionists do not do this important thing.

'FREE' LABOR CHEAPER THAN PRISON TYPE

Competition Putting Convicts Out of Business.

STATE GETS $1 A DAY FOR FELON'S WORK

But Outside Bosses Hire Females for $3 Per Week, Declares David Hanly.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 4.—The contract of Gray and Dudley company, of Nashville, manufacturers of George Washington stoves and ranges, with the Tennessee prison authorities expired in June of this year. This contract provided that the Gray and Dudley company was to purchase the product of 184 prisoners in the stove foundry in the main prison at Nashville. The company contracted to pay the state $1.75 a day per prisoner.

On the expiration of the contract the Dray and Dudley company refused to renew same or to make any agreement with the prison authorities for the operation of the prison stove foundry. Commissioner of Institutions Lyle has made what he terms a temporary arrangement with the Gray and Dudley company, whereby this concern agreed to use the number of convicts that they could work from day to day at the rate of $1 a day for each convict employed.

The Liberty Stove and Range company has a contract with the state prison authorities under the same terms as the Gray and Dudley company. This contract has not expired. As the state made the arrangement with the Gray and Dudley company whereby the labor of the convicts was reduced from $1.75 a day to $1 a day, the same arrangement was made with the Liberty company.

Under Chapter 40, acts of 1919, the commissioner of institutions, with the approval of the governor, is authorized to contract for the sale of the articles manufactured by the prisoners at so much per piece. It also provides that the parties contracting to buy the articles manufactured by the prisoners shall be required to furnish the necessary raw materials and to furnish and keep in repair the necessary equipment and machinery.

The law also provides that the state shall have entire supervision over the prisoners, but the joker in the law is in the provision that the contractor shall furnish, without cost to the state, the foreman in each prison factory. This is the man who reports the prisoners for failure to perform the tasks allotted to them. Prisoners are whipped with a huge strap for failure to perform tasks.

Section 2 of chapter 40 of the acts of 1919 provides that in the event the commissioner of institutions is unable to enter into satisfactory contracts under the above plan, he is then authorized to use and employ convicts in the manufacture of some article or articles on behalf of the state itself. He is also authorized to purchase the necessary machinery and equipment and necessary materials for carrying on manufacturing. He is also authorized to sell the articles manufactured on the general market or to sell the entire output to any one or more purchasers.

The temporary arrangement made with these prison contractors seems to me to be a violation of the law as quoted above. A request made of the state's attorney-general for an opinion as to the legality of the above arrangement for working convicts was refused by him on the ground that opinions from his office were given only on the request of state officials.

Commissioner of Institutions Lyle told me that there were over 2,000 prisoners in the main prison at Nashville at the present time. He also said that the state would be compelled to make provision to meet the requirements of the Cooper-Hawes law, which becomes effective in January, 1934. In the meantime he said it was necessary for him to keep the prisoners now in the penitentiary employed.

Salant and Salant, a New York corporation, has a contract in the main prison and the Boys' Reformatory located at Nashville. This concern manufactures work shirts in these two penal institutions for which they pay the state 40 cents a dozen. Salant and Salant have been so successful in the employment of Tennessee convict labor that they are going to establish a shirt factory at Martin, Tenn., where there is a good supply of cheap female labor.

There are shirt and overall factories in small towns in Tennessee, where women are employed fifty-seven hours a week and pay a wage of $3 a week. Beginners are paid $1.50 a week. It seems to me that it is impossible for the products of prison labor to compete with this so-called "free" female labor.

The financial affairs of Tennessee are in a deplorable condition. There is not money enough in the state treasury to pay the salaries of state employes. Schools all over the state will be compelled to close by January unless the legislature is called in extra session to make provisions. Gov. Horton is afraid he will be impeached if the general assembly is reassembled. An employe in the state capitol told me that he heard Gov. Horton say today in reply to a query as to when he was going to call an extra session that he had no intention of calling an extra session. Especially in view of the statement of Ed Crump, published yesterday, in which he said that both Gov. Horton and Secretary of State Haston should be kicked out of office.

January May See 7,000,000 Jobless

Now Is Time to Press Efforts to Keep Men at Work, Says President Green, Urging Labor's Emergency Program. Fifteen Industrial Centers Show More Out-of-Works.

October reports from trade unions received by the American Federation of Labor reveal that unemployment has again increased. In the first half of October, 19.6 per cent of the membership were out of work compared to 19.4 per cent in September and 19.2 in August.

Commenting on the report, President William Green, of the federation, points out that an increase in unemployment of 1 per cent at this time of the year is not unusual. A similar increase occurred in October even in the normal year 1923. But if unemployment continues to increase at this rate there will be 7,000,000 persons out of work in January, he said.

Hours Must Be Cut.

Emphasizing that now is the time to make every effort to keep men at work, President Green said that hours must be shortened, as there is actually only thirty-five hours' work a week for each of the wage-earners who want work in the United States today.

President Green said:

"While some 30,000 persons lost their jobs in industry in October, farmers took on more workers this month to help with the harvesting of grain and other crops. Some 40,000 more were employed on farms. Therefore our estimate of the total number out of work in the United States for October remains practically the same as in September—5,600,000 persons.

More Part-Time Work.

"Our part-time figures show an increase in the number working on short schedule. In September 18 per cent of the membership were reported on part time, in October 19 per cent. This increase in part time work is a healthy sign in a period when unemployment is rising. It seems likely that an effort is being made to keep men at work at least part time, for up to October our figures had shown a more than normal increase in unemployment which had not been offset by an increase in part time work. Therefore it seems likely that if more part time work had not been given in October, the unemployment increase would have been greater.

"In November we expect 600,000 persons to lose their jobs. Four hundred and eighty thousand will be laid off on farms and 118,000 in industry unless something is done to prevent the usual fall increase in unemployment.

Labor's Program Urged.

"Now is the time to put forth every effort to keep men at work. Labor's emergency program for employment this winter should be put into effect immediately, as follows:

"1. Maintain wages so that workers' buying power will be kept up and the demand for goods sustained, and employment will not fall to lower levels. It is encouraging to note that from January to Sept. 15 this year only one worker in ten has had his wages reduced, according to labor department reports from 15,000 manufacturing plants.

"2. Shorten work hours so that available work may be divided among all workers. There is actually only thirty-five hours a week for each of the wage-earners who want work in the United States today.

"3. Assure employment to minimum work forces from November to April.

Jobs for Additional Workers.

"4. Each employer to take on additional workers. If the three million employers in the United States were to give work to only one extra worker on the average, half of those out of work would be employed.

"5. Create work through public undertakings.

"6. Strengthen employment agencies.

"7. Keep young persons in school to avoid their competing for jobs.

"8. Give preference to workers with dependents.

"9. Secure financial relief from public and private funds to take care of those for whom no work can be found."

Gain in Eight Cities.

The A. F. of L. report for cities shows unemployment increasing in 15; only eight cities reported an improvement. In Baltimore and Minneapolis the increase in the number out of work has been large; in Pittsburgh and San Antonio the building trades have suffered especially, with more than 50 per cent increase in unemployment. Unemployment is most serious in Detroit, Baltimore, Chicago, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Buffalo, New York and Los Angeles in the order of their listing. In each of these cities over 25 per cent are out of work.

Costigan Asks Federal Idle Aid, Shorter Hours

Washington, Nov. 4.—Federal relief for the unemployed to whatever extent may be necessary to keep them from suffering should be generously granted, declared United States Senator Edward P. Costigan on his arrival here from Colorado.

Senator Costigan said also that unemployment should be reduced by more effective employment agencies, more restraints on immigration in periods of depression, substitution of adult for child labor, an elastic program of state and federal public works, broadening as the needs increase, and by shortening working hours and increasing wages.

"Accident, sickness, old-age and unemployment insurance," he said, "should be actively and scientifically favored. To meet the wide danger of human starvation in this hour of emergency, needed public construction and other public employment should be pressed under federal and state appropriations.

"To meet our national needs of social justice and sounder distribution of wealth, federal taxes on excess profits, increased levies on incomes in the higher brackets and large collections on inheritances and gifts must be made."

He will also give his unqualified support to legislation restricting the power of the courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes.

Bricklayers Give Half Million for Jobless Members

Washington, Nov. 4.—A half million dollars have just been contributed to the unemployed members of the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International union throughout the United States and Canada, according to an announcement issued by the executive board of the organization.

This help to unemployed members is extended through the cancellation of the per capita tax on members for November, December and January.

The tax which will not be collected for the three months will approximate a half million dollars, the officials said. At the same time all members exempted from the tax will continue eligible to participate in benefits aggregating a million and a half dollars.

Union Finances Strong.

In a joint statement issued by all the officials, including President Emeritus William J. Bowen, President George T. Thornton, Treasurer R. J. Gray, Secretary John J. Gleeson and First Vice-President Harry C. Bates, it was pointed out that only the excellent financial position of the union made the move possible.

"Our membership probably has been as hard hit by unemployment as any union membership," the statement said. "Relief is necessary for these men, many of whom have been loyal members for long periods. The remitting of the per capita tax for three months will, in many cases, mean the difference between maintenance of membership and cancellation. Our organization offers benefits of great value and these benefits will remain in force, despite suspension of tax collections.

On Solid Foundation.

"This organization, with members through the United States and Canada, has always conducted its affairs on a basis of economy. We have not indulged in dreams. Our per capita tax comes from men who work hard and who go long periods without work, even in so-called normal times. The officers have handled the money, not only according to the law of the union, with an ever-present sense of the fact that it is the money of men who work hard and who pay it for the maintaining of a union to protect their interests and welfare.

"Careful management of the funds of the organization makes this action possible, without in any manner weakening the defensive capacity of the union."

CHICAGO TAILORS STRIKE.

Wottaman Palmer Gets Self 'Mugged'

Basil E. Palmer, who has been a fixture in local newspaper composing rooms since, possibly, J. B. Pound established the News, "got himself mugged" for the Junior Times, and this month's issue of that unusually live house-organ of the morning paper has a fine sketch of the old-timer, who is one of the best-known and best-liked printers in this section.

Local typos and other friends will be interested in the personal puff given our hero, and it is reprinted below as a courtesy of the "Little Times:"

Wotta man, wotta man!

None other than Basil Elmo Palmer we'd have you meet this month, folks. Most everybody already knows and likes him.

BASIL

Basil holds down No. 8 and No. 9 ad machines, and "the big machine." The swinging of magazines on the big one is killing work for the ordinary operator, but to Basil it is a mere trifle.

You've got to hand it to this fellow. Any one who, night after night, deciphers the scribbling on the ad copy, swings twenty or thirty magazines and can put up with that ad room bunch has got to be good.

Basil has enjoyed a long and happy married life, having wed Miss Gladys Marie Jones, of this city, in 1911. They have two children, Mildred, 17, and Basil, Jr., 12.

Our subject was born in Macon, Ga., in 1891 and came to Chattanooga at an early age. In 1906 he began work on the Times as a machine wiper, then graduated to the cases and make-up, and later to the machines. Except for two short intervals Basil has worked under the big dome since 1906. In 1923 he felt the lure of easy money and gentle breezes and pulled out for Florida. He returned in 1927. The other interval was of much shorter duration. That was in 1907 and he left the Times to go to work on the Chattanooga Star, a prohibition paper.

Basil can tell you of the "days when—" There were only eight machines on the Times; "Kid" Rogers was foreman of the old Star; when John Tinker was an operator.

Among Basil's souvenirs is an antique Chevrolet, which he says is like old wine—it improves with age. Basil is a little fellow—only 5 feet 4 inches and weighing 117 pounds. But he's not scared of anything, just because he happens to be small. He'll walk through anybody's graveyard at midnight, believe it or not.

CHURCHMAN SAYS IDLE ARE SLOWLY STARVING

Tells Senate Committee Public Officials and Influential Classes Are Indifferent to Suffering.

Washington, Nov. 4.—"The most discouraging thing about our grave unemployment situation is the indifference to human suffering exhibited by our public officials and influential classes," Dr. John A. Ryan, of the National Catholic Welfare council, told the senate manufacturers' subcommittee which is holding hearings on a proposal to create a national economic council.

"They all seem to assume that their duty will be performed if none of the unemployed dies of actual and quick starvation.

"They seem to take no account of the deaths that are inevitable from slow starvation through a long course of undernourishment. They seem to care little about the permanent weakening of health and physique of the millions who will receive just enough assistance to enable them to survive.

"As a matter of fact, the starvation which has already occurred on account of unemployment is not all of the slow and gradual variety.

"A physician in one of the hospitals in Detroit reported not long ago that, on the average, four persons a day are brought to that particular hospital too far gone from starvation to be saved."

Dr. Ryan reiterated the demand which he has made frequently in recent months that a $5,000,000,000 public works program be begun by the government to provide work for the unemployed.

A. F. L. Council Approves Advance Public Works Planning to Avert Unemployment

Complete approval of the advance planning and regulated construction of public works to stabilize industry and aid the prevention of unemployment in business depressions as provided in the Wagner law, enacted by the last session of congress, is given by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report to the 1931 convention of the federation.

The law establishes the federal employment stabilization board composed of the secretaries of the treasury, commerce, agriculture and labor departments.

The board is required to advise the president of the trend of employment, business activity, and the existence or approach of business depression or unemployment. The board is also required to co-operate with construction agencies in formulating methods of advance planning.

Another function of the board is to advise the president of the value volume of contracts awarded for construction work in the United States during various periods corresponding with similar periods in previous calendar years.

"Upon recommendation of the board," the council's report stated, "that there is likely to exist within six months a period of business depression and unemployment, the president can transmit to congress estimates for emergency appropriations. Such emergency appropriations shall be expended only for building roads, rivers and harbor works, flood control projects and public buildings under the provisions of laws now in effect.

"The intent of congress is to arrange for the construction of public works in such a manner as will assist in the stabilization of industry and employment through the proper timing of such construction.

"For many years the American Federation of Labor has pleaded with congress for this legislation. In 1893, the American Federation of Labor declared that 'while we applaud the humane efforts of private individuals to relieve the terrible distress of the unemployed, we most respectfully but emphatically insist that it is the duty of the city, state and national governments to give immediate and adequate relief.' It was also repeatedly declared that arrangements to construct public works in times of depression should be made in prosperous times.

"We are sure that if the advance planning law is faithfully carried out it will prove its effectiveness in times of business depression."

Butler Suggests U. S. Army For 1,000,000 Jobless

Washington, Nov. 4.—Enrolling one million unemployed in the United States army, marine corps and navy is advanced by Maj.-Gen. Smedley D. Butler, retired, U. S. Marine corps, as a government measure to relieve unemployment. Enrollment would be on a voluntary basis and limited to single men without family obligations.

Under Gen. Butler's plan the government would feed, clothe and house the "peace-time army" for the duration of the business depression. He claims there are enough unoccupied army camps to provide adequate housing.

The men would be given vocational training of various sorts to better equip them for outside jobs when work is available. Athletics would be substituted for military training. The work provided would be such as did not compete with outside labor.

Gen. Butler estimates it would cost the government $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 to care for the army of a million for one year, but he points out that the sum is large in view of the fact that the government gave up more than $250,000,000 a year to help world-wide conditions under President Hoover's debt moratorium.

"It is not to be considered as a charity nor a dole," Gen. Butler explains. "These men would be giving their time and energy in return for their 'keep.' It is merely giving them a measure of liberty, a chance to live and the opportunity to pursue happiness."

Would Develop Idle Lands By Unemployed

Salem, Ore., Nov. 4.—A 30-year bond issue to raise funds to provide work for the unemployed by developing Oregon's 150,000 acres of logged-off land and land held for taxes is advocated by Labor Commissioner C. H. Gram.

In explaining his plan, Gram says the land not suitable for homes would be reforested. The portion suitable for agriculture, he adds, would be "cleared up and put in shape for cultivating, utilizing the unemployed for this work at a wage not large enough to hold them from private employment but sufficient to enable them to sustain themselves without charity." Employment would be limited to persons who have been in the state for one year.

"The plan will create employment as needed," Gram points out. "It will eliminate everything suggestive of the dole, thus enabling families to retain their self-respect and be increasingly better citizens.

"It will eventually bring a lot of small home owners to the state who could not be secured in any other way. It will place the land back on the tax roll as soon as it is turned over to purchasers.

"We must abandon the thought of profit, either for the individual or for any interest. It is entirely a matter, first, of sustaining life, and then of diverting the efforts of the unemployed to new processes which will offer them security."

LA FOLLETTE ASKS PUBLIC WORKS FOR IDLE RELIEF

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 4.—"The government should exercise all the power it grasped during the war" to bring rehabilitation from the economic depression, United States Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, told a University of Illinois audience here.

"If the purchasing power of the people is to be restored, we must have a comprehensive program on the part of the federal government which will help in fighting the depression," the Wisconsin progressive said. "This program should include a tremendous public works bill. It should include also a plan for the stabilization of industry and legislation to afford relief to farmers."

The senator said he believed President Hoover's plan for a credit corporation to liquidate banks' frozen assets was good in that it postpones additional bank failures, but that he does "not regard it as a solution for the economic situation."

ELECTRICIANS FORM PLAN FOR JOBLESS RELIEF

McDaniels Announces Employer-Labor Program.

JOURNEYMEN WILL ACT AS SALESMEN

Officials of Local Union Optimistic Regarding Success of Novel Proposal.

E. E. McDaniel, business manager of Local 175, Electrical Workers, announced this week that an employer-labor plan to relieve unemployment in the electrical construction industry has been launched by the Electrical Guild of North America and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Together the two organizations, comprising contractors and workers, propose to create business and work in the industry by modernizing American homes, stores and buildings, equipped before the era of rapid electrical development and known to be inadequately wired, Mr. McDaniels said. "It will be the case of skilled electricians acting as salesmen for their employers to make the jobs by which they earn their livelihood," he continued.

The project, according to the outline furnished by Louis K. Comstock, president of the guild, and H. H. Broach, president of the electrical workers' union, will be carried out in nearly 600 cities and towns in the United States and Canada. It is known as the "Co-operative Work Plan" and involves the co-ordination of efforts of electrical contractors, central stations, labor organizations, civic groups, including central labor unions, inspection departments of municipalities, churches and posts of the American Legion.

If only 3 per cent of the potential market in the United States for repairs, extensions and wiring for new equipment is reached, it is estimated that the expenditure will amount to $126,000,000, divided roughly into $50,000,000 in wages, and $76,000,000 for materials, which, in turn, gets into wages.

The business managers of 600 local unions, accountable to the headquarters of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, have been supplied with a handbook of the plan and called upon to furnish the names of all electrical contractors in their districts who are equipped to install repairs and extensions to existing household and business electric equipments. With the aid of the union's headquarters staff, idle electricians will be put into a house-to-house canvass under the direction of the local electrical contractors. Householders, it is believed, will buy electrical improvements to their property more willingly than they will contribute money for impersonal unemployment relief.

This picked corps of salesmen will work on a small commission basis in the interest of unemployment relief. The real incentive will be ultimate employment in their trade when the contractor gets new business requiring the services of skilled electricians.

MASS WELFARE NECESSARY TO SAVE CAPITALISM

Madison, Wis.—A revised capitalist system, providing high wages, low prices and short working hours, must take the place of the present system or it will be supplanted by a new system, such as communism, Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, declared in an address here.

"My personal position," the president stated, "is that free capitalism and personal liberty are sounder than communism. But western capitalism must effect one great change. It must become mass conscious.

"Both old and new capitalism believed that the free pursuit of private ends was the royal road to public good. It is increasingly recognized by modern capital and industry that they must discharge their social functions."

"Millions of men and women," he continued, "are chilled by the fear of possible unemployment. They are ready to listen to a skeptical critique of capitalism. Undue continuance of the depression will render these millions sensitive to substitute systems which promise to make the welfare of the masses come first."

Dr. Frank said that prior to the crash in 1929 one-fifth of industry was operating under the principles of the new capitalism—high wages, low prices and short working hours—as opposed to low wages, high prices and long working hours. The hope of capitalism lies in the avoidance of revolution by practicing the former, he stated.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter I
PART III: THE THOUGHT TREND OF JESUS' MIND

6. What People of Jesus' Time Thought of Him. In our effort to familiarize ourselves with the Person of Jesus sufficiently to understand His social teaching and weigh its authority we will now glance at the New Testament references to what people contemporary with Jesus had to say about him. This, of course, refers to those passages which are recorded as being the remarks of folks who came in contact with the Master during His teaching days. I refer you to Mat. 8:34 as the first reference of this nature. There we are told, "the whole city came out to meet Jesus." But the latter half of this verse tells us that the people came out to meet Jesus, not to become His to teach them, but to "depart out of their coasts." We must consider passages of this class as well as those which refer to Him in a more favorable light.

WM. L. MOSS

The incident recorded in Mat. 8:34 follows immediately after our Lord's great discourse on the mountainside, or rather series of discourses, which Matthew collected and recorded in the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of his gospel, and which we call today "The Sermon on the Mount." The first verse of the eighth chapter records the end of this matchless Sermon, for there we read, "when Jesus was come down from the mountain great multitudes followed him." This verse is our connecting point between the mountain sermon (or "sermons") and Mat. 8:34 in our effort to reach an understanding of the latter verse.

The question now arises, Why did the people who in verse 1 of the eighth chapter follow Jesus so eagerly request Him in verse 34 of the same chapter to leave their country? For an answer I refer you to the Sermon on the Mount itself. In that Sermon Jesus struck a sweeping blow at the religious standards of the scribes and Pharisees and you can safely venture the guess that after He did so they immediately got busy and circulated among the populace scattering whispered denunciation of Him. We can picture some which we later have actually recorded for us, the scribes and Pharisees told the common people He was undermining the teaching of Moses and of their fathers, how He was a deceiver, an impostor, false teacher and perverter of the faith as it had been received by them from olden times. (To Be Continued.)

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

WAGES AND LIVING COSTS.

The low wage destroyers of our American living standards keep up their propaganda that wages should be reduced because the cost of living has gone down.

This is the old slave-labor theory of wages.

The slave owner provided his slaves with a living. If the price of the living went up, it cost him more for his labor; if it went down, it cost him less. The slave owner profited by variations downward.

Cost-of-living-wage employers took over the slave-labor cost of living theory and have persistently endeavored to use it as their basis for fixing wages under our free-labor system.

The tangible basis for this reactionary theory was recently knocked under the ropes by Ethelbert Stewart, commissioner of statistics of the U. S. department of labor, with figures comparing the decrease in the workers' cost of living since 1925 with the decrease in the workers' wages for the same period.

Commissioner Stewart pointed out that during the period between December, 1925, and June, 1931, the merchants, landlords, and other dealers in the workers' necessities of life reduced the price of them about 15 per cent.

But during this same period employers in the manufacturing industries alone reduced the total amount paid the workers in wages almost 40 per cent.

"This decrease of 40 per cent in pay roll," the commissioner explained, "does not mean, of course, that individual wage rates were cut in such proportion. Most of the decline was due to the discharge of employes, to the prorating of jobs, and to short-time work.

"But it does mean that the income and consequently the purchasing power of employes in manufacturing industries as a whole was less by 40 per cent than it was in 1925, as the widespread character of the depression leaves no reason to believe that workers dropped or prorated in manufacturing industries could obtain jobs elsewhere."

Commissioner Stewart also points out the significant fact that merchants capture for themselves a large portion of the decreased prices of commodities by not passing them along to the consumers, of whom the wage-earners constitute a very large percentage.

From December, 1925, to June, 1931, he says, the purchasing power of the wholesalers' dollar increased 48 cents, while the purchasing power of the wage-earners' dollar, which he calls the "cost-of-living dollar," increased only 18 cents. This means that wholesalers and retailers combined swiped 28 cents out of a total of 48 cents of the reduction in the factory price of the articles making up the workers' living.

"Meanwhile," continues Commissioner Stewart, "as the number of dollars which the workers, at least those in the manufacturing industries, had to spend had shrunk, as noted, by some 40 per cent, the workers attached to manufacturing industries, taken as a whole, not suffered far more from declining pay rolls than they gained from lower prices on the things they had to buy.

"Similar detailed information for other groups of industrial workers is not available, but such as is available indicates that the situation of most other groups of workers has been little if any better than manufacturing."

The cost-of-living-wage propagandists rely largely on the reduction in the price of food products, which has fallen 28 per cent.

But while food is the largest single item in the workers' budget, it represents only 38 per cent of his expenditures. Other necessaries have not declined nearly as much. Indeed, such things as street car fares and doctors' fees, representing 21 per cent of the expenditure of the average worker's family, were actually higher in 1931 than in December, 1925.

"Stated in another way," Commissioner Stewart concludes, "the change in the cost of living of the family, as between December, 1925, and June, 1931, was:

"Food decreased to 28.5 per cent, clothing decreased 13.8 per cent, fuel and light decreased 11.5 per cent, house furnishing goods decreased 17.4 per cent, miscellaneous items increased 1.5 per cent.

"The weighted average decrease of all items was 15.5 per cent."

The government's statistics show that the dealers in the necessaries of life that make up the workers' living decreased the price of them 15 per cent since 1925.

The statistics also show that the owners of our industrial establishments cut wage payments 40 per cent during the same period.

This does not leave much ground for the cost-of-living wage propagandists to stand on.

THE RIGHT TO WORK

By WILLIAM GREEN
President of the American Federation of Labor

The following editorial by William Green, interpreting the principle of the right to work adopted by the 1931 convention of the American Federation of Labor, is published in the November issue of the American Federationist:

The Vancouver convention put a new emphasis on the inalienable right of an American citizen to work. In the decades that have passed since the drafting of the Declaration of Independence changing industrial conditions emphasize the need for the establishment of this right that is basic for human welfare.

Work entitles the individual to the means for sustenance because it is an essential factor in the creation of wealth. Persistent denial of the right to work in effect abrogates the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Under modern economic conditions the right to work—to earn a living—are often not under the control of the individual.

Since he must depend upon others for this right it should be an accepted, recognized social principle. In order to safeguard voluntary principles while maintaining job security, we do not propose altering the present economic order, but a recognition of the facts involved in it.

Workers employed in a business undertaking make an investment in that undertaking that is just as essential as the capital invested. Labor and management are the partners of those who supply the capital.

Acceptance of this fact entails recognition of the equities of these partners and provisions to secure their rights. For the wage-earner, the major equity is job security—the obligation of the establishment to continue to provide employment or to make an adjustment with the worker based upon recognition of his equities.

Our industries have been accustomed to hire large numbers of workers by the day and to lay them off at convenience. Labor submits that industries must be required to do longer range planning. They must be prepared to hire workers for a definite time and to meet the equities of workers growing out of such work contracts.

The right to work implies a legal right to income from the industrial undertaking that has enrolled the worker as a member of its producing staff.

Recognition of the right to work will stabilize industrial planning and put greater stability into the lives of millions of wage-earners.

The "Junior Times," house organ printed by and for employes of the morning paper, has discovered why the proofreader loses his job. The "exchange editor" of the Times' family news dug up a review of a book called "Breaks," by a writer in Editor and Publisher, and reprinted the choice collection of boners listed below.

The errors, of course, were all made before the advent of prohibition, when printers, proofreaders and editors, like all other good citizens, quit drinking. The Labor World takes the liberty of supplying the headlines:

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

THE Civil war period in the industrial history of the United States is best described by the term, "the epoch of the second American industrial revolution." Beginning with the early 1840's a gradual change had taken place in the relations between employes and employers, or rather a crystallizing of the lines between them. By the time of the few short years whose political strife presaged a coming conflict between the states of the Union employe and employer occupied about the same definite positions in relation to each other as they do today. More and more employes were resenting the conditions forced on them by the captains of industry, especially the heartless and uncompromising employers of New England and the east in general. Employers on their part resented with equal animosity what they termed "the unwarranted usurpation of our fundamental rights as the sole owners of American industry" by the "menials whom we pay wages to do that work which we specify and over which [work] we have complete control."

Employers were incensed against organized labor because of the many reforms it had either initiated or become associated with as the prime mover. The employers realized enlightenment of the masses spelled better living conditions, and better living conditions would necessarily call for higher wages. No trace of humanitarian impulses can be found in the attitude of employers as a national body immediately preceding the Civil war. In fact, employers' associations were being formed to counteract everything advocated by the wage-earners.

It was at this particular period in the industrial history of the United States employers became "profit conscious"—they were beginning to set the value of profits above the health as well as the religious well-being of wage-earners. The employers' organizations were beginning to send up the cry that the unions "invade the rights of industry" and unions were likewise held to "compromise the rights of unorganized labor." They resolved that the methods of the unionists were "most obnoxious," and on another occasion an employers' association resolved "that the Trades Union is the growth of Monarchial Government and ill adapted to our Republican Institutions."

What Next!

A cracker of "vest-pocket size" which is said to supply the staple elements in the human diet, has been developed at the Ohio State university. It is composed of wheat and milk and is very dry and compact, making it capable of being kept over a long period of time. It is salted and has the taste of whole wheat bread.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

A few loyal sours remembered that Sunday was the first of the month of November and attended the society's meeting at the Auditorium. On motion of Herman Dodds, it was decided to hold the meeting in the main auditorium where the wrestling matches are the events of Tuesday evenings. It is rumored that Herman is manager of Dick Stamper and is going to match him with Chief Tommy Marvin for the next show.

The Peruchi Players seem to be going over in a big way at the auditorium. The new prices make it possible for almost anyone to enjoy the fine acting of the players. And the great part of it is the eight-piece union orchestra under the able direction of Bill Krug. It's worth the price of admission alone.

Hot coffee, cereal and the Sunshine boys of WDOD are the regular menu for the radio listeners who are able to sit in on the 7:30 programs. Ralph Miller, Herman Dodds and Sam Parker make out the trio—and do they go.

They say the depression is hurting dance work in Chattanooga. However, the writer finds that there were twelve dances held in Chattanooga last week. The sad part of it is that nine of these were played by non-union orchestras. The non-affiliated groups play for only a percentage of what the local bands charge. Employers find that they can engage non-union musicians and no complaint will be registered. So they take the cheapest and easiest course and our local appears too busy to molest them.

Melody Lane regrets the illness in the family of the secretary, Alex Rankin.

Members are requested to pay their dues promptly. Fines and penalties will be assessed those who fail to come across.

The convention came and saw and conquered but its memory lingers on.

Ralph Miller has been appointed as chairman of a committee to go over the books of the local and compile a complete list of the members in good standing. The Sunshine boy has quite a job.

Breadlines

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

The evil of the breadline is not in the bare fact of its existence. Its evil lies in the contributory elements that have led to its existence, elements which existed before the breadline was formed and which affected the men seeking free food before they took their places in the line and which forced them to become beggars of bread.

A man in a breadline is a man who has lost his morale. He has lost his morale because he has been deprived of work. A breadline, then, is just so much human morale gone to waste!

A breadline feeds a man where he is and does nothing in a concrete way to lift him to higher levels. Its only tendency can be nothing else than a force to pull him down—after he has been fed. A chunk of bread and a bowl of so-called charity soup handed out to a man in a breadline is a form of sympathy. He is hungry, that is true, but his being hungry and receiving something to assuage his gnawing hunger doesn't keep the food given him from being a form of sympathy.

Feeding a man in a breadline is merely giving him sustenance he has not earned to keep him alive in his present state of existence. And that is exactly the same treatment we accord animals in our public zoos! Such a method of feeding creatures—whether men or animals—is not rehabilitation, building the creature up. It is merely keeping a creature alive.

What a man out of work needs is rehabilitation—and rehabilitation to a man out of work is—work!

Bankers Condemned For Wage Cut Policy

The action of bankers in demanding wage reductions to parallel price declines is emphatically condemned by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report to the federation's 1931 convention.

"Bankers have argued that the decline in the costs of living meant that a wage cut would not lower standards of living," the report says.

"Their understanding of the situation was based upon a fundamental hypothesis that labor should be kept within certain definite limits that would keep it always dependent—a modern version of the master and servant philosophy that has curbed labor's efforts and ambitions for progress.

"Labor believes that it has a right to something more than its present share in returns on the output of industries—that it is a partner in production and should have status accordingly.

"Labor also points to the fact that wages constitute a very large portion of the buying power upon which retail sales depend to form a market for our products.

"Wages are not just the price of labor in the market governed by the law of supply and demand. They are advance credit paid in advance of the product which the worker helped to create. Higher wages are necessary to maintain an economic machine geared to high production.

"Labor further points out that wage rates and labor costs are not the same thing and that high wage rates usually resulted in low labor costs per unit production.

"Furthermore, the maintenance of wage rates is a dynamic factor in sustaining our economic machine and in supporting confidence. The sturdy common sense of American wage-earners has been one of the most constructive stabilizing forces in this business depression. To cut his already inadequate wages in addition to reducing him to part time work would be a most sorry expression of appreciation."

Congress Blocked Oil Ban Asked by Labor

The difficulty which often confronts organized labor in securing legislation of interest to the workers from a hostile congress is well illustrated by the experience of the oil embargo bill in the last session of congress as recounted by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report on national labor legislation to the 1931 convention of the federation at Vancouver, B. C.

There were many thousands of unemployed oil "well workers" in the United States. Despite this, American oil interests began the wholesale importation of oil from South America, which curtailed the market for our own oil and added many more oil well workers to the unemployed.

"After an agreement had been reached by the oil producers to reduce production," the council stated, "certain interests began to import oil into the country from Venezuela. Before the decrease of production was agreed to only 13,000,000 barrels of oil came from Venezuela yearly. This soon grew to 117,000,000 barrels. Meanwhile 100,000 oil workers were made idle.

"Bills were introduced in congress to place an embargo on the importation of oil and they were supported by the American Federation of Labor. The refusal of congress to listen to the pleas of the unemployed oil workers so aroused certain senators that a filibuster was begun in the closing hours of the session which prevented all legislation being considered."

The council points out that, despite the failure of the embargo on foreign oil, congress materially relieved unemployment among the oil workers by inserting a provision in the navy department appropriation bill that "no part of the appropriation shall be available for the purchase of any kind of fuel of foreign production where oil produced in the United States or its possessions may be procurable, notwithstanding that oil production of the United States or its possessions may cost more than oil of foreign production."

OPEN DRIVE FOR SUPPORT UNION LABEL

ming Months to See Intensive Campaign.

LOCAL WORKERS TO HAVE PART IN MOVE

anning Declares Demand for Label Now More Effective Than Ever.

n intensive campaign to run dur- the fall and winter months, dur- which every trades unionist in erica will be called upon to de- nd union labeled goods exclu- ely, will shortly be inaugurated, e Chattanooga workers are ex- ted to have a part in the drive, normal. At a time when purchas- power has been curtailed, spend- union-earned money for union- ade products will be more effective ever before, it is explained by n J. Manning, secretary-treasurer the Union Label Trades Depart- nt of the American Federation of bor, in a letter received in Chat- nooga this week. A concerted ef- t along this line will bring pres- e to bear upon the non-union em- oyer at a time when every dollar every penny counts, Mr. Man- g declares.

The letter follows:

We are now about to inaugu- ate plans for an intensive cam- aign for the autumn and win- r months. These plans take in all labor organizations and all in- ividual members of organized abor because no matter how well our plans are outlined and no matter how high our hopes of success for this campaign may be, we will be unsuccessful un- less we have the full co-operation of every one.

No worthwhile achievement was ever accomplished that did not have the support of those it was to help. The greatest lead- rs in history would have failed if they did not have staunch and loyal adherents.

What is true of one movement is equally true of another. To make union label work success- ful, we must have the full sup- port of all international unions, local unions, state federations of labor, central bodies, union label leagues and individual union members.

While this support was always necessary, it is more so now on account of the unusual economic conditions, which curtail pur- chasing power.

But even with curtailed pur- chasing power, trades unionists can do much to relieve unemploy- ment and put members of organ- ized labor to work by using their intelligence and spending union earned money for the products and services of their fellow mem- bers.

There is a great opportunity to do that which never was ac- complished in full measure in times of plenty. There is a great opportunity to use brain power and will power so that even with our curtailed purchasing power, the union shop will get more business than ever before.

Spending judiciously and wise- ly with the union shop now will be to our advantage, even more than heretofore, because it will bring pressure to bear on the non-union employer in a cru- cial time when every dollar and every penny counts.

The open shop has prospered and flourished in the past to a great extent by the patronage of the unthinking and careless members of organized labor. Now is the time to end this evil. It can never be accomplished by simply writing and talking about it. Action must be taken. Union power and intelligence must be used. Union earned money must support the union shop and openly show the non-union em- ployer and his non-union em- ployes that organized labor is a power—a power that has awak- ened and that has determined to use its enemies with its dead- liest weapon—purchasing power! Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons afford ample opportuni- ties to put our plans in opera- tion. Every one will spend a dollar. Be sure and make that dollar count. Remember the union label when spending union earned money. Demand the union label, the card and working button and accomplish with curtailed purchasing power more than has ever been accomplished in times of plenty.

We would like to hear from those willing to co-operate with us in our efforts to help the union shop.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF.

Ottawa, Canada. — Unemployment relief projects involving a federal government contribution of $6,000,000 were approved by the cabinet of the Canadian government.

Church Leader 'Soaks' Low Wage Employes

Non-Union Workers in Brush and Broom Manufacturing Plant Forced to Pay Dearly for Broken Windows.

St. Johns, N. B., Nov. 12.—Louis Simms, president of T. S. Simms & Company, manufacturing brushes and brooms at Fairville, N. B., has a novel system to compensate the firm for glass breakage.

The factory building is chiefly of glass. Each pane of glass can be bought for three cents. When one of the little panes is broken, it is charged up against the employes working in the department in which the broken pane is located. Each member of the department is fined three cents. Thus it is that in one department $1.50 has been collected for one pane. The money is extracted from the pay of each employe in the department.

Another unique plan was for Mrs. Simms to deliver lectures on the need of more church work in connection with the Baptist denomination, the hour chosen being from 12:30 to 1, which meant the workers had to hurry from their lunch a half hour in advance of normal. Mr. Simms is president of the Baptist Church Brotherhood and very active in church activities.

The Simms plan is nonunion and is claimed to pay the lowest wages of any brush and broom factory in North America. At present it is operating on a working basis of four days per week, with a reduced crew volume.

In order to combat union organization, Simms has formed a "shop council plan."

O'CONNOR RAPS WAGE-CUTTERS

New Knoxville Mayor Declares Pay Slashes Will Not End Depression.

"I am not one of those who believe the cure for the depression is in cutting wages," Mayor John T. O'Connor, of Knoxville, is quoted by Progressive Labor as saying. "Advocates of that theory have been practicing it for two years," he continued, "and what has been the result? The depression is still on, and the peak of unemployment will probably be reached this winter."

Mayor O'Connor's position, as quoted by the Knoxville paper, while by no means surprising to those who know him, is particularly interesting as possibly his first public expression on the policy of pay cuts. A significant statement quoted in the interview is the executive's declaration that cry for lower taxes comes mostly from investors and not from poor home owners.

Progressive Labor said:

Mayor John T. O'Connor this morning came out in an interview unreservedly against any attempt that might be made to reduce wages among the city employes. The statement was prompted by the resignation of Director of Finance Borden who has resigned to accept a more lucrative position in West Palm Beach, Fla.

The mayor said that he was opposed to the cutting of the city manager's salary some weeks ago, but that he could not prevent the action of the council.

"I don't know if the attempt will be made, but if it is I will fight it," O'Connor said. "I am not one of those who believe that the cure for the depression is wage-cutting. Advocates of that theory have been practicing it for the last two years and what has been the result? The depression is still on and the peak of unemployment will probably be reached this winter."

The cry for lower taxes, he said, comes mainly from the investor type of home owner—the person to whom a home is not something to live in and rear a family but something to produce a profit on an investment. "They built when prices were high and values inflated," O'Connor said. "The depression came along and trapped them. Now they expect the city to get them out of the hole."

FEDERAL FUND NECESSARY TO FEED AND CLOTHE IDLE

Washington.—An emphatic warning that federal appropriations would have to be made to feed and clothe the unemployed featured the address of William Hodson, New York City welfare director, before the Washington city-wide social work conference.

"We are facing the possibility of a larger measure of human suffering this winter than ever before in the history of this country," Hodson declared. "Unless we can provide the means for relief, either through private or public financing, we shall face a kind of national disaster that is quite unthinkable.

"I hope, therefore, that you social workers are not going to adopt the attitude that the question of federal aid is not your concern, but instead, that you are going to have convictions on this issue. We have come to the point where we must say definitely that this thing ought to be done. By making this decision we will have assumed the leadership that the country needs so much today."

Union Men Resent "Bombing" Article

Moving Picture Machine Operators Brand Statements in Times Story of Alleged Dynamiting as Unfair and Inaccurate. Want Investigation of Whole Affair, and Offer Co-Operation to Police.

HERE'S ANOTHER DYNAMITING STORY

Dynamiting of local union offices at Kansas City, and the home of a representative of the International Union, were given as immediate cause for a strike order against all theaters controlled by the Fox Film corporation, which would have taken effect Friday, but which was rescinded Wednesday night when an agreement was reached between the film corporation and International President William Canavan, of the operators' union.

Chattanooga moving picture machine operators were bitterly resentful Thursday morning at a news story appearing in the Times which detailed an alleged effort to bomb a negro movie house, and quoted the police department as inferring that union operators might be guilty of the near (?) explosion.

The story alleged that a quantity of dynamite, with a long fuse attached, had been discovered in the Amusu theater, a colored house on Main street, and it was declared that the fuse had been scorched or slightly burned.

"Operators of the projection machinery, who were recently released when the management refused to meet their demands of $70 per week, may have plotted the destruction of the movie house, police reported," said the "news" article in the morning paper. "It is understood by the police "that the manager of the theater has had difficulties with the released employes," the article continues, but later, quoting the theater manager himself, it says, "he denied he had experienced trouble with his employes."

Representatives of Local 259 Thursday morning branded the entire story as an outrage and an unfair and uncalled-for reflection upon a group of law-abiding citizens.

The facts in the case, as stated by J. Burson Lowry, president of Local 259, and approved by the executive committee, are as follows:

For some time past operators at the colored theater have had considerable trouble with the management regarding sanitary conditions in the operators' booth, which had become practically unbearable, and which were not corrected. When the management recently gave notice, therefore, that services of union operators would not longer be desired, no action whatever was taken by the oganization, and at a subsequent meeting a resolution was passed to the effect that no publicity or other methods of regaining the house would be used. It was held that the union's chief claim for recognition is the craftsmanship and competency of its members, and the theater management would soon discover the desirability of dealing with the organization, both in respect to wages and sanitary conditions.

Statement attributed to the police department that the operators were "released" because of a demand for $70 per week was characterized as propaganda, the facts being that the wage scale was only $45 per week, and no demands were made for increases.

Concerning the charges that "stink bombs" have been placed in the theater, Mr. Lowry suggested it might be hard to prove that there was any difference in the aroma of the theater atmosphere from that which has existed for months, even though such "bombs" had been placed.

"Chattanooga picture operators are law-abiding," said Mr. Lowry, "and we deplore the suggestion, allegedly emanating from the police department, that our members might be guilty of dynamiting; we resent the spirit in which this entire article was written, and we offer every cooperation to the police and detective departments in getting to the bottom of this alleged 'outrage.'"

The Times reporter, he recalled, "dug up" an item many weeks old which told of the arrest, in New York city, of two moving picture operators charged with making "stink bombs," and used it to add "interest" to his big scoop. The facts of this incident, Mr. Lowry said, might have been learned had the Times reporter shown as much diligence in securing statements from the operators as he did from the police department. Neither of the men arrested in New York, Mr. Lowry declared, had ever been members of the local union.

Chief of Police Ray Bryan was first called Thursday morning in reference to the article, but stated any information secured by the Times reporter must have come from the detective department. Chief of Detectives Hackett, when interviewed, stated he had merely repeated reports which had come to him from the theater management, and had no intention of doing an injustice to organized workers. He said he would be glad to have the cooperation of the union members in placing the blame for the alleged outrage where it rightfully belongs.

W. A. Witt New Head Painters' Local 226

W. A. "Zeke" Witt, one of the best-known trades unionists in Chattanooga, was last Thursday night named president of Local 226, Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, succeeding J. W. Smith, who resigned.

Mr. Witt has been a member of Local 226 as long as the oldest inhabitant can remember, and has served his union in almost every capacity during those years. His father, George Witt, was one of the organizers of the first union of his craft in Chattanooga, as was an older brother, "Skinny" Witt, and the three, with E. K. Witt, another brother, have maintained continuous membership for many years.

Friends of "Zeke" believe he will make a good record in guiding the local over the stormy seas brought about by the depression with its many hard problems.

600,000 FEDERAL EMPLOYES GET WEEKLY HALF HOLIDAY

The trade union movement during last winter's session of congress secured the enactment of laws giving the shorter work week without reduction in pay to over half a million government employes, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor said in its report on national labor legislation to the 1931 convention of the federation at Vancouver.

"Nearly 600,000 employes of the federal government and the District of Columbia," the council stated, "were granted a shorter work day on Saturdays the year around in two laws enacted by congress, without reduction in wages and salaries. The first provided for a 44-hour week for 315,000 employes in the postal service and the others were later given the same benefit in the law enacted just before congress adjourned. Representatives of all organizations affected worked valiantly for success.

"While the postal employes' bill passed both houses unanimously without a voice being raised against it, the other bill was opposed by one representative on the floor, but the house passed it unanimously."

The council's report also records the fact that President Hoover vetoed the bill passed by congress providing for increase of $100 per annum for 926 underpaid village letter carriers.

Always demanding the UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD is evidence that you are a real live member of organized labor.

Thanks!

VIRGINIA STAGGERS ROAD WORK FOR IDLE RELIEF

Richmond, Va.—Twenty-five hundred additional highway workers will be employed by the Virginia department of highways during the coming winter by "staggering" work. There will be two divisions of workers, each employed for alternate weeks, State Highway Commissioner Henry G. Shirley announced.

Mr. Shirley said the plan will go into operation Nov. 16 and that after that date contracts awarded will require that contractors, as well as the state, shall use the alternate week system.

Preference will be given to laborers who are jobless, Shirley said, and social agencies in areas in which there is highway work in progress will be asked to co-operate in placing workers who are in greatest need.

JOBLESS WORKER KILLS FAMILY

New York.—Despondent at the loss of his job, Joseph Kanzian, a waiter, killed his wife, their widowed daughter and her 4-year-old son, and then committed suicide by inhaling illuminating gas. The daughter was a teacher in the public schools.

IDLE HOME OWNERS GIVEN MORTGAGE MORATORIUM

Geneva, N. Y.—The New York State Savings and Loan associations at their annual conference here voted to declare a moratorium on all mortgages on homes whose unemployed owners are paying for them through loan associations and are unable to meet the payments.

George L. Bliss, of New York, president of the association, said all members had pledged themselves to protect these homes to the limit of their ability.

J. C. Rogers Loses Son, Charles Eugene

Charles Eugene Rogers, 29-year-old son of J. C. Rogers, veteran official of Lodge 1450, Machinists, passed away at a local hospital last Sunday morning at an early hour. Deceased had been ill but a short time. Funeral services were held Monday afternoon from the Tabernacle Baptist church, Rev. W. F. Hinesley officiating, and interment followed in Forest Hills cemetery.

The Labor World speaks for the entire local movement in extending sincerest sympathy to Brother Rogers and other relatives of the deceased.

SALES TAX FAVORS RICH AND VICTIMIZES THE POOR

The sales tax is emphatically condemned as an attempt to relieve the rich from taxation and saddle it on the poor by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

"Although defeated year after year in every attempt to saddle the 'nuisance' under the name of 'sales tax' upon the people," the council says, "another campaign has been launched to bring about that legislation in the next congress.

"High public officials also have advanced the idea that the best way in which income taxes could be increased would be by decreasing the exemption of married men to $2,000 and single men to $1,000.

"The objective of those who pay high taxes is to relieve the well-to-do from taxation and place the burden upon those least able to bear it. The argument used in advocating the sales tax has been: if you tax the people so they do not know it they cannot object; but if they know they are paying a tax they will object.

"We pay an indirect tax on every purchase we make. In 1927 only 2.2 per cent of our then 114,000,000 population paid income taxes and three-tenths of 1 per cent paid 95.5 per cent of the total income tax. For 1930, 2 per cent of the population paid all the income taxes. These are treasury figures.

"The only persons to be benefited by the consumption tax are the 2 per cent of the population who pay an income tax. On the other hand, the burden of taxation would fall upon the 98 per cent who do not pay an income tax. Besides they now pay an indirect tax on everything they buy. The 'sales tax' will increase that tax load."

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

Some Big Industries Report Improvement

More Jobs in Coal Mining, Shoe Factories and Tobacco Plants, United States Employment Service Reports.

Washington, Nov. 12.—The United States employment service announces that reports received on the industrial and employment situation throughout the country for September revealed some improvement in several of the major industries.

Coal mining increased its activities and put thousands of men back to work and a large number of part-time workers were returned to full time, the report said. The boot and shoe and cigar and cigarette industries likewise reported employment gains.

Textile establishments experienced a seasonal upswing, while highway construction and harvesting continued to use many workers, it was said. The automobile and iron and steel industries recorded no change.

"While there was some improvement in the industrial situation generally, the larger cities reported considerable unemployment, which embraced virtually all trades and included professional and clerical help," a synopsis of the report said.

Engineers Plan Action to Speed Up Public Works

Program Framed to End Delay in Governmental Projects and Thus Furnish Work for Large Number of Idle.

Washington, Nov. 12.—Through the American Engineering council, the engineering profession has framed a public works program characterized "as a necessary and important approach to answering the present impelling question: What work can now be provided the millions not employed?"

This program, made public at a meeting of the administrative board of the council in Washington, includes all construction of whatever character undertaken by national, state, county and municipal governments and their several subdivisions as well as that of quasi-governmental bodies. It will be carried out by state committees of the council which are now actively at work in all sections of the country.

People Disappointed.

"The American people have been greatly disappointed because public developments have not served the useful purpose they anticipated in relieving unemployment," the council's announcement declared. "They have been disappointed notwithstanding expenditures for public works by all governmental agencies have been approximately 30 per cent higher in 1931 than in 1930 and the total amount appropriated according to the best information available was $530,455,000.

"Despite this increased expenditure it is commonly believed there have been unnecessary and inordinate delays, and much more work should have been opened. Much of the delay has been due to the public, selfish interests and political considerations.

"It is believed that work on public projects for which appropriations have been made can be materially speeded up. It is further believed that a careful canvass made throughout the country would bring to light a sufficient amount of necessary work when financed to provide employment during the next six months or more for a very large number of the unemployed. It is further believed that this necessary work can be financed without great difficulty.

Plan of Action.

"The profession proposes to do the following in co-operation with the Gifford committee, governmental agencies and others:

"List all governmental projects authorized and for which appropriations have been made or may be made in the near future.

"Determine the status of each project.

"If the project is being delayed, ascertain the cause or causes thereof.

"If an avoidable delay is due to some governmental agency, present the facts to the governmental official having the authority to remove the cause of the delay, and press immediate action.

"If an unavoidable delay is due to the public or some part thereof, endeavor to reach the responsible party or parties and get action.

Publicity to Force Action.

"If either case obtains and action is not taken in due time, through publicity acquaint the public with the facts so that public opinion will force action."

It is impossible at this time for any one to estimate the severity or duration of unemployment for the next six months, declared the announcement, continuing:

"While it may possibly be taken care of by the voluntary contributions to be secured under the auspices of the Gifford committee, it will be the highest wisdom to provide employment by the means outlined which will exceed the resources of private subscription. In such case the use of the credit facilities of the national government for the support of local operations will be inevitable."

SEES DEPRESSION AS SCHEME TO 'DEFLATE' LABOR

Lawyer Believes Slump Artificially Prolonged.

THINKS WORKERS ARE "GOATS" OF BIG PLOT

Says Sane Fellows on Other Side of Question Must See the Light.

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Nov. 12.—David H. Jackson, a distinguished member of the Chicago bar, believes that the present depression has been artificially prolonged by the big financial interests of the country and their affiliates among the international bankers in order to effect deflation of the incomes of the wage-earners, small business and professional people and the farmers.

Mr. Jackson's opinions in reference to financial and business matters are of great value because of his wide experience and affiliations. He is a former bank president, former chairman of the Illinois commerce commission, former president of the Lincoln park board and former chief of the securities division of the secretary of state's office of Illinois.

Popular Speaker on Banking.

Mr. Jackson was the chairman of the first great mass meeting of Chicago bank depositors, held in the Broadway Armory following the big bank crash here early in June. Since that time he has become a popular radio speaker on the subject of banking and kindred matters. He is a member of the law firm of Cleveland & Jackson, 31 South Clark street.

Mr. Jackson very freely and frankly expressed his views in an hour's interview with International Labor News Service.

"You have got to get some of the more sane fellows on the other side of this question to see the light," he said.

Bond Buyers Cheated.

"I have been shocked at various times during the past few months," he continued, "at the remarks which have been made by men in high positions with some of our leading financial institutions. They have said that people who bought highly inflated mortgage bonds, relying on the representations of bond houses and banks, are not entitled to any consideration. They have said that these people got themselves into the mess and that nobody owes them the duty of trying to get them out. Now, as a matter of fact, most of these people did not get themselves into the mess. They were lied to and cheated, and if the leading financial interests of the country want to regain the confidence of the investors, it seems to me that they are under the highest obligation to try to work out the present situation without further losses to the investors.

"It has even been charged, with some plausability, that the present depression has been allowed to continue, if it was not deliberately brought about, by powerful financial interests affiliated with international bankers for the purpose of deflation. Whether the charge is true or not, it is a fact that during the past few months repeatedly, in large banking circles, we have heard remarks like this: 'Values must be deflated,' 'Prices have been too high,' 'The inflation must be taken out.' These remarks have become more common as the depression continues. They have not come from working people, small business people or people in the ordinary walks of life. They are heard in big banks and are repeated by the dependents and satellites of these great luminaries.

What Is Meant by Deflation?

"Perhaps it would be a good idea to inquire just what is meant by deflation. Do the people who so glibly talk about deflation mean that interest rates are to be deflated? Do they mean that the fees for promotion of financial enterprises are to be lowered? Do they mean that the hundred-thousand-dollar-a-year men, with their millon-dollar bonuses, are to be cut? Do they mean that the bankers, particularly the international bankers, are going to take less profits? No! If the speakers think at all, they mean just one thing, only one thing. They mean that the wages and rewards of working people are to be deflated. The only person who will have his income deflated will be the producer of our wealth. That is all deflation means. They try to sugar-coat the dose by saying the cost of living will be reduced. Well, the cost of living was already slowly dropping. New inventions and methods of work were already bringing this about. But why shouldn't working people have the benefit of these reductions? Why shouldn't the standard of living gradually improve? The Bible says: 'The laborer is worthy of his hire.'"

Nanuet, N. Y.—Nine democratic candidates for state and county offices in Rickland county voted to donate, if elected, 10 per cent of their salaries to an unemployment relief fund.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter I
PART IV: CONTEMPORARY OPINION OF JESUS

7. What People of Jesus' Time Thought of Him. Last week we saw how after the Sermon on the Mount, where Jesus had laid down the broad principles of His social gospel in a form for the multitude to follow, this same multitude which came to hear Him "besought him that he would depart out of their coasts." We saw how this attitude on the part of the people was a result of the whispering campaign carried on by the scribes and Pharisees againt Jesus following that Sermon. This week we will consider a reference to the esteem in which Jesus was held by the populace by glancing at the episode of the Feeding of the Four Thousand. Here again a great multitude comes to see Jesus, to crowd about Him and hear His preaching. For three days, we learn from Matthew's gospel, the people had stayed near the Master and He, realizing that such a concourse of people, without means of sustenance other than that which they could carry in bundles or gather from the surrounding neighborhood, informed His disciples of His intention of not letting the people continue hungry any longer. The outcome of the matter was that the people were told to seat themselves on the ground, and we are informed by the writer of the gospel that four thousand people that day were fed.

WM. L. MOSS

In the very next chapter we are told that Jesus, having drawn a multitude about Him by His preaching, again arouses the enmity of the Pharisees. This time we learn that it is the Pharisees and the Sadducees, and not the Pharisees and scribes, who are joined against Him. Having undoubtedly witnessed the feeding of the four thousand people related in the preceding (15th) chapter, here in the 16th chapter we read that the Pharisees and Sadducees, attempting playing on Jesus' miraculous powers, cunningly desire "that He would shew them a sign from heaven."

Restless, could not sleep

"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would have to lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.

My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

STING OF UNEMPLOYMENT.

The poignant effect on the workers of the wholesale refusal of the owners and managers of industry to employ them is tersely described by the American Federation of Labor Executive Council's analysis of recent statistics on unemployment in its report to the 1931 convention of the federation.

In April, 1930, the United States bureau of census collected figures on the number of jobless. The bureau's returns showed 3,187,647 persons without work. Less than a quarter of them had been "laid off," which is a technical term used by employers and personnel statisticians to indicate a worker whom the employers refuse to hire but keep on their list to be re-employed at some uncertain date when business picks up.

Of the 3,187,647 who were reported by the census bureau as without jobs, 2,429,062 had been discharged and had no jobs to which they thought they could return.

On these figures the council makes the following comment:

Of those without jobs 42 per cent were heads of families. This means that over one million families were without their main source of income or with no income at all. And they were forced to remain so for a considerable time.

The difficulty of finding a job is shown strikingly. Although the depression was not nearly so severe in April, 1930, as since then 55 per cent of those without jobs had been unemployed for more than two months, 40 per cent had been out of work over three months, and 14 per cent had been out for over six months.

These figures indicate one major problem: to speed up contact between unemployed worker and job.

A large proportion of the unemployed were over 45 years of age. Of all those 20 years old and over, 34 per cent were over 45 and 16 per cent over 55 years old. The exact significance of these figures will be known when the census publishes its report showing the numbers of workers over 45. In any case, it is clear that unemployment strikes those over 45 severely.

Analyzed by industries the council points out that the coal mine operators had dealt most ruthlessly with their employes by dismissing 20.2 per cent of the coal miners. The building industry employers had discharged 19 per cent of their employes. Taken as a whole the employers in the manufacturing industries had landed 8.9 per cent of the industrial workers in the army of the out-of-works.

The census figures revealed that only 2.8 of the employes engaged in government and professional work were without jobs, and that 3.9 per cent of the employes in trade, 4.9 of the farm workers, and 6.4 per cent of the transportation workers were out of work.

The council points out that on the basis of a census of the unemployed taken in nineteen cities in January, 1931, the department of commerce estimated the jobless at 6,300,000. In the nineteen cities the figures showed the jobless had increased 148 per cent since April, 1930.

The council places emphasis on the unemployment figures collected by the American Federation of Labor from the affiliated unions.

"The bureau of labor statistics," the council says, "now furnishes employment indexes in most of the important industrial fields. But the American Federation of Labor is the only organization gathering monthly figures on unemployment representing industry in general. We also publish the only monthly estimates of total unemployment in the United States. These monthly figures are exceedingly important. They enable the country to keep constantly in touch with unemployment development. Reports from trade unions now represent over 2,500 unions with a membership of 750,000."

GOOD ELECTION NEWS.

Good news in the elections. Exceedingly good news for labor.

David Baird, Jr., who as a United States senator voted for Parker and whose labor record was generally bad, was snowed under by A. Harry Moore for governor of New Jersey. New Jersey labor took off its coat and fought for Moore.

Mayor Murphy, of Detroit, who has been assailed by reactionaries, sailed back into office with a tremendous vote.

Good election news. Abraham Lincoln scores again. You can't fool the people all the time.

THE BUILDER'S BURDEN.

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, points out that, as a rule, it costs the home builder $1,099 to borrow $4,500 for his operation.

Obviously, many home lovers, facing that cost, do not build.

Materials are not sold, men are not employed, because the over-load of interest is too great.

Families continue to rent, rather than build, because they cannot pay the load of interest.

A presidential commission is seeking ways of reducing this load. It is one of the kinks that must be taken out of the business structure for the good of the structure itself. The sooner the better.

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Though earnings of the United States Steel corporation have not covered dividends on its many millions of shares of stock, directors recently voted nearly twelve million dollars from the corporation's fat surplus to meet the regular $1 quarterly payment on common and $1.25 on preferred stock.

A financial writer hails the action of the directors as "an eloquent expression of faith in early industrial recovery." To the thousands of Steel's employes whose wages were cut 10 per cent not long ago it is something else.

Evidently Steel's directors are determined not to let stockholders starve, no matter what becomes of the workers.

William F. Kelly, vice-president of the United Textile Workers of America, points out in a letter to the president's committee on unemployment relief that public officials and persons of influence can bring "pitiless publicity" to bear on employers who increase hours of labor at this time—a time when it is more important than ever that hours be not lengthened but shortened. He writes:

"Preachment and good advice by eminent citizens, relief workers and economists directed at employers of olabor will be just so much 'poppycock' in the eyes of the average worker until steps are taken which will cause employers to translate exhortation into practical action. During the present depression, manufacturers and others are constantly called upon to divide available work as far as possible so as to give employment to as many people as possible. This is the very least that any employer could be expected to do under present circumstances.

"In actual practice, we have found that employers have not followed this advice, but have actually adopted a contrary policy in a majority of cases. Taking advantage of the helplessness of the workers in a time of depression, every possible effort has been made to increase hours of labor apparently so as to have a precedent for destroying all standards when business booms again."

"Backward, Turn Backward, O Time"

Handsome Hal Harks Back to Ante-Bellum Days for an Idea.

Editor The Labor World:

Since the cold weather has come around and the concrete pavements chill the bottom of my feet, I am reminded that it's just about time for somebody to kill the old "steer" and put up a barrel of what is commonly known as corned beef. If you know of any forehanded person who is going to, or has already done that, I wish you would please give me his address!

This expression "corned beef" is, I believe, a misnomer. It should be "pickled beef." And speaking of pickled beef brings some rather hilarious memories of my early childhood, for, remarkable as it may seem that a person can remember impressions of childhood this long, it is a fact that I can remember clearly things that occurred when I was only five years old, and, according to your immature idea of time, that was a long time ago! I admit that it was back in what is now called the reconstruction days, but that wasn't so awfully long ago. My mother and father and I were, at this time, temporarily stopping with my grandmother and grandfather, Mr. and Mrs. A. Dwight Brown, in Columbus, Ga., and, as Grandfather Brown had raised about nine children to manhood and womanhood, he found it cheaper to buy supplies in quantity. So he purchased a barrel of pickled beef for the winter use. Grandma had plenty of cabbage in the quarter-acre garden! Everything was lovely, and grandma bragged on her extra fine pickled beef for some time till the barrel was practically half full, when grandma came to a piece of the meat which had ribs in it and got it cooked to a turn and served it, and then grandpa, whom I remember as having a rather peculiar sense of humor, drew one of these ribs out of his piece and held it up so she could see it. It was almost perfectly round, and grandpa gravely inquired of his wife if she didn't know that all beef ribs were wide and flat? And when she inquired that if it "wasn't beef, what was it," he calmly informed her that horses' ribs were round! And, when she recovered from the shock and stopped fussing about it, she gave all the rest of that wonderful pickled beef (?) to the "niggers" and wouldn't let another piece of it be cooked in the house! Grandpa had to buy her another half barrel before he could get her quiet! And you bet she inspected the rib pieces of that herself before it was delivered! I can clearly remember how grandpa laughed at her!

All of which goes to prove the old saw, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise!" It's only what we know that makes us mad!

Hoping you have plenty of pickled beef, with flat ribs, for this winter, and that you do not consider it "plebian grub," I am, yours hopefully,

H. F. B.

New high-speed aluminum electric cars, just built for the Indiana railroad system, an electric line which operates more than 5,000 miles of track, weigh 25 tons each instead of the normal 45. Twenty tons is cut from each car by building it of aluminum alloy. The cars are capable of making more than 70 miles an hour, are provided with low stream-line bodies and oval doors. Fourteen of the thirty-five cars purchased have observation-lounge compartments.

Latest in office equipment is the "talking desk." This is an electrical desk, exhibited at the New York business show, which contains a radio concealed in a deep lower drawer for convenient reception of speeches, commodity and stock market reports, weather predictions—or jazz.

B. & O. ASSISTS IDLE AND PART TIME EMPLOYES

Baltimore.—Department heads of the local office of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad were notified not to deduct any money from the wages of employes who are purchasing homes through the relief department of the company unless the employes have worked more than half a month.

The company also issued an order to all freight agents not to sell unclaimed foodstuffs in the freight houses throughout the country, but to distribute the edibles free to furloughed employes.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

JUST as it was in the narrow-minded and selfish New England section in the 1820's concerning the free school system, when New Englanders actually held that to compel a citizen to educate his children would be an invasion of his sacred rights as a citizen of the commonwealth, so it was in the New England industrial field in the 1850's. New Englanders asserted the efforts of workingmen to better their conditions both in the factories and at home was an encroachment on the economic status of employers by laborers that must not be tolerated.

The south, with its plantation system and its slavery economy, gave neither the poor white nor the enslaved black the slightest chance to improve their conditions. In fact, the south as it existed immediately prior to the opening of the Civil war was a mighty obstacle to any rise whatever in the economic condition of poor whites who earned their bread by the sweat of their brows or the blacks who hoed the fields and picked the cotton of their white masters.

As terrible as was the conflict we call the Civil war, it proved to be the open gate through which laboring men and women, both white and colored, walked to a changed industrial condition in the United States. It was the Civil war in a broad way which is responsible for the industrial changes that made labor organizations permanent factors in our industrial life today. Next week we shall quote from the historian Rhodes to show the economic situation in the east, as well as give a brief resume of the industrial conditions throughout this section.

N. Y. COURT UPHOLDS MODEL HOUSING LAW

New York.—Justice John E. McGeehan, of the Bronx county supreme court, rendered a decision upholding the constitutionality of the state's model housing law which permits tax exemption of model tenements constructed by limited dividend companies under plans approved by the state board of housing.

The law was enacted to provide more adequate housing facilities for families forced to live in buildings with low rentals. The state board of housing is authorized to decide which sections of the city need living quarters under the plan limiting returns on the investment to 6 per cent per annum and fixing low maximum rental levels.

NEWS CHAPEL NOTES

By H. CLAY TIMMONS

When I was with grandpappy, years ago deceased, we all were fairly happy; our bounty soon increased. I called in all my neighbors to gather in my crop, to help me with my laborers, my hogs had "beaucoup" slop. My stock was fat and sassy, my silo bulged with grain, my pastures green and grassy, which made my cattle gain. My offspring never wanted 'til the summer of the drouth, but now they're pale and gaunted—they live from hand to mouth. They have no "Tom and Jerry" to cure their many ills, I haven't got a "berry" to buy my liver pills. I'm thinking of the river; I've no money in my pants, the well-known cheerful giver is my only sustenance. But the long lane has a turning, I'll soon see better times if I find some one yearning to read these alleged rhymes. They may bring in the rubles—a kopek now and then, then I shall have no scruples about by gifted pen. A ray of hope is sighted; I'll soon be on my feet, then I shall be delighted when I again can eat.—Travelin' Milt.

Last Saturday night was Halloween. Thinking back twenty years ago brought to mind the pranks of boys and those not so boyish. One incident of boyish perseverance was the incident of the water wagon of one Mose Jones. Mose hauled two barrels of water at a time. Halloween eve he had two barrels of water all set to start out bright and early the next morning. In those days the street car company had car sheds at intervals along the line. We picked the one located at the site now occupied by the United Hosiery mills store on the Boyce car line. Laboriously, we took Mose's water wagon apart, took it piece by piece up on top of that car shed, reassembled it straddling the roof, put the barrels in the wagon and carried water and refilled them. Imagine doing that for money!

All 1910 model boys remember the indiscriminate toppling of chicsales—and when I say indiscriminate, I mean the toppling of the one belonging to your own family if it lay in the line of march. Also, and a dangerous procedure when looked upon with the retrospect of more mature years, was the soaping of the car tracks on any hill. The company had Vic Williams, at that time an inspector, and more latterly a government prohibition man, on duty one Halloween night. The boys calmly tied bars of soap to the soles of their shoes and walked up and down the hill with Vic, dragging the soap along the rail as they talked to Vic to help him while away his weary vigil. And when the car skilled down the hill Vic couldn't imagine how it had happened.

Nowadays there are no more gates to be removed, no more wagons to be taken apart and hung piecemeal to the tops of tall telegraph poles; no more chicsales to be uprooted. Nothing but the mild excitement of soap-streaking an occasional show window, and going to town and making a big hubbub.

Wally Miller's Wailing Wall shot a blank Tuesday evening. The boys got paid by checks, and Wally looked silly for a minute. But, says he, they won't get paid in checks next week, and if they hold out on him this week he would hold out on them next week.

"Wee Willie" Keels is back again in an attempt to eke out an existence in the ad alley. Here's hoping he and Bill Mills will maintain their composure. According to "Wee Willie," Bill is a such-and-such, and Bill retaliates by calling Willie a thingamajig—whatever that is.

Yellow Dog Contract Outlawed in 5 States

The infamous "yellow dog" contract has been outlawed by the legislatures of Arizona, Colorado, Ohio, Oregon and Wisconsin, and great progress has been made toward securing favorable action by other state legislators, declared the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in its report to the 1931 convention of the federation in Vancouver.

In Indiana the governor vetoed the "yellow dog" bill, and the Massachusetts legislature declined to enact it on the basis of an advisory opinion by the state supreme court which declared it unconstitutional.

"Labor has made great headway toward declaring 'yellow dog' contracts invalid and void," the council said. "Members learned of the viciousness of these contracts through a report of the discussions held on the floor of the senate when Judge John J. Parker's appointment was up for confirmation to be a member of the supreme court of the United States.

"After the defeat of Judge Parker in the senate, pamphlets were prepared and distributed throughout the United States in which the debates were incorporated and information regarding the 'yellow dog' contract given to labor officials in order that they could appear before legislative committees in the interest of this legislation.

"Labor's anti-injunction bill which will be presented to congress prohibits 'yellow dog' contracts. We believe public sentiment is sufficiently strong against this form of contract to render unsuccessful any attempt to strike such provision from the bill.

"Now that five states have enacted legislation prohibiting these contracts it should be an encouragement to the labor movements of other states to urge the passage of similar measures by their respective legislatures."

The council recorded the fact that ten of the United States senators who voted to confirm Judge Parker's appointment will not be members of the senate which convenes next December. Senators Henry J. Allen, of Kansas; Coleman L. Blease, of South Carolina; Joseph R. Grundy, of Pennsylvania; Roscoe C. McCulloch, of Ohio; Joseph E. Ransdell, of Louisiana, and Daniel F. Steck, of Iowa, were defeated on that issue. Senators David Baird, Jr., of New Jersey; Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts; Guy D. Goff, of West Virginia, and Arthur R. Gould, of Maine, declined to be candidates for re-election.

WITH THE ELECTRICIANS

By E. E. CROSBY

While looking around this week, I found Ed Carroll buying antiques. He now has a Ford that has been on and off the market several times, and had it all apart to see how it was made.

Our politician, W. B. Dyche, says there was not much excitement at the last election.

W. P. Howard declares he has been out picking cotton and being served old-fashioned smoked ham and good fresh eggs.

Duncan is all smiles, because there is a new little electrician out at his home. All getting along fine. To be sure, they called him "Junior."

Jack Frost is just as happy as Duncan, for they have a little girl. Named her Edith Elizabeth. Maybe we can put on a baby show. Let's hear from the others.

T. G. Stancel is trying to get a hunter's license. If any one wants to contribute to the cause he will promise a rabbit, but with no guarantee.

Paint Employers Stabilize Employment

Washington. — Employers owning and administering sixty representative concerns in the paint, oil and varnish industry have dismissed 17 per cent of their employes since 1929, according to a report made to Fred C. Croxton, assistant director of the president's organization on unemployment relief, by George V. Horton, general manager of the National Paint, Oil and Varnish association and the American Paint and Varnish Manufacturers' association.

Mr. Horton said the dismissal of a much larger number of workers was avoided by "careful planning throughout the industry," and that by the adoption of "emergency measures" paint employers had "stabilized" employment so there would probably be no further layoffs—unless, of course, the business depression grows worse.

Mr. Horton's report indicates what employers mean by "stabilizing" employment. The 17 per cent of the paint, oil and varnish employes who have been dismissed or laid off were turned over, with their families, to the dispensers of public and private relief funds. The remaining 83 per cent still have their jobs, but the work provided is intermittent, and so are the wages. Mr. Horton's language is specific on this question. He says: "The spreading of work (part-time labor or staggering of shifts as a substitute for layoffs) has been the principal measure through which this degree of stabilization has been reached."

That is to say, 17 per cent of the paint and oil workers have been "stabilized" to the army of the totally unemployed, and 83 per cent are "stabilized" on part-time work with reduced earnings.

PROBLEMS RECOGNIZED

Specific provisions concerning the welfare of domestic workers were included among the resolutions passed by the fourth international conference of labor and socialist women which met in Vienna in July, according to the Labor Woman, London. Among the demands made by the conference on behalf of domestics are full suffrage rights; protective legislation and social insurance; inclusion in unemployment insurance; regulation of working hours and holidays; establishment of free public employment exchanges and abolition of private employment agencies; vocational training for unemployed domestic workers.

D. F. MANNING, WASHINGTON TRADES UNIONIST, DIES

Washington.—Dennis F. Manning, long identified with trade union affairs here, died suddenly from apoplexy. He was connected with the American Federation of Labor for twenty-five years and for the last eight years had been with the veterans' bureau.

Mr. Manning was 52 years of age. He was born in Baltimore in 1879 and came to Washington with his family in 1900. He is survived by his widow and six children.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

A small but Important Item on the Family Budget..

Frequently people who come to the telephone office to order a telephone, tell us they have found that there is no economy in trying to get along without the service. Its many advantages, they say, far outweigh the small cost.

Doing without telephone service, they explain, hampered the social activities of the whole family and restricted their opportunities to enjoy life.

Trying to do without a telephone had resulted in their gaining a more appreciative understanding of the true value of the service. So they arranged the family budget to include telephone service.

The advantages of a telephone in the home are so numerous and the cost so very small that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

WHEN STATE POLICE GAS YOUR SHOP, DON'T KICK

That Seems to Be Lesson Drawn From Experience of Connecticut Man, Who Protested Against Noxious Fumes During Putman Strike — Court Upholds Officer for "Subduing" Him With a Club.

Willimantic, Conn., Nov. 12.—When state police plant tear gas candles in front of your place of business, filling your shop with noxious fumes, it seems a good idea to leave them alone, shut up shop, go home and pocket your day's loss.

That is the conclusion drawn from the sequel to an arrest made during the strike at the Salzberg mills at Putnam, a sequel written by Judge Frederick M. Peasley, of Cheshire.

During the strike the state police planted tear gas bombs or candles over plenty of territory. They planted one in front of the blacksmith shop of Alphonse M. Lacroix. With the elder Lacroix at work that day was his 24-year-old son, Eglid. The gas floated through the shop and made work practically impossible.

The state troopers would not move the gas candle and finally the younger Lacroix doused it with a pail of water. Thereupon State Policeman Henry M. Mayo arrested the son and took him to barracks.

Lacroix was exonerated and not found guilty of any offense. Thereafter at the instance of his counsel two counts charging assault were filed against the trooper and he was placed on trial before Judge Peasley. Lacroix was beaten up at police headquarters. The worst thing said about the young blacksmith in the policeman's trial was that Lacroix had declined to accompany the officer. Judge Peasley himself summed up the delightful manners of the policeman subsequent to this alleged declination, as follows: "It thereupon became the duty of the officer to reduce him to a state of subjection, which he proceeded to do with a night stick which is provided the officer for that purpose."

Having been thus subdued, Lacroix, in court, was found guilty of nothing, following which the officer likewise was found guilty of nothing. Admittedly a man was "subdued" with a club, but nobody is guilty.

Couzens Predicts Government Will Act Against Low Pay and Unemployment

OCTOBER DIVIDENDS REACH $224,023,007

New York, Nov. 12.—Nine hundred and twenty-four corporations declared $224,023,007 dividends in October, according to a compilation made by the New York Times. In October, a year ago, 1,159 corporations declared $310,112,902 dividends.

There was an increase in the amount of dividends declared by department stores in October, the figures being $3,742,825 against $2,529,516 in the same month in 1930. All other groups showed reductions.

Washington, Nov. 12.—The urgent necessity of stabilizing the income of the workers by stabilizing employment, the prediction that the government would have to intervene for the protection of labor from unemployment and low wages unless business leaders do so, and a condemnation of wealth concentration in few hands, characterized a radio address by Senator Couzens, of Michigan.

Jobless Problem Is Permanent.

"Even prior to 1929," he said, "there was a fast growing volume of unemployment due to technological and managerial improvement or efficiency in industry. Nothing has appeared on the horizon that is at all convincing that we do not have a permanent unemployment problem to contend with. This will be true unless ways and means are devised to greatly increase the consumptive power of our millions of citizens or greatly reduce the numbers of hours worked, or both."

Stabilize Workers' Income.

"It has been my view," Senator Couzens continued, "that if industry assumes the same responsibility for the workers that they do for the welfare of their plant, we will be able to stabilize industry and the income of the workers.

"If there is assurance to workers of a stabilized income—I mean to those willing to work, of course—there will be no difficulty in maintaining good business. Whether the stabilization of the income of the workers is to be accomplished by industry itself is entirely up to industry.

"The government has a responsibility to its citizens, to all of them, not only to part of them.

Business Leaders Bankrupt.

"Conditions today seem to indicate the bankruptcy of business genius and leadership in this country. The business leaders are raging lions when the going is good, but let a storm come and they take refuge inside their storm cellars of wealth and tell those on the outside not to get alarmed, because the country has always pulled through and will do so again. This doctrine is the most dangerous one that I have seen or heard during the present depression."

Menace of Wealth Concentration.

"Unless we find a method to prevent the accumulation of wealth in a few hands," Senator Couzens went on, "conditions are certain to become bad again, worse again, and eventually the cancer will kill society.

Government Effort Foreseen.

"If these supermen of business will have vision enough to understand that condition and be interested in remdying its ills, we may look to the future with confidence.

"Several small and medium-sized industries have devised ways and means to stabilize their production or the income of their workers, because they have had the will to do so.

"Others must, or government will be required to engage in activities that heretofore have been unthought of."

Banker Economist Urges 5-Day Week As a Just Remedy for Unemployment

Washington, Nov. 12.—The unemployment problem can be and should be solved at once by reducing the length of the work week to five days of eight hours or less for all wage and salary earners included in the U. S. census classification of the "gainfully employed," declares Norman E. Towson, economist of the Washington Loan and Trust company, in a bulletin on "Unemployment: Leisure and Its Utilization."

Mr. Towson holds that the real goal of man's effort is economic independence, and that the object of independence is to enjoy leisure. The leisure of course should be for all, obtained by labor-saving machinery and other labor eliminating methods of modern industrial science, and not for a few rich and voluntarily idle parasites above living on profits and an army of compulsory jobless below living on charity.

In support of his contention that shortening the hours of work for all now employed is a practicable way of settling the unemployment question, Mr. Towson says:

"There are normally 48,000,000 workers gainfully employed in American industry. The present number of unemployed is roughly estimated at six million, leaving the number of those now employed at 42,000,000.

"Let us say that 42,000,000 workers, employed eight hours a day, six days a week, do 2,016 million hours' work per week. If their employment were educated to eight hours a day, and five days a week, the same number of workers would perform only 1,680 million hours' work per week.

"At that rate it would require 50.4 million workers to perform the same amount of work, or more than the total number employed before the problem of unemployment became such an urgent one.

"Thus there would be made allowance for increasing population and increasing technical efficiency before the problem again becomes important."

Mr. Towson's estimate that the 40-hour week would provide work for the 6,000,000 jobless is quite close to the estimate of the American Federation of Labor that there is but thirty-five hours' work per week for all workers, employed and unemployed, which would take care of present domestic consumer and export commodities.

Meyering, of this city, for assistance in patroling the rights-of-way of all railroads and thoroughfares entering Chicago for the purpose of turning back all homeless and destitute men who may attempt to enter the city during the present winter.

Wishing to be helpful in all ways that may promote the public welfare and be conducive to the happiness of mankind, general headquarters of the Secret Six Thousand orders and directs that all operatives in southern and Pacific coast winer resorts shall lend all possible assistance to local police authorities toward deporting Chicago millionaires, society leaders and politicians who may attempt to escape the rigorous climate of this city during the winter.

Labor's Program To Be Pushed at 33 Big Meetings

Radio, Newspaper Publicity and Other Means Used to Advance Trade Union Social and Economic Program.

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 19.—A big union organization campaign has been opened in New York state with mass meetings, radio addresses and other means of spreading labor's message being planned for thirty-three cities. The campaign is expected to be extended to neighboring states and ultimately it is hoped to make it a nation-wide drive.

William Collins, general organizer of the American Federation of Labor, acting under the direction of President William Green, has charge of the campaign, in which the state federation of labor and local labor bodies are co-operating. Opened at Newburgh on Nov. 4, the campaign will close with a meeting at Binghamton on Jan. 8.

Labor speakers and organizers will arrive in the cities on the afternoon of the day on which a meeting is scheduled. If local radio facilities are available, 15-minute addresses on the social and industrial programs of the American Federation of Labor will be made. Specially prepared leaflets will be distributed at the meetings, which are expected to be rousing affairs, with big attendances and plenty of enthusiasm. Adequate advance publicity for the meetings will be given.

To Stress Labor's Program.

Labor's program for dealing with the present emergency will be stressed during the campaign, the following nine points being brought out by the speakers:

1. Maintain wages. 2. Shorten work hours. 3. Assure employment to minimum work forces. 4. Each employer to take on additional workers. 5. Create work through public building. 6. Strengthen employment agencies. 7. Keep young persons in school to prevent their taking jobs from men and women. 8. Preference for workers with dependents. 9. Financial relief from public and private funds.

Campaign Stirs Interest.

The series of educational mass meetings are expected to prove of great interest and value to the local labor movements and to the communities as a whole. Favorable reports on meetings already held have been received at state federation of labor headquarters here and requests for information are being received from all over the state and other states. Reports from American Federation of Labor headquarters in Washington show that the New York campaign is being watched with close interest and it is indicated similar campaigns will be carried on in other states of the northeast part of the country, with the aim of extending the state drives into a nation-wide organization effort in the coming year.

Five-Day Week Trend Reported in New York

New York.—A trend toward the five-day week is indicated in New York state industries, according to the revised edition of the report of Gov. Franklin Roosevelt's commission on unemployment problems. Henry Bruere is chairman of the commission.

The report gives the names of a number of concerns which have found the five-day week practicable and describes other methods used by executives to spread work.

There is also a section devoted to unemployment insurance abroad and a discussion of the dismissal wage for employes laid off because of curtailed production.

The commission makes no recommendations.

Motion Picture Drive For Idle Relief Fund

New York.—The motion picture industry's organization for unemployment relief announced that its nation-wide drive for funds for the jobless through a national motion picture week from Nov. 18 to Nov. 25 would be an outstanding success. During the week every motion picture theater in the United States is expected to give at least one benefit performance.

In New York City it was stated that the sale of 1,000,000 tickets was the goal, which would net at least $500,000 to aid the jobless.

Union Officials Favor Plan For Monday Holidays

Special Day of Rest in Chicago for Period of Three Months Proposed to Relieve Unemployment Situation.

Chicago, Nov. 19.—A proposal to have the city council or the mayor of Chicago issue a proclamation declaring Monday of each week a legal holiday for a period of ninety days in order to relieve the unemployment situation is being seriously considered.

Legal minds say that an act of the state legislature will be necessary before this can be done. The legislature is in special session and the call included unemployment. If the matter should go to the legislature it is probable that an effort will be made to have the governor issue a proclamation covering the entire state of Illinois.

The idea originated with James McKeown, chairman of the out-of-work benefit committee of Chicago Typographical Union No. 16, who drew up a tentative resolution covering the subject. The proposed resolution was then submitted to John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor; Victor A. Olander, secretary of the Illinois State Federation of Labor; Alderman James Wallen, chairman of the unemployment committee of the city council, and others, all of whom have expressed themselves as favorably disposed toward the idea.

$1,000,000 For Relief of New York School Children

New York.—Forty-five thousand teachers and other educational employes of the New York public school system will contribute around $1,000,000 this year to provide food and clothing for needy pupils, says the New York Times in an account of relief methods in the schools. The board of education says they have never been faced with so much poverty and distress among school children as confronts them now.

It is the duty of the teachers to detect and investigate need and extend immediate help. Thus the teachers are at once contributors to the huge charity fund, the social workers that discover and inquire into the poor pupils' wants, the direct disbursers of free lunches, shoes and clothing, and also the administrators and bookkeepers of the funds.

Food and Clothing Main Needs.

More than nine-tenths of the funds collected are spent for food and clothing, according to Frederick W. Chambers, chief auditor of the board of education.

Throughout the city, gas stoves and other kitchen facilities are installed in school buildings which do not have regular cafeterias. Two central kitchens distribute food to the schools, using army trucks contributed without cost. Fifteen thousand pairs of shoes were bought and distributed during October.

Every morning and afternoon thousands of teachers conduct delicate and diplomatic inquiries to discover children who have gone without breakfast or lunch. Nearly 340 attendance officers and assistants visit homes daily to find out whether it is lack of food, shoes or clothing that keeps children at home.

NOTICE!

Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council will meet Monday night at 7:30 o'clock, in regular session. All delegates are requested and expected to be present, as matters affecting every local union will come before the meeting for discussion.

BUYING POWER ONLY SOLUTION FOR DEPRESSION

Publisher Declares End Now in Sight.

SAYS SURPLUS IS ABOUT CONSUMED

Head of Scripps-Howard Newspapers Discusses Reasons for Slump.

"This depression was caused because the workers weren't able to buy all the things they made," Robert P. Scripps, head of the twenty-five Scripps-Howard newspapers, said last Friday in an interview with a representative of Progressive Labor. "Goods stacked up; factories shut down or run part time; workers were thrown out of work and had to stop buying. The depression won't end until this surplus has been consumed. I think that time has about arrived."

But it will be the same story all over again unless the system is changed, the 36-year-old publisher said. The changes needed are: Higher wages, shorter hours.

"Higher wages," he said, "will give the workers more money to spend. Shorter hours will provide more leisure time in which to enjoy the luxuries their larger pay envelopes will make possible.

"The consuming power of this country is limited only by the wages paid the workers," Scripps said. "There will be work for all in satisfying the wants of the people. Our fault in the past is that we haven't given the worker enough of the wealth he has produced.

"There had been no crop failure; the barns and elevators were bursting with grain. There had been no catastrophe brought by nature. The war had long since passed. Physically the country was the same as it had been when prosperity was at its ueak. What happened?

"With all the usual factors eliminated, the cause of the depression stood out clearly for everyone to see. It was, the factories and mills had been turning out more goods than the wages of their employes could buy. We called it over-production; it really was under-consumption.

"If the cities, counties and states worked together they could end this depression instantly. They could raise their taxes simultaneously and embark on public works programs which would put the jobless to work. But one city or state fears that raising its taxes will drive industry to another city or state with a lower tax rate."

Havana Bakers Demand Night Work Limitation

Havana, Cuba.—The bakers' union here served notice on the bakery owners that they would have to comply with the law of July 2, 1928, which prohibits seven consecutive hours of night work in bakeries.

The bakers' notice did not mention a strike, but it is said the unon is prepared to take whatever measures may be necessary to secure compliance with their warning.

Survey Shows Union Scales Paid On Most California Public Work

Bakersfield, Cal., Nov. 12.—A survey of wage scales adopted by various state, county and city governmental bodies under the new California prevailing wage law shows that in the great majority of cases the union scale has been adopted as the prevailing wage.

Even in Los Angeles, notorious for its wage cutting, the union scale has been adopted with few exceptions. The greatest variation from the union scale is in localities in southern California where wage-earners are less organized than in other parts of the state.

The new law provides that governmental bodies, before advertising for bids for public improvements of any nature, must ascertain and set the prevailing wage scales to be paid on the job. These scales must be advertised in the call for bids and must be specified in the contract.

"Canned" Music Displaces 101 D. C. Musicians

U. S. Department Investigation Shows Only Few Found Employment at Profession in Nation's Capital.

Washington, Nov. 19.—Introduction of "canned" music in the motion picture theaters of Washington deprived 101 musicians of their jobs, the bureau of labor statistics, United States department of labor, reports. The report is based on a survey made by the bureau in October, 1930.

Only a few of the musicians displaced by mechanical music found employment in Washington as professional musicians, the report reveals.

The fate of eight of the group of 101 could not be ascertained, the report said. Twenty left Washington, 11 found jobs in other orchestras here, 19 secured part-time work, such as in radio broadcasting or as teachers of music, 21 gave up the profession and found jobs in other fields and 23 are still unemployed.

Of the unemployed, thirteen are being supported by their families, while nine have no support whatever, the department reported. Some were described as being in dire need.

AFL Council Reports 15 Labor Laws Passed

Organized labor prevailed upon the members of the United States congress to pass fifteen measures of interest to the workers during the short session which began on Dec. 2, 1930, and ended March 4, 1931.

The laws provide for:

Prevailing rates of wages on public buildings in the United States and the District of Columbia.

Saturday half-holidays for nearly 600,000 government employes without reduction of wages and salaries.

Advance planning for public works to be constructed during depressions.

Creation of a department of labor in Porto Rico.

Extension of provisions of the vocational and rehabilitation acts to Porto Rico.

Retirement act for Panama canal and Panama railroad employes.

Adjustment of wages of certain employes in the customs service.

Appropriation of $500,000 additional to increase the border immigration patrol.

Appropriation of $178,000 to collect complete statistics of changes in employment, total wages paid and total hours of employment in the service of the federal government, the states and political subdivisions thereof.

Modernization of three battleships in the government navy yards and arsenals at a cost of $30,000,000.

Requiring all work on eleven new destroyers at a cost of $51,700,000 to be performed in the navy yards and arsenals when it does not cost appreciably more than by contract. Ten million dollars appropriated to begin construction.

Extra compensation for overtime service performed by immigration inspectors and other employes of the immigration service.

Books for the adult mind.

Appropriating an additional $500,000 for improving the United States employment service.

Increase of $200 in wages for railroad locomotive, bureau of safety and hours of service inspectors.

Organized labor also prevailed upon the members of congress to defeat the following four bills which were hostile to the interests of the workers:

Unification of the border patrols.

Permitting waiving of jury trials.

"Equal rights" amendment to United States constitution.

Amendment to Volstead act to permit raiding of homes without a warrant.

President Hoover vetoed three labor bills. One provided for a national employment system to be set up in the department of labor, another provided a practical way of solving the Muscle Shoals problems, and the third increased the wages of 926 village letter carriers.

Government Bureau Offers Relief For Miners' Children

Twenty-five Thousand Offspring of Unemployed Coal Diggers to Be Fed and Clothed by Two Organizations.

Relief for 25,000 children of unemployed miners in West Virginia, Kentucky and certain parts of Pennsylvania is so urgent that the children's bureau of the U. S. department of labor is co-operating with the American Friends' Service of Philadelphia to provide food and clothing and medical attention for the unfortunate boys and girls whose jobless fathers are well-night penniless.

The American Friends' Service, it was stated at the children's bureau, had issued a statement in which it is asserted that there are 100,000 miners without work permanently who need food and clothing for their families.

100,000 Miners Jobless.

"It is not a new story," the statement says, "to hear of miners in trouble, but it is a new crisis, for shrinkage in the market and oversupply of labor have thrown approximately 100,000 miners out of employment permanently. The problem before the co-operating groups is to find out how to obtain a living for them and how to feed and clothe them in the meanwhile.

Trained Workers Assisting.

"Two trained workers have been sent into the distressed areas where they have visited homes and schools. Miss Mary Skinner was sent by the children's bureau and upon her return was followed by Miss F. W. Hutsinpillar. Representatives from the Friends' Service also are in the field where they have had fine co-operation locally with doctors, nurses and school authorities.

Children in Distress.

"The immediate need is to provide care for 25,000 children during the approaching winter. Feeding has actually begun in three schools, and plans are being developed to assure all of help. Every report from the workers tells afresh the desperate need for clothing.

Flour Sack Clothing.

"It was found that mothers have made clothes for their children out of flour sacks and they say that if the children could have only one change, they would be able to keep them clean and in school.

"School attendance has been affected by the plight of the families. One school, by way of example, which normally has at this time of year an enrollment of 300 pupils, at present has but one hundred."

HOOVER VETOES PART-TIME WORK FOR U. S. EMPLOYES

Washington.—President Hoover announced that government employes would not be placed on part-time work as a method of providing jobs for the jobless as recommended by the committee on employment plans and suggestions of the president's organization on unemployment relief. The plan for staggered employment was found to be impracticable, it was stated, because it conflicted with the civil service laws, which require a stipulated number of hours of work each week.

As an alternative proposition the president suggested that government employes voluntarily contribute one or two days' pay a month for three months under details to be drawn up by the civil service commission.

BANKERS URGE PAY CUTS FOR RAIL WORKERS

Money Moguls "Resolute" at Big Conclave.

BANK WRECKER GETS POLITICAL BOOST

Billionaires Plan Further "Deflation" of Labor to Protect Profits.

By JOSEPH A. WISE.

Chicago, Nov. 19.—Chicago was well represented at the grand conoclave of the money moguls of this continent, otherwise officially known as the annual convention of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, just concluded at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

The principal items of business acted on was an alibi for the artificially prolonged depression; a declaration favoring a 10 per cent wage cut for all railroad workers; a demand that the transportation act be amended to permit the railroads to make rates to suit themselves; plans to further fool the investors with promises of liquidation of "as much as possible" of the billions in losses, and a lot of quiet planning in behalf of the presidential aspirations of Melvin A. Traylor, billionaire Chicago banker, who is favored by the big financial interests of the east, west and south.

Railroad Pay Cut Urged.

The report of the association's committee bearing on the proposed wage cut for railroad workers and the demand for revision of rates upward for the carriers follows:

"We recommend a reduction in wages commensurate with the decline in the cost of living. Looking to a permanent solution of the railroad problem, we recommend greater freedom to the railroads to meet effectively, by rate change, the competition of other forms of transportation."

It was argeud that the railroad workers can stand a 10 per cent wage cut in view of an alleged 11 per cent decrease in the cost of living.

Wiggin Is "Big Shot."

Alfred H. Wiggin, multi-billionaire head of the Chase National Bank of New York and director of fifty other giant financial, insurance, industrial and railroad corporations, is the "big shot" in the Investment Bankers' association. Melvin A. Traylor, head of the billion-dollar twins, the First National bank and the First Union Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, is a lesser "big shot" in the organization. J. P. Morgan is another.

The Investment Bankers' association is composed exclusively of the very biggest bankers, who engineer and profit by the flotation of gigantic loans and the financing of the world's largest corporations, both domestic and foreign. Therefore when these men meet in convention and vote in favor of wage cuts their action is of more than passing interest, not only to the wage-earners of America, but of foreign lands as well, because the operations of these particular bankers are world-wide in scope.

Traylor Bankers' Choice.

These gentlemen figure that 1932 may be a democratic year and they have Melvin A. Traylor as their entry for the democratic presidential nomination. It is claimed that Traylor already has the democratic national convention delegations from Illinois, Michigan, Kentucky and Texas "in the bag."

This political activity in behalf of Traylor seems rather peculiar in view of the fact that he would not dare to make a public appearance in several Chicago neighborhoods, and that he found it necessary to ask for a police detail to guard his home here following the wholesale Chicago bank failures early last June and subsequently.

Traylor Blamed for Failures.

Traylor is charged with having taken a leading part in putting out of business more than a hundred Chicago neighborhood banks. It is alleged that he met with personal physical violence at a directors' meeting of a South Side bank that was threatened with extinction, but which was saved because of the courage of its officers.

It is also of interest in this connection that the Bank of International Settlements at Basle, Switzerland, of which Traylor was one of the founders, is now in serious difficulties and may have to go out of business. Its condition has been described by a French writer as "melancholy." It was Traylor's participation in the founding of this bank which gave him a world-wide reputation as a successful financier.

The UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD are the guide posts that tell us how we can advance the cause of labor.

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

LET HISTORY ANSWER!

Let history answer the wage-cutters. Reason should give them their answer, but reason is a stranger to them. Let them look backward and see what happened. Let labor look backward, too, for a moment. In the depression of 1921 reactionary employers were frantic for wage reductions. They talked about "deflating labor." They reduced wages where they had the power.

Labor, saying, "We will resist to the utmost," stopped the sweep. But the wage-cutters kept on cutting where the workers were not organized.

The upturn came. Business began to improve. Improvement was so fast that before the foolish wage-cutters had found out what was going on, wages actually were being increased.

Improvement caught and passed the wage-cutters before they woke up enough to stop yammering about wage-cutting. The upward movement of wages caught the downward movement right in the middle and smashed it. Presently it was discovered that wage-cutting had only made matters worse, while as wages increased all business got better. There was buying power everywhere.

Today the wage-cutters are still clamoring for more wage-reductions. But business has begun to improve. Again, wage-cutting has only made bad matters worse. Really material improvement before the end of the year may not develop, but the probability is that history will repeat itself and the panic of the wage-cutters will be overtaken by the activity of the wage-raisers. No more wage-cutting! Stop now.

Dreiser

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

"There ought to be prosecutions of the severest type against Harlan county officials."

These were the words of Theodore Dreiser, chairman of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, at the end of his two-day inquiry into conditions in the Kentucky mine district.

For his utterance and the mere fact that he came to Kentucky and [illegible] the same persons who are responsible for the misery and persecution existing in the Kentucky coal fields have charged him with "red ballyhoo" and [illegible] Warrants have been sworn out for his arrest on charges of criminal syndicalism.

It has been one of the strange and amazing things in connection with the trouble at Harlan and elsewhere in the Kentucky mining section that the miners have not had to fight the mine owners of late, but it has been the county and state officials and the officials of the coal companies, too, that have made war on the coal diggers.

The most recent bunk of the faked-up charges is a flattery brought against Dreiser and to be Judge D. C. Jones. He is declared to be on a veritable "judicial rampage" at present, drunk with power and hitting with both fists.

I wonder if the fact that Judge Jones' wife is a heavy stockholder in coal mining properties has anything to do with the judge's part in the inquisition against striking miners that is now taking place in Kentucky?

I wonder. And I guess you do, too!

Mr. Justice Louis D. Brandeis

Louis D. Brandeis, justice of the supreme court of the United States, celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary on Nov. 13.

The labor movement congratulates Justice Brandeis on this happy event.

Many of his decisions on matters of deep interest to the workers show that he took to the supreme court conceptions of liberty and justice which, we regret to say, have not always revealed themselves in the majority decisions of that tribunal. On the occasion of his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary, it will be appropriate to direct attention to a few of them.

The Hitchman Coal company made its employes sign a contract that they would not join a trade union. The company obtained an injunction restraining representatives of the United Mine Workers of America from attempting to persuade the company's employes to join the miners' union. A majority opinion of the supreme court affirmed the validity of the injunction. Justice Brandeis dissented and held that the representatives of the United Mine Workers had violated none of the coal company's legal rights.

The Duplex Printing Press company, in a controversy with the International Association of Machinists, secured an injunction prohibiting the business agents of the New York local of the Machinists from attempting to induce the company's customers not to purchase and the customer's workers not to haul or install its presses. The majority of the supreme court supported the validity of the injunction. Justice Brandeis dissented. He declared that the machinists had the legal right to induce others to boycott the presses and implied that the majority opinion usurped the prerogatives of the legislature to limit "individual and group rights of aggression and defense" in labor disputes.

In Traux vs. Corrigan Justice Brandeis again dissented and said that picketing a nonunion restaurant to persuade the public not to buy food there was a legitimate exercise of the legal rights of a trade union and not subject to judicial restraint.

Finally there came the case of the Bedford Cut Stone Company vs. the Journeyman Stone Cutters' Association. As the result of a controversy the Stone Cutters struck against the company and the company declared a lockout against the union. The Stone Cutters' union refused to permit its members to handle or finish any work that had been started in the company's non-union plant. The company obtained an injunction restraining the Stone Cutters from refusing to work on its nonunion products.

The case reached the supreme court. The majority of the members affirmed the validity of the injunction. Justice Brandeis dissented. The conclusion of his opinion is a classic. He said:

"Members of the Journeymen Stone Cutters' association could not work anywhere on stone which had been cut at the quarries by 'men working in connection' to it, without aiding and abetting the enemy.

"Observance by each member of the provision of their constitution which forbids such action was essential to his own self-protection.

"It was demanded of each by loyalty to the organization and to his fellows.

"If, on the undisputed facts of this case, refusal to work can be enjoined, congress created by the Sherman law and the Clayton act an instrument for imposing restraints upon labor which reminds one of involuntary servitude.

"The Sherman law was held in United States vs. United States Steel Corporation (251 U. S. 417), to permit capitalists to combine in a single corporation fifty per cent of the steel industry of the United States dominating the trade through its vast resources.

"The Sherman law was held in the United States vs. United Shoe Machinery Company (247 U. S. 32) to permit capitalists to combine in another corporation practically the whole shoe machinery industry of the country, necessarily giving it a position of dominance over shoe manufacturing in America.

"It would, indeed, be strange if congress had by the same act willed to deny to members of a small craft of workingmen the right to co-operate in simply refraining from work, when that course was the only means of self-protection against a combination of militant and powerful employers.

"I cannot believe that congress did so."

Labor in the United States is struggling today to free itself from the fetters of the injunction that reduce it to the involuntary servitude which the thirteenth amendment to the constitution declared was forever abolished in the United States.

It is a struggle which sometimes depresses labor and at other times raises its militant spirit to transcendent heights.

But under all conditions of the struggle labor is fired with vigor and filled with hope because of the anti-injunction decisions of Justice Brandeis.

In the course of our history dissenting opinions of one decade have become the public policy of the next. We believe this will be the case with the principles of liberty and genuine Americanism that have so frequently found expression in his views.

Labor congratulates Justice Brandeis on his seventy-fifth birthday anniversary and wishes him many happy returns of the day.

Slaughtering the Right to Work

The continued slaughter of the workers' right to work is poignantly exhibited in a statement by the interstate commerce commission comparing the number of railway employes and total wages paid month by month during the thirteen months beginning with August, 1930.

The railroad executives discharged or laid off 226,293 persons during this period, and paid $37,579,860 less wages in August, 1931, than in August, 1930. In August, 1931, the executives removed 21,719 employes from the pay rolls.

The commission's tabulation follows:

	Number	Pay
August, 1930	1,514,367	$215,756,280
September, 1930	1,485,906	208,691,290
October, 1930	1,454,963	213,874,715
November, 1930	1,394,401	193,932,498
December, 1930	1,356,558	193,168,785
January, 1931	1,333,820	190,637,952
February, 1931	1,316,494	175,818,130
March, 1931	1,319,315	189,407,457
April, 1931	1,331,138	187,319,049
May, 1931	1,337,331	186,713,283
June, 1931	1,317,399	182,825,313
July, 1931	1,309,793	183,864,067
August, 1931	1,288,074	178,176,420

The class of workers engaged in the maintenance of way and structures were most heavily hit by the railroad executives' labor-discharging policy. During the year, 78,000 of them were given passports to that land of insecurity and charity standards whose citizens are known as the army of the unemployed. Unemployment statistics for other industries show equally significant fatality lists.

The 1931 convention of the American Federation of Labor declared that the first and most important demand of the American labor movement is to secure for every citizen the real right to work instead of the present condition which makes the worker's right to a job contingent on the whims and caprices of the dictators who own our industrial system and rule it with an absolution unknown outside of fascist Italy or bolshevik Russia and with not much more regard for justice to labor than was manifested by the owners of the slave-labor and serf-labor systems of wealth production which preceded the present economic order.

The die is cast. Labor has crossed its Rubicon.

Labor demands the right to work as a reality, not as an ideal.

WEALTH'S PAY DAY.

Corporate business has just gone through its regular pay day for invested wealth.

Dividends disbursed at the beginning of this month amounted to about a quarter of a billion dollars.

Is there any doubt as to whether that money would not have more generally stimulated business and national well-being if it could have been paid in wages?

What Next!

Dispatches from Hamburg, Germany, say that Prof. Rabe, of the State Chemical institute, announces he has produced artificial quinine compounds which are not only as effective as the natural quinine, but are expected to offer a number of new effects for medical and scientific use. Dr. Rabe achieved his synthesis "hydrochinin" after many years of laboratory and research work.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter I
PART IV: CONTEMPORARY OPINION OF JESUS

8. What People of Jesus' Time Thought of Him. Our last study was centered about the fifteenth chapter of Matthew, wherein is related the details concerning the Feeding of the Four Thousand, and we saw how Jesus' popularity with the multitude spurred the Pharisees and Sadducees to further aggression against our Lord and His work. This is the second incident of which we have taken notice where the Pharisees and others of their ilk attempted to engage Jesus in a controversy over His teaching.

WM. L. MOSS

Let us now consider why this opposition to Jesus existed. The first point of cleavage between Jesus and the Pharisees, Sadducees and scribes is traced to His conception of God and Father. Jesus taught that our conception of God must be one which regards God as love and that we must translate this conception of Him in terms of love toward not only Him but toward all others whom He has created.

The Pharisees, as representatives of all the other schools of religious thought of Jesus' day who manifested opposition toward Him, had no conception of God as love. To what extremes of indifference toward their social obligations to their fellowmen their conception of God had led them is well illustrated by the incident related in the twelfth chapter of Matthew. While in one of the synagogues of Palestine the question was put to Jesus, because of the presence of a man with a withered hand, whether it was "lawful" to heal on the Sabbath (vs. 10). This question was asked, as Matthew tells us, "that they might accuse him." If Jesus said yes, public opinion would be against Him; if He said no, He would to an extent retain popular favor, at least among the church-goers of His day. Here a much weaker personality would have sought the easiest means of escape and squared himself with public opinion. Jesus did nothing of the sort. For an answer He asked a question: If a man had one sheep and that sheep were to fall into a deep pit would he not rescue the sheep even though the day on which the accident happened were the Sabbath? Naturally those who heard Jesus ask the question agreed with Him that the man would get the sheep out of the pit. Then, said Jesus, this being true about a sheep, if one of our fellowmen needs our help on the Sabbath it is our duty to render aid—in fact, we ought, says Jesus, more readily extend our help to a man in dire straits than we would an animal, for, He goes on to say, how much better "is a man than a sheep."

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

MANY students of the economic situation in both northern and southern states during the Civil war can only discern that conflict's bearing on the slavery question. The economic student sees not only this factor but the more obscure and equally vital industrial changes that were taking place. "Life at the north during the war," writes the historian Rhodes, "resembled that of most civilized communities which had full communication with the outside world." To this rather broad statement concerning life in the northern states while the Civil war was being fought, Rhodes adds, "Business went on, schools and colleges were full, churches were attended, and men and women had their recreations."

The further truth is that with the exception of the first year, economic students can see by their study of industry in the north that the war period was one of prosperity, profits were large and that the war produced a widespread demand for standardized articles, the last of which furnished the groundwork for the introduction of the present overwhelming use of machinery in industry. This demand for standardized articles especially contributed to the establishment of large-scale industry. The war also gave an abnormal impetus to the woolen cloth industry. The movement of cotton to the north had been cut off from the southern states and the federal government was going into the market for great quantities of woolen materials. Woolen factories sprang up overnight like the proverbial mushroom, many operating day and night. Dividends on capital invested in these woolen mills mounted higher and higher, but the manufacturers of woolen cloth for the federal government, not satisfied with enormous profits honestly made, resorted in their scramble for more profits to duplicity and began to produce "shoddy goods."

The marching armies of the north proved beneficial also to the shoe manufacturers. The casting of cannon with which to mow down the southern soldiers likewise called for an increased production of iron and so the rise of this industry was even more phenomenal than the rise of the shoe industry.

CUBAN STRIKERS ASK AID.

Santiago, Cuba.—Striking street car conductors and motormen here appealed to the Street Car Workers' Union of Havana for financial assistance to corry on the strike in effect since Oct. 31 to secure a 10-cent-an-wage increase. The union headquarters at Havana wired that funds would be sent immediately.

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

Let's Get Together And Pull Together!

U N I O N L A B E L

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Juvenile Courts Urged For All the States

Washington. — Katherine Lenroot, acting chief of the U. S. children's bureau, declared that the jurisdiction of criminal courts over children should be abolished.

She said that the sentencing of a 12-year-old boy to life imprisonment in the state of Washington and a 17-year-old youth to death in Illinois made it difficult to reconcile these drastic penalties with the standards of juvenile courts.

"The whole purpose of the juvenile court is to prevent the child's being tried and treated as a criminal," she added. "Sufficient resources should be available for the supervision of children in their own homes, and for the care in family homes or in institutions of those who cannot remain with their families, so that in disposing of each case the court may fit the treatment to the needs of the child.

"Institutions should be resorted to only when careful study which includes the knowledge of the needs and possibilities of the individual clearly indicates the necessity for it, or when repeated attempts to adjust the child to home life in the community have failed."

UNION WAGES

By W. W. BRITTON
Editor of Our Journal, Official Organ of the Metal Polishers' International Union.

The average of union wages is more than double the average of nonunion wages. There are men still foolish enough to parrot the employers' tripe about the independence of the nonunion man. Where there is nonunionism the only man who has any independence is the employer. The union man has the only true independence. He is the only worker who has rights. He is the only worker who has anything to say about his wages, his hours of labor, his conditions of work.

Again: The average of union wages is more than double the average of nonunion wages. The nonunion worker has no rights, no independence, no freedom—and in addition he pays a high price for his state of subserviency. How can any man afford so high a price for such degradation? Why are there any nonunion workers?

Always demanding the UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD is evidence that you are a real live member of organized labor.

One good turn deserves another. Your demand for the union label or union service will usually cause the other fellow to do the same for you.

Food for Thought

The business depression of 1931 was a terrible calamity. It will probably be known as one of the darkest periods in American history.

The sad part of this depression is the fact that much of it was entirely unnecessary, at least so far as the union man was concerned. Suppose, for the moment, that every union man and woman had never patronized anything but union labor; had insisted on the man who operated the car that took him to work, being union; had eaten his lunch in a union restaurant; had gone to a union barber to be shaved; had his house painted by a union painter; burned union mined coal in his home, and wore the Union Label on every piece of wearing apparel. These are just a few of every union man's opportunities to patronize union labor.

If every union man and woman had done that, employers would not have been so ready to employ cheap non-union labor in preference to union. The union man would have been busy supplying the wants of his fellow union men, and at the union wage scale.

There lies the very fundamental principal of unionism. "In Union there is Strength."

If a union made garment should happen to cost a few cents more than a nonunion garment—don't let the price fool you. The cheap nonunion garment is most probably made by cheap foreign labor who will not employ a union man unless necessary. The union made garment is made by union labor who will spend their money for union labor only.

If every union man and woman will patronize only union labor, we need never fear another "business depression." The rest of the world could be broke, but the union man would have steady work, good pay, and would be happy.

To accomplish this every man must do his bit. Are you doing yours?

N. Y. FACTORY OWNERS DISCHARGE MANY WORKERS

New York.—Employers owning factories in New York state discharged 3 per cent of their employes during October, according to a statement made by the state industrial commissioner, Frances Perkins.

This was the heaviest month-to-month loss this year, the statement explained. Factory employes this October numbered 14 per cent fewer than last October and 29 per cent lower than two years ago. Average weekly earnings dropped to $25.30, which is the level of average earnings in 1922.

It's so awfully simple to demand UNION GOODS and SERVICE that it is simply awful more trade unionists do not do this important thing.

Getting a Job... And the Telephone

When industries add workers—even though they usually favor former employees, they are likely to hire folks who are easily reached, especially those who can be called by telephone.

Employment managers everywhere depend upon the telephone to give information to prospective employees about immediate openings. Not being quickly and easily available costs many able workmen a chance to go to work.

One employment manager says: "We are experiencing considerable difficulty because some of the people whom we are most anxious to reach do not have a telephone.

"When we have an opening, it is necessary to fill the place immediately and in many cases the parties who would get first consideration lose out because we cannot reach them quickly. In talking with other employment managers we find they are experiencing the same difficulty."

A telephone costs little, in comparison with the many things it can do for you every day. So little, in fact, that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

The local has for its guests this week Harold Haynes and His Commanders. Mr. Haynes and his orchestra have just completed an MCA booking and are stopping over on their way to Florida. A reception committee from the local waited on them.

Transfer cards have been deposited by Dan Vance and Dutch Dutcher, who are working with John Patty and the Radio Rounders.

Wally Weber, the singing drummer, was married last week to Miss Reita Frances Irick, of this city. The local wishes many happy returns of the day to the young people.

Buck Weaver was quite ill last Saturday and Sunday. However, he is now completely recovered and will see his friends at Seventh and Market streets.

The local did a fine thing in furnishing the music for the Miller's Community Chest dance. Three orchestras played during the course of the evening. Joe Gattis, John Patty and Jimmy Cox were the respective directors. Marion Liner pulled an iron man stunt by playing with each and every band.

The failure of the chamber of commerce to have the booster trip caused the local to lose another job. Sandy was taking about a 10-piece band and they were planning to do things.

Uncle John Washburn wants this column to announce that his store has a brand new supply of second-hand violin strings that he will sell cheap for cash. He also specializes in taking band jobs.

Heard at the Peruchi Players, "Isn't that director marvelous? And listen, Mary, how wonderfully he plays the violin."

Now is the time to pick all-American and all-something football teams. It wouldn't be a bad idea for someone to offer an all-city dance orchestra. This column will give a prize for the best band.

BUSINESS REVIVAL IS MENACED BY BANKERS' STUPID ATTITUDE

Money Changers Clamor for Pay Cuts Just as Industry Shows Some Signs of Revival—Miss Perkins Urges Adoption of Shorter Work Period.

Has the depression hit bottom? Is there anything to indicate a turn in the business tide?

There is some evidence to sustain the claim that these questions should be answered in the affirmative, says a writer in the current issue of Labor.

Increases in the price of oil and wheat are the most encouraging signs, he continues. While speculators benefited more than farmers from the recent advance in grain prices—because most of the producers had been compelled to unload before the turn came—nevertheless, some of the money got back to the farms. Furthermore, some excellent authorities believe prices for the staple grains will be very much better for the next year.

Predicts 80-Cent Wheat.

For example, Hon. Robert Weir, Canada's minister of agriculture, speaking in Amherst, Nova Scotia, last week said:

"Wheat will reach 80 cents a bushel and the movement will extend to the 1932 crop. I consider the situation very bright.

"I believe this will assist more than anything else in bringing a return to normal conditions."

Mr. Weir is a farmer from the western prairies and seldom breaks into print. His words, therefore, carry weight.

New England Gains.

Gov. Ely, democrat, of Massachusetts, addressing a Washington audience last week, declared that business was noticeably better in his state. Textiles, he insisted, are on a stronger footing than for six or seven years, and the shoe business is on the upgrade.

As Ely has been one of the governors who has not attempted to minimize the seriousness of the unemployment situation, his optimistic remarks are worth considering.

The most discouraging feature of the situation continues to be the attitude of a large section of the banking community.

Bankers Discouraging.

The Investment Bankers' association, meeting last week in a luxurious hotel in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., demanded a reduction in the wages of railroad workers and followed that up with the suggestion that instead of increasing the taxes on wealth, congress should turn to various forms of the sales tax for needed revenue.

In contrast to the benighted attitude of the bankers, Miss Frances Perkins, state industrial commissioner of New York, called on all industries in the Empire State to go on either the five-day week or the six-hour day.

At a conservative estimate, she said, the payrolls of the state have been decreased by $1,500,000,000 since the depression began in 1929.

The actual decline in factory employment in October was 3.3 per cent, said Miss Perkins, exceeding any month-to-month loss this year.

At the same time payrolls dropped to the level of 1916. This is only 63.7 per cent of the average for 1925-1927.

Miss Perkins concluded with a stirring appeal for funds to care for the jobless.

"I don't think the people generally appreciate the extent to which the charity workers have worn themselves out in these two long years of exceptional demand," she said.

Loadings Favorable Sign.

Loadings of revenue freight for the week ending Oct. 31, totaled 740,362 cars, according to the American Railway association. Although this is a drop of 29,310 cars from the preceding week, nevertheless it is taken as a favorable sign because the decrease was "very slightly more than normal."

The index of car loadings has varied within very narrow limits for some weeks. In some quarters this is also accepted as evidence that the bottom has been reached.

However, to offset that, it must be remembered that loadings for the week ending Oct. 31 were 194,000 cars below the record for the same week last year, and of course last year was very much below 1929.

PREVAILING WAGE LAW BROKEN, LABOR CHARGES

Houston Building Trades Unions Protest Use of Out-of-Town Workers at Low Pay on New Post Office Job.

Houston, Tex., Nov. 19.—The prevailing wage law is being flagrantly broken on the new postoffice building job here, the Houston Building Trades council charges in a letter to President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, Secretary of Labor Doak, Texas representatives and senators, the American Labor Banner and others.

The letter, signed by Jack Flynn, secretary of the Building Trades council, says in part:

"It is very evident that the prevailing wage law is beingopenly flouted on the postoffice job in Houston, Tex., by open shop subcontractors and the general contractor, Robert E. McKee, taking advantage of widespread unemployment by using laborers on mechanics' work. For instance, Ed Moseworth, superintendent for Robert E. McKee, has a laborer on two air compressors, when this work comes under the jurisdiction of the hoisting engineers, and the prevailing rate of wages on this class of work is $1 per hour. After I had gathered letters from the Associated General Contractors here to the effect that this class of work belongs to the hoisting engineers and is being paid for at the rate of $1 per hour by them and submitted copies to E. H. Dunnigan, U. S. conciliator; Roy B. Nichols, local postmaster; Mr. Gobel, U. S. engineer on the job, and Ed Moseworth, superintendent for Robert E. McKee, the general contractor, all the satisfaction we got was that Mr. Moseworth said he would pay the rate of $1 per hour to his men on the work, but would not put one of our men on the job. (Which to us is nothing more than a smoke screen.)

"La Mar Wilson, engineer for Robert E. McKee, came to Houston and in glowing statements in our local press announced that home and union labor would be used on the job. The fact remains that outside labor is being used in preference to local labor, and our local mechanics are only envious onlookers.

"We do not think it is fair or decent for the government to permit a contractor to bring into a community a cheap, itinerant labor supply with profit to himself, and I am ashamed to say perhaps with profit to the government.

"We believe that any fair general contractor makes his estimate based on the prevailing wage rate. The unfair contractor, after getting the contract, turns around and subcontracts the work to the lowest possible bidder, who exploits his own workers while our workers are forced to tramp the pavement.

"The Houston Building Trades council goes on record as protesting against this cut-throat practice of bid peddling on the part of a general contractor on government projects."

A SOUR NOTE

Editor The Labor World:

Since writing you, on Armistice day, I have come to an important conclusion. No, I'm not dead yet, thank you. But I am somewhat discouraged and getting rather disgusted at my fellowmen, especially Americans. You know, I believe that Americans are prone to moan and at present they seem to be the pronest I ever saw them, and, my heavens how they moan! And I tell you, I believe this extraordinary condition of the people today is caused by radio waves, in various ways, and particularly by those that carry this so-called jazz music (?) created by a moaning saxophone band, similar to one close by I might mention if I wasn't a friend of the nice little guy who inflicts it upon the people!

These eternal "blues singers" waves also help create this disturbing psychological condition. Why'n Sam Hill don't the radio stations of this country take a tumble and get together for one mighty drive against the blues, instead of encouraging it, and actually paying big prices for the privilege of inflicting it upon a helpless people, who are suffering terribly with the blues they have already brought on! And then kill all the moaners, of all sorts, who want to broadcast free of charge, as painlessly as possible!

Lately my optimism is getting rusty, and the rest of me sore from hunting feverishly for that d—d corner that prosperity is supposed to be right around! I'm getting so I am beginning to hate the sight of a corner! I think my ideal public way would be one without any corners, so a fellow could ramble right along to where he was going and not have to watch the corners, for fear some unknown, unexpected complication might bulge out on him and upset his beans. This sounds like a mixed metaphor. Do you know one when you see it?

Hoping for some relief before I have to sell my radio, I am, as usual,

H. F. B.

Road Bond Issue Of Three Billions Urged by Norris

Nebraska's Progressive Senator Declares Congress Should Provide Work to Replace Charity Efforts.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Congress should authorize a three billion dollar federal long-term bond issue at a low rate of interest to meet the unemployment problem by supplementing the federal-aid highway system throughout the United States, declared Senator Norris, of Nebraska.

"It is probable that nothing can be devised in the way of legislation for immediate effectiveness of any unemployment program," Senator Norris said in explaining his plan to help solve the problem of the jobless. "It is likely that nothing can be done to obviate the necessity of charity this winter, but we can devise legislation and enact it providing the machinery that can be put into operation next spring that would effectively meet this problem of unemployment.

Work Instead of Charity.

"Under ordinary circumstances I would oppose a bond issue, but distressing conditions have passed all bounds, and it seems necessary for the federal government to take some action to help the large number of people in this country who are out of work but willing to work.

"These people have got to have food. It would be much better to give them work than to give them charity as far as that is humanly possible.

"The federal government therefore should devise a plan by which, instead of resorting to charity, this large number of the unemployed would have the opportunity to work.

Government Funds to Provide Work.

"We should use federal government funds for this purpose, and the most practical activity of this kind would be the building of public roads."

Senator Norris pointed out that we already have a federal-aid system of road construction in operation whereby federal government funds are supplemented by state funds, but the states, he added, for various reasons do not seem able to go ahead with additional road construction, and the federal government can do so without the aid of the states.

Road Construction Practical Method.

"The federal government," Senator Norris went on, "can do enough of this additional highway construction to reach the very heart of this unemployment situation. The government would issue bonds and use the proceeds of their sale in the employment of men and materials for the construction of public roads.

"I say public roads are the most practical way of meeting this need, because there is already a system of the kind in working operation as a skeleton basis, and it is therefore a practicable field according to law.

Tax Larger Incomes and Inheritances.

"We should couple with this program two things to raise the money to pay these bonds, first, legislation to increase the income tax on the large incomes, and second, legislation to increase the federal inheritance or estate tax, whichever you choose to call it, on the larger inheritances and larger estates. The increased income in the treasury from this source should be put into a special fund to pay these bonds."

Four Per Cent Bonds.

Senator Norris said he believed the three billion dollar bond issue could easily be floated at 4 per cent.

"There is more money in this country than ever before," he concluded, "and all that is needed is to put it to work.

"Such a bond issue," he concluded, "would give employment to several millions of people. It would help every kind of business. If we were able to enact such a bond issue next week, you would find manufacturers of machinery, for instance, getting busy immediately."

Senator Norris said he expected to introduce a bill along these lines early in the coming session of congress.

The Dayton Scale company, with local offices at 818 Chestnut street, got a break this week when Fred Simons, well-known member of Local 175, Electrical Workers, consented to attach himself to the local sales force of the company. Fred started work Monday, and it is believed sales in Chattanooga will take a sudden jump. The new salesman's sample kit contains coffee mills, sausage mills, meat choppers, meat slicers and 57 varieties of scales.

The other day Charlie Melford bought two bottles of lemon extract at a grocery store. "My wife is going to make a couple of cakes," he told the clerk.

RAIL WORKERS REJECT 10 PER CENT. PAY CUT

Carriers Asking Workers, Already Hard Hit by Unemployment, to Take Cut to Support Idle Capital, Labor Executives' Association Declares in Reply to Wage Slash Proposal.

New York, Nov. 24.—Declaring that the railroads are asking that railroad workers take 10 per cent from their earnings "to support idle capital," the Railway Labor Executives' association rejected a proposal for a "voluntary" 10 per cent reduction in wages. Decision of the railroad workers was announced D. B. Robertson, chairman of the association, following a four-day conference here with nine railway presidents representing all parts of the country.

The railroad presidents made public a statement indicating that individual roads will lose no time in beginning simultaneous action for wage reductions in accordance with the labor provisions of the transportation act. The railroad presidents will report the result of the conference to regional organizations and the labor executives will take similar action at a meeting of regional chairmen in Chicago on Dec. 8.

In a letter to the railroad presidents, the labor executives cited as the chief reason for rejecting the pay cut proposal that presidents failed to give assurance that money saved through lower wages would be applied either "to increase employment or even to stabilize existing employment."

Third of Workers Idle.

"More than one-third of the employes of the railroad industry are idle and more than one-third of the capital in this industry is idle," the letter said. "You are taking nothing from the earnings of capital to support unemployed workers. You are asking that the employed workers take 10 per cent from their earnings to support idle capital. We submit that the first duty of the employed workers, after their duty to their dependents, is an obligation to their fellow employes who are denied an opportunity of employment."

"We do not believe that wages should be cut to pay dividends," said Robertson, commenting on the foregoing paragraph.

Robertson's letter to the railroad presidents, addressed to Daniel Willard, president of the group, further said:

"You have listened courteously to our propositions and have discussed them to some extent, but we have received no encouragement that any action would be recommended or taken by railway managements to provide any substantial measure relief of the present intolerable situation.

Propose to Boost Capital's Wages.

"In behalf of the interests which you represent (in a word, to protect and to increase the present wages of capital) you have suggested that we recommend that all railway employes offer to take a voluntary reduction of 10 per cent in the pay rolls based on present wage rates. This suggestion has not been coupled with any assurance that the money thus saved would be applied either to increase employment or even to stabilize existing employment. We cannot regard seriously the argument that employment would be increased by such a wage cut, when those who make the argument decline positively to give any assurance that even men now employed will be continued in employment for any definite period."

The letter said the association represented in its proposals for employment the elemental needs of about 1,750,000 workers, supporting probably 8,000,000 persons, that about 500,000 of these workers have practically no employment, another 500,000 "only the insecure promise of less than a substance wage" and another 500,000 have "only the expectation of earning little more than subsistence in the coming year."

No Assurance Given.

The letter recalled that it was decided to ask for a conference to seek some assurance on employment stabilization after the question of railway labor's voluntary taking a 10 per cent cut in wages had been raised.

"We have been informed that no such assurances can be given," continued Robertson's letter. "We have been asked to contribute, not to the relief of our fellow employes, but to the relief of those who have no claim upon our charity. We submit that impartial public opinion will support our answer that labor cannot be called upon to pay a dole to idle capital. We are confident that this proposition can be submitted to any well-informed, impartial judgment without fear of the consequence."

Opposing the argument that living costs have declined, Robertson cited the increased productivity of railway labor. Comparisons with wage rates in other industries he declared "utterly unsound."

Green Seeks Data On Unemployment Relief Measures

Federation Head Asks Local Unions to Supply Information on Action of Individual Organizations.

Data on unemployment relief measures instituted by local trades unions for the care of their members out of work is sought by President William Green, of the American Federation, having been requested as information by friends of labor in the United States congress. A letter from Mr. Green was read at Monday night's meeting of Central Body, and was ordered published in The Labor World, with a request that officers of all local unions immediately furnish all possible data to Secretary Gerlach, 1318 Dougdale street. It follows:

Repeatedly I have requests for information as to how trade unions are helping their members to meet the problems growing out of unemployment. Some of our friends in the United States congress are also interested in having this information.

It is difficult to keep our office information up to date or even to find those unions that are doing most constructive work. I should appreciate very much indeed having your help to this end. Will you kindly make a special effort to get me a list of unions in your locality which are collecting unemployment funds to take care of their members or helping their members to find jobs, or following some definite program to relieve the unemployed. I should appreciate having this information at your earliest convenience.

Lowry Presides at Gate City Banquet

To J. Burson Lowry, president of Local 259, Moving Picture Projectionists, fell the unusual honor of presiding at a banquet of his craft held Thursday night at the Ansley hotel, Atlanta.

The occasion was the twentieth anniversary of the Atlanta local, and Mr. Lowry was drafted to pinch hit for W. P. Raoul, international representative, who was prevented from attending on account of illness.

Mr. Lowry and W. C. Belcher represented 259 at the festivities, the local boys being the only "outsiders" invited to participate.

Reports were that "a good time was had by all," which, with Burson as the engineer, can be easily understood.

Committee on arrangements was A. J. Rozetta, W. M. Schneider, F. M. Young, S. H. Autry, Z. A. DeLoach and D. R. Reagan.

The local representatives returned home Friday.

CO-OPERATION OF LOCAL UNIONS IS APPRECIATED

Nashville Workers Thank Chattanoogans.

O'BRYAN BROS.' STATUS RECALLED IN LETTER

Overall Concern Scrapped Contract With Old and Faithful Employes.

A new appeal, expressing, also, appreciation of the Nashville local of United Garment Workers for assistance given in a publicity campaign with respect to O'Bryan Bros., of that city, was received by Chattanooga trades unionists this week, the capital city workers urging a continuance of the campaign to acquaint the general public with the situation in the big overall and work-clothes plant there.

O'Bryan Bros., makers of Duck Head overalls and other work garments, it will be remembered, built a great business with the assistance and co-operation of organized workers throughout the state, but, like many other corporations, in their day of prosperity ignored the part played by their employes and scrapped signed contracts, slashed wages and lengthened working hours. The Nashville labor movement, which had consistently and effectively supported the products of the O'Bryan concern, has since the about-face of the employers conducted another far different campaign, and apparently with some effect.

"The work that has been done so far," the latest communication declares, "has been splendid; but there must be no let-up, no slowing or turning back in our progress."

The letter, read Monday night at Central Body, follows:

The task that faces organized labor today is one that cries out for the full-hearted support of every working man and woman interested in the economic well-being of themselves and their families.

The work that has been done so far in our behalf is splendid, but there must be no let-up—no slowing or turning back in our progress.

Public interest and sympathy has been aroused by the progress of publicity which we have been carrying on against the O'Bryan Bros. of Nashville, Tenn., manufacturers of work clothes, who have turned their backs against the plea of labor for a fair and honest wage—and who have destroyed like "scraps of paper" their union agreements.

The time to carry on the impression we have made to a definite concerted action by the buying public against non-union garments and all other products is here right now.

Merely to discriminate in favor of union-made products ourselves is not enough. The fact must be brought home to the thousands of families who believe that the prosperity of the country depends upon the payment of a living wage to the laboring masses, and who will co-operate when they learn the truth.

Here is a definite way in which our work may be carried on towards its goal: visit the merchants again, call your members and friends' attention in verbal conversation, inform them that O'Bryan Bros., of Nashville, Tenn., makers of Duck Head and War Horse overalls, work and dress pants, play suits, unionalls and work shirts, operate under non-union conditions with starvation wage scale for their men and women; a firm that repudiated their long-standing union agreement with their employes.

Don't listen to some of the merchants who try to mislead you by stating that the matter has been adjusted. Remember, the union label is the only guarantee the garments are union made. Remember, the future conditions of all labor depends upon what you are doing about it. All labor will benefit by the success of this campaign.

God helps those who help themselves.

Ornburn Is Again Chosen President Of Cigarmakers

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 25.—I. M. Ornburn was elected to succeed himself as president of the Cigar Makers' International union this week in the first convention the organization has held since the laws of the union were changed in Chicago in 1927.

Ornburn was elected by a better than two to one vote over his opponent, John R. O'Grain, of Chicago.

The election was a complete vindication of Ornburn's policies. Ornburn was supported by the convention in every decision, as well as in the election.

"Woodrow" Wilson Goes to Provident

J. A. "Woodrow" Wilson, well-known local barber, has packed up his razor, shears and other paraphernalia, and moved from the Climax shop, at 18 West Eighth street, to the Provident, and is greeting his old friends with the same old sales talk boosting products of the barber supply houses.

Federation Survey Indicates Necessity For Major Changes

Readjustment of Working Hours Imperative If Unemployment Is to Be Reduced to Minimum.

Washington, Nov. 25.—There must be a shortening of the work-day and work-week to the time needed to do the nation's work, or unemployment cannot be eliminated.

If there is only 35 hours' work per week for all workers, then hours must be shortened to thirty-five.

The penalty for failure to shorten hours was a million more unemployed from 1920 to 1929.

Those are the declarations of the American Federation of Labor in its current survey of business, just released.

Major Adjustment Imperative.

"Business is facing a major adjustment," says the survey. It proceeds to declare that if the nation remedies unemployment it will mean permanent shorter work-days and work-weeks, "universal adoption of either the six-hour day or the five-day week."

The survey destroys the fable that drop in cost of living has made up for wage cuts. It delivers the most slashing blows at Wall Street excuses yet uttered by the federation. In 1931, the survey points out, there was work enough for only a 35-hour week and that should have been the universally adopted week.

The enormous time and money loss due to unemployment is presented.

Work Hours Must Be Cut.

"The movement for shorter work hours is underway," says the survey, "but it needs the drive of realization that this adjustment is fundamental to business progress. A recent survey of methods used by different firms to prevent unemployment showed that 192 firms had shortened the work day or work week by February, 1931; the department of labor reports 673 establishments operating permanently on the five-day week basis in 1931; more recently a survey of representative firms by Industrial Standards corporation showed 47 per cent favoring a shorter work week, 36 per cent believing work hours per day should be shortened. The Kellogg company went on the six-hour day in December, 1930, employing 20 per cent more workers; the du Pont Powder plants established it in October, 1931, making possible the employment of over 1,000 additional workers. General Electric, E. R. Squibbs & Sons, the New Jersey Telephone company are among the important firms who have guaranteed work to their employes. The spread of this movement can make a fundamental adjustment, increase confidence, and pave the way for business advance on a sound basis."

What unemployment has meant to business, in lost buying, is put into a staggering total.

Staggering Loss in Income.

"Wage-earners' yearly income," says the survey, "is now $11,000,000,000 (based on government figures) below the 1929 level. This does not include losses of salaried workers. The total income of factory workers is now 37 per cent below 1929, of railroad workers 25 per cent below, and the income of all wage-earners, we estimate, has declined 32 per cent below 1929. Cost of living has declined only 12 per cent; workers' actual purchasing power therefore is 23 per cent below 1929. Allowing for the change in prices, the wage-earners' loss is $9,700,000,000 in 1929 dollars.

"This loss is a major factor in business development. No other single item in the record of business losses has had anything like the economic effect of this $11,000,000,000 decline in wage payments.

"Bank failures have caused panic, but actual deposits in all banks which failed in the year ending September 30, 1931, was less than one-seventh the amount lost by wage-earners ($1,500,000,000); all business failures reported to Dun's review in the same period involved only one-fifteenth the amount ($750,000,000).

Big Drop in Retail Trade.

"If the United States were to lose its entire foreign trade, the loss would be less than half as great as the wage decline ($5,150,000,000 in 1929).

"Most significant of all is the loss in retail trade due to diminished incomes of workers. Allowing for rent and for price changes, the loss to retail trade from wages declines this year has been at least $8,000,000,000 in 1929 dollars. Since the nation's total retail sales in 1929 were $50,000,000,000, the wage loss has reduced retail trade by 16 per cent.

"Since production of practically every kind depends ultimately on retail sales, this loss has had its blighting effect on factories, mines, railroads, farms, reducing business activity throughout our entire business mechanism. A loss one-quarter as large would be enough to work serious havoc.

"Those who advocate reducing workers' buying power still further by wage cuts have failed to consider these facts."

WAGE-CUTTING POOR "REMEDY" FOR DEPRESSION

Defeats Very Purpose It Seeks to Serve.

PURCHASING POWER MUST BE MAINTAINED

Local Newspaper Man Impressed by Stand of Gov. Ritchie, of Maryland.

"Increasing business by cutting wages is like the proverbial lifting oneself by the bootstraps," is the way the present situation is sized up by W. W. O'Guin in a communication received from the well-known newspaper man this week. Mr. O'Guin, formerly editor of the Knoxville Sentinel, is now connected with the staff of a local newspaper. "I regard the move to reduce wages as a remedy for the depression to be absolutely fallacious, and that it defeats the very purpose which it seeks to serve," he says. "A market cannot be built up by reducing the purchasing power of the wage-earners."

Mr. O'Guin's observations are called forth by a radio speech by Gov. Ritchie, of Maryland, and are particularly timely as indicating the trend of thought among students of affairs during the present times of stress. His communication follows:

Editor The Labor World:

A few days ago I listened to a radio address from Gov. Ritchie, of Maryland, and was impressed with the position he took on the economic situation in America.

Gov. Ritchie, while more or less erratic on some questions, has stamped himself as a big man in many ways and a student in every way.

The Maryland executive was discussing the condition in this country relative to unemployment. He made the statement that industry has come to the parting of the ways, that the so-called capitalistic system in America is being weighed in the balances and that industry and capital must show ability to cope with the situation or be forced to step aside for more radical methods.

Gov. Ritchie suggested that, just as industry sets aside a reserve fund to tide it over the lean days, it must, in some way, set aside a reserve to care for its employes when there is no work. He pointed out that it is the duty of industry to care for its laborers.

The present practice of dumping employes on to the public when their work is no longer needed was attacked by Gov. Ritchie as unfair and unjust to the public. Inasmuch as employes create the wealth possessed by the employer it is held that it is just, right, equitable and proper for the employer to see that the employe is provided with the necessities of life.

After listening to Gov. Ritchie I have reached the conclusion that he has really suggested the only workable permanent solution for periods of unemployment. I heartily agree that he is right in his contention that industry and not the public is responsible for its own labor and should provide for it. As I view the situation in face of the unrest that predominates the world today I am convinced that the masses will not always tolerate conditions such as we now have.

I have always been, and still am, an uncompromising foe of radicalism and communism, and I regret to see conditions existing that add fuel to the red flames that are making some progress in America.

It is evident that in a country such as ours, where granaries are bursting with their surplus of wheat and where other foods are so cheap that they are allowed to perish, and where banks are bulging with money; where millionaires are being made daily, while millions walk the streets and beg the privilege of earning their daily bread, something is very much wrong with our economic system. I also believe that this must be rectified or greater troubles are in store for America.

This summer we have seen peaches so cheap that they were given away by truck loads. Fine baskets of fruit were offered for 25 cents per bushel, but what is this worth to the man who has no money with which to purchase?

I regard the move to reduce wages as a remedy for the depression to be absolutely fallacious and that it defeats the very purpose which it seeks to serve. What producers need is a market. A market cannot be built up by reducing the purchasing power of the wage-earner. Wage-earners are our greatest class of consumers, but

"UNCLE ALF."

Passing, at Johnson City Wednesday, of former Gov. Alfred Taylor will be noted with sincere regret by trades unionists throughout the south. A naturally sympathetic heart gave place at all times to the trials and struggles of the workers, and during his entire public career he was known as a sincere friend of organized labor.

Death of "Uncle Alf," as he was affectionately known to thousands, recalls the state campaign in which he overwhelmingly defeated Gov. Roberts, a bitter enemy of labor, with the practically solid support of the Tennessee labor movement.

With a politically unfriendly legislature, his hands were practically tied, but during his entire administration labor representatives were made to feel at home always in his office, and they never hesitated to discuss freely their problems with him, knowing full well that his sympathies were with them and that the extent of his assistance in solving these problems was limited only by his ability to act in the circumstances.

Many Tennessee trades unionists enjoyed a warm personal friendship with the departed statesman, and today their hearts are bowed in the knowledge that he has passed to his reward.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Did the International Molders' Union of North America take part in the organization of the American Federation of Labor in 1881?

A.—Yes. It was then known as the Iron Molders' Union of North America.

Q.—Is organized labor represented on the committee appointed by Gov. Emmerson, of Illinois, to study the question of old-age dependency?

A.—Yes. Victor A. Olander, secretary of the Illinois Federation of Labor, is a member.

A method of using gamma rays of radium to photograph the internal structure of metals in order to find any defects is described by Prof. Gilbert E. Doan, of Lehigh university, in a report issued by the Engineering Foundation. The gamma rays can penetrate through steel objects 12 inches thick, the report says. By its use valves for high-power pressure plants and pipe lines can be made safe. Battleship parts, such as the stern post and keel knuckle, can be tested before the trial run and welded parts can be inspected.

Ain't science wonderful. One manufacturer asserts that his cigarette is the best because it's toasted and "heat purifies." Another manufacturer who makes a cigar claims it is the best because it has been given a "cold treatment." There you have it, and the public may take its choice and blow smoke either hot or cold. RUN-DOWN and WEAK

"I began taking Cardui when in a weakened, run-down condition," writes Mrs. F. S. Perrit, of Wesson, Miss. "I took one bottle, and I seemed to improve so much that I sent for six bottles. After I had taken the six bottles, I seemed entirely well.

"Before I took Cardui, I was nervous, restless, blue and out of heart. I felt depressed all the time. After I took Cardui, all this disappeared.

An Interesting Announcement.

Announcement, this week, that Harry C. Adler, general manager of the Chattanooga Times for two decades or more, has been succeeded by Adolph Shelby Ochs, nephew of the founder and owner of the Times, is of more than passing interest to local trades unionists. Mr. Adler resigns to become chairman of the board of directors of the Times Printing company.

Time was when the citizenship of a community looked to its local newspaper for guidance in political, civic and economic affairs, and depended upon its editor for advice in many matters pertaining to the progress of its people. Little thought was given to the business department, it being the theory that confidence in the editorial and news policies would increase the number of readers, which would naturally, in turn, provide the source for increasing revenue.

So-called progress, however, and commercialism have all but destroyed the ideal newspaper, and few great dailies today enjoy the confidence of their readers. The business office of all too many present-day journals dictates the editorial and news policies, and as a consequence most daily papers have become for the average citizen purely and simply a record of the day's events, with a majority, perhaps, reserving the right to place their own construction on the truthfulness and accuracy of even the purely "news" items.

With due credit to Mr. Adler for his work in building the Chattanooga Times, the writer believes that the selection now of Mr. Ochs to guide its destinies augurs well for the future of that paper, both as a commercial institution and as a power for good in the community.

It has been our privilege and pleasure, over a period of years, to come more or less into contact with the new manager of the morning paper, and this contact quickly engendered an abiding respect and esteem for his fine philosophy, his ideals and his sense of fairness, both with regard to the conduct of a newspaper and to general economic and political matters.

We believe, therefore, that the future of the morning paper is in good hands, and beg leave to join with a host of friends in congratulating Mr. Ochs, and in wishing and predicting for him a notable career in the field of journalism.

Organized Labor's Parliament.

The American Federation of Labor is governed by its annual convention.

The convention declares the policy of the federation.

It speaks with authority.

No other body, no official, has the power to repeal its decisions or nullify its actions.

It is organized labor's parliament and supreme court combined in one body.

Its actions are indeed the voice of labor, challenging injustice and presenting the collective demands of the workers for rights and equities that should be theirs without demand.

The 1931 convention was confronted with the stupendous problem, relatively recent in the United States, of millions of able-bodied adults deprived of the right to earn a living and millions more working part time, a menacing condition created by wage cuts both actual and predicted, the continuance of injunctions throttling labor's organized activities, and many other crucial questions of greatest interest to working men and women.

The convention's actions were positive and progressive on all the questions before it.

It demanded that the right to work be secured for every citizen and made inalienable.

It declared its opposition to unemployment insurance of the British-German types as containing policies jeopardizing the elemental rights of organized labor and consequently of all labor.

It adopted an emergency unemployment program which would very quickly relieve the present unemployment crisis if those who own and manage industry had the statesmanship to apply it.

It demanded adequate support of the unemployed regardless of whether the cost is millions or billions of dollars.

It declared for a progressively shorter work day as the major remedy for unemployment caused by the wholesale introduction of labor-displacing machinery.

It insisted that wage rates be maintained during the depression.

It promulgated a comprehensive and practical long-range policy for national economic planning to prevent unemployment in the future.

It indorsed an anti-injunction bill which it is believed will strike from the wrists of labor the manacles riveted there by the tyranny of injunction judges.

It approved a model old age security measure which, when enacted, will provide a comfortable living for dependent people over sixty.

It declared in favor of progressively increasing income and inheritance taxes as a measure for collecting additional taxes from those who secure the greatest benefits from our industrial and political systems.

It opposed the sales tax because it would place heavier taxation on those who get the least out of our industrial and political systems and are least able to bear taxation.

It instituted a campaign to protect the child workers of the nation by the prompt ratification of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution.

The convention also took concrete positions on many other matters of great interest to those whose brain and brawn constitute the sinews of our industrial system.

The definitely progressive labor policy set up by the 1931 convention positively demands that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, instead of remaining mere shadows that elude the grasp, shall become the inalienable rights of the working masses inseparable from social and economic justice.

The principles laid down by the convention must be written into the laws and practice of our country for the protection of American institutions.

Big Business Men!

Three items in the same day's names: 1—John D. Rockefeller gives a half million to unemployment relief; 2—Peter De Vito is found not guilty of making illegal deductions from his income tax returns; 3—The elder Rockefeller departs for Florida.

The elder Rockefeller built Standard Oil. The young Rockefeller is a power in Standard Oil.

Standard Oil began and grew by ruthless methods. Ivy Lee has tried to convince us that there has been change and in many respects there has been change.

But, enter Mr. De Vito. What does he do, besides get into court?

Mr. De Vito has been a big-time strikebreaker.

In his income tax case some figures came out.

Standard Oil of New York paid Mr. De Vito $300,000 for strikebreaking.

So, $500,000 from Rockefeller for the unemployed; $300,000 to Mr. De Vito from Standard Oil to force strikers into unemployment!

American Can paid Mr. De Vito $168,000, N. T. Sweezy's Sons & Co. paid him $34,000—but Standard Oil was a real "client," with a voucher in evidence in court showing $300,000 paid to him.

De Vito seems to have been a right-hand man for Standard Oil of New York. Did Mr. Rockefeller stand far to the left so as not to know what the right-hand man did?

However that may be, strikebreaking is a big business, like Standard Oil; and big business seems to pay its right-hand smashers of heads in big bills.

Trade unionism, observing the price paid to enforce slavery, can only tighten its belt and organize more strongly.

Mr. Rockefeller built a great church in New York. He does not take Mr. De Vito to that church with him Sunday mornings. Strikebreaking is week-day business.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Chapter I

PART V: CONTEMPORARY OPINION OF JESUS

9. What People of Jesus' Time Thought of Him. From what we have learned from the past two weeks' articles in this series we face two facts in summing up what people of Jesus' day thought of Him. The first fact is, we know the common people followed Him and listened gladly to His preaching, and everywhere, when influenced, accorded Him acclaim no other single teacher of theirs ever boasted. Secondly, on repeated occasions whenever this popular choice of Jesus as a teacher reached a climax among the common people the Pharisees (accompanied either by the Sadducees or scribes, and sometimes, undoubtedly, by mixed groups of adherents of both these latter two schools of religious thought) would accost Jesus and attempt to trap Him into giving an answer to some important question, hoping to receive as an answer one they knew would make Jesus unpopular with the common people. At the same time the Pharisees and their religious friends, the Sadducees and scribes, constantly went about among the people minimizing the validity and worthwhileness of Jesus' teaching.

WM. L. MOSS

We have now established two primary facts: the first is, the people accepted Jesus as a teacher, and the second is, that while it is true the Sadducees and scribes were against Him, His chief opponents in His public teaching ministry were the Pharisees.

We must now look into the case of the Pharisees, for they were not only Jesus' principal opponents, but were also the religious and social arbiters of their day in Palestine. Since we are preparing to make a close study of Jesus' social ideals as revealed in His religious ideals it behooves us to now look at the social ideals of His most important opponents through their religious ideals. Thus, by knowing something of the Pharisees' religious ideals we will gain some idea, on the one hand, of how far short these same religious ideals taught by the Pharisees fell below the religious ideals of Jesus. On the other hand, we will see how circumscribed and undemocratic were the social ideals of the Pharisees as a result of their narrow religious views as compared to the universally applicable and thoroughly sound democratic social ideals of Jesus that grew out of His pronouncement that we are all the children of God and God is love. Yes, I am certain of this. Back in September and October, 1929, one Prof. Irving Fisher, economist on the faculty of Yale university, gave us earnest assurance that stocks were then not too high, the slump in the stock market was only temporary and, furthermore, would soon disappear, causing stock prices to go fluttering skyward. His picture of the "upturn" in things in general and the financial world in particular was a rosy-hued masterpiece, making its bid for acceptance because it was painted by the deft hand—and voluble mouth—of a "university economic expert."

Ah, ha! And what do you suppose really happened back there in 1929? Everything but what Financial Doctor Fisher prophesied! The already leaky bottom dropped completely out of the stock market. And down through the hole left in the bucket fell many a big man's big patrimony and many a little man's little sack o' money. Down, down went stock prices—and likewise men's hopes.

Now cometh one Prof. Irving Fisher, Yale economist—say, I wonder if this is our old friend Financial Doctor Fisher of the nerve-wracking days of 1929?—who said a few days ago that if labor would take a substantial cut in wages the country's financial pulse will again tap-tap-tap with its accustomed and pre-1929 rate of speed, which, being interpreted, means "business will recover."

Considering how far Prof. Fisher missed his guess back in 1929, laboring men and women of this country are, I am quite sure of this, ready to accept his wage-cut advice. Having experienced about everything else a depression can bring they will, I am doubly sure about this, quickly consent to cut their own throats and ask for a wage cut—and for no other reason than to help the good professor re-establish his reputation as a prophet!

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

"I See by the Paper"

By HECK

The editor of The Labor World has requested me to write something for him each week, so I have chosen to commence on news items I see in the daily papers. Each week I will pick out two or three items and give my views of the connection between them and labor. These articles, while editorial in nature, should not necessarily be construed as being the views of The Labor World.—The Author.

The scare which threatening letters threw into Wall street financial wizards last week, causing city officials to put a heavily-armed guard to patroling the financial district, reminds me that if all the industries employed union labor the "Reds" and "Communists," who were blamed for the letters, would have a poor chance to make any headway in our country.

Reds and Communists only gain a following in places where there is unrest among the working people who have no chance to speak for themselves. Union workers, who have always fought for the right to do collective bargaining, are not interested in the propaganda spread by Reds and Communists, for the Reds and Communists have nothing to offer the union workers which they cannot get for themselves by collective bargaining with their employers. The non-union worker has no chance to better his working condition or increase his wages, for he does not have the backing of his fellow employes in any argument with his employer, and thereby becomes a willing listener to the doctrine of Bolshevism and Communism.

If all working people were members of unions the financial wizards could rest in peace, safe in the assurance that the working people were satisfied and have no need to do any bombing of financial districts to gain their desires.

Announcement from New York of the installation of a new system of communication, or rather, the wide-spread distribution of an old system, is liable to result in the displacement of many telegraph employes.

The new method is to supply typewriter-telegraph instruments to subscribers of the new service, with a central operator to connect any subscriber with any other subscriber, thereby enabling the patrons of the service to hold typewritten conversations with each other and do away with the costly expense of sending telegrams and long distance telephone calls. Each subscriber becomes his own telegraph operator, for the sending of messages is as simple as operating a typewriter.

The telegraph and telephone companies won't lose anything by the new service, for the patrons will probably spend just as much money as ever, getting more communication for their money. In fact, the telephone companies will gain, for, while the new service will eliminate telegraphic communication, through telegraph offices, in big business, it won't completely eliminate long distance telephonic communication. The telegraph companies are united in competing with the telephone companies in the new service.

The only ones who will lose in this deal is the employes of the telegraph companies, for with fewer telegrams to handle the companies will need fewer employes. Just another scheme of big business and financial wizards to end the depression by throwing some more people out of employment.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

WE are prone to think of the Civil war period as a time during which all activities ceased in both the north and south except that of the business of the two sections making war on each other. Our school textbooks are largely responsible for this misconception of the industrial, social and political life of the people of the north and south—especially of the northern part of the country—existing in the average person's mind. For the textbooks scarce mention the social and political affairs of either side, and as for the industrial life no mention whatever is met with in the general run of school textbooks covering the conflict of 1861-65. Just to that extent are the textbooks inadequate to give our boys and girls a proper balance of instruction concerning the Civil war or to properly enlighten them with reference to a full knowledge of all phases of life as it existed in the southern and northern states during the sanguine days of their misunderstanding.

Although at war, the people of the two sections had to live. This meant the land had to be tilled, calling for agriculture implements; clothing had to be manufactured, this remanded machinery must be manufactured to turn out the cloth; arms needs must be supplied the contending forces if the tide of battle was to rest with either side, and those who were left in the homes had to live and must have their wants supplied. Who, then, but people like those whose needs were such as those mentioned above could create the finished products from the raw materials?

It is true, of course, that industrial activities were immeasurably dwarfed by the Civil war. No effort whatever is being made to fly in the face of the facts. But the common notion seems to be that the people of the south and north threw themselves into sectional strife, subsisting during the course of the four years on thin air and their armies equipped with tools of slaughter sent them from the fairyland of nowhere, and the stay-at-homes as well as the soldier in camp and on the field clothed with bonnets, dresses and uniforms dropped down to them from heaven wrapped in a big white sheet. It is deplorable this lack of knowledge on the part of the average American citizen of the fact that industry did not altogether cease in the United States during the Civil war. For it was during the Civil war the earlier development toward a new species of labor union crystallized and the lofty phraseology of Horace Greeley, Wendell Phillips, Edward Everett and George Henry Evans and their misdirected attempt at world-reform of the 1850's were rejected and consigned forever to oblivion by laboring men and women. There was born the modern labor movement—practical, sane, inclusive yet not too broad as to collapse, demanding not an earthly Utopia for its members but their inherent, undeniable right: steady and profitable employment.

Job Racket Charged To Marine Merchant

New York.—Louis Kappalman was arrested and indicted as the principal in a scheme to sell jobs to unemployed seamen for from $50 to $150. For thirty years he had sold jewelry and clothing to men in the merchant marine service. The indictment alleges eleven acts of extortion in the last three years.

Thomas E. Dewey, chief assistant United States attorney, announced that the government had begun an investigation to determine what part employes of steamship lines had played in the conspiracy.

WITH THE ELECTRICIANS

By E. E. CROSBY

At the last meeting there were about twenty-five present and we hope to see more next time. Brothers, you owe it to yourself and brothers to come, so put forth more effort and come.

By the way, how many of you will try going to church? The writer knows that would do you good.

W. E. Crosby, Jr., is better, after suffering a bad siege of scarlet fever.

Smiling Ed. McConnell, the second Patten, was very much in attendance at the last meeting. We don't know what we would do without that smile, Pat, so keep it up, that's the spirit.

C. E. Cofer and his pipe were also at the meeting. A good time was enjoyed by both.

One of the brothers would like to know why Field Hand Lowe was in such high spirits Wednesday night. He sure is a backer for any motion before the house. Smile, durn you, smile.

Brothers Perry Howard, Williams and Butler were the chief speakers of the evening in fact, were one of the three and the finest most of the time. However, what they had to say was good. Keep it up, brothers, keep it up.

Wanted, to know which is the oldest, Ernst [illegible] the pipe. They were also at the meeting.

Talk about baseball, Dyche says it is right [illegible] baseball, what he can say about the Chattanooga baseball club and Joe Engle is puzzling. I can't see why Mr. Engle don't [illegible] as a comedian; then he would not have to call upon Washington to send Nick and Al to help him out.

The writer wishes the editor of this paper could have been there and seen the bunch of big whole-hearted smiles that were there. He sure would have wanted nothing better to look upon. Just wondering if Crosby and Dyche had anything to do with it all.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

FIFTY YEARS' PROGRESS!

"The American Federation of Labor is primarily a constructive social organization founded on social idealism and on a broad vision of a better social order," declared the 1931 convention of the federation, in commending the report on the fifty years of service of the organization made to the convention by the Executive Council.

"The federation," the convention continued, "looking back over fifty years, views with pride the social progress that has been made through its efforts and through its co-operation with other groups of organized citizenry."

A review of the council's survey confirms the convention's declaration.

Social and Economic Progress.

For half a century, from its almost infinitesimal beginning in a conference of five men in Terre Haute, Ind., in 1881, the American Federation of Labor has stood, like a lighthouse builded on a rock, for everything that has made for the social and economic progress of the American working men and women, whether or not they were affiliated with unions, whether they earned their livings in dungarees or white collars, in office gowns or household aprons.

Particularly, since 1886, the American Federation of Labor has been in the forefront of all movements for the betterment of conditions among the common people, men, women, and especially children, irrespective of how or where the movements originated—and a generous share of such movements have originated within the federation itself.

Pay Rates and Union Strength.

In its survey of these fifty years of service, the Executive Council strikingly shows how in the federation's own field of organization workers' gains and trade union strength are correlated. Wages have increased and hours have been shortened in direct ratio to trade union membership gains.

The organization was a major instrument in establishing the public school system, conventions of the federation have indorsed and helped to secure better school laws, wider use of school plants, reduction in class sizes, increased pay for teachers and safety of tenure, textbooks on social subjects, citizenship training, and a host of other benefits undreamed of fifty years ago, but now a commonplace in the modern educational system.

Contributions in Industry.

The federation, in prosecuting its primal objective, the immediate welfare of the workers, has by its demands for better working standards, higher wage rates and shorter hours contributed notably to industrial improvement. Among such achievements are:

Intelligent cost accounting.

Improved machinery and technical processes.

Application of sound business principles to wage-earning as a business.

Collective negotiation and co-operation.

The principles of the work contract.

Principles of time economics—the adjustment of work-day and work-week standards as conditions change, with scientific evaluation of the use of leisure.

Principles of personnel relations on the basis of union-management co-operation.

Policy of regularity of employment for individuals and its essential concomitant of regularity of production.

Social and Political Reform.

In politics the American Federation of Labor, working always to put the principles of democracy into actual practice, has helped to establish:

The Australian ballot system.

Woman suffrage.

Initiative, referendum and recall.

Popular election of senators.

Primary elections.

Agencies working for international understanding and world peace.

Labor Legislation.

Legislation regulating attachment for debts and assignments of wages, and exempting tools of trade or profession and the homestead from executions.

Wage lien laws in all the states and workmen's compensation laws in several.

Sanitary legislation for industrial and commercial plants.

Protective laws for women in industry and commerce.

Mothers' pension and child labor laws in many states.

Among a host of other social achievements the federation has been instrumental in bringing about are bureaus for gathering labor statistics, laws against the importation of contract labor, and the general strengthening of immigration laws to bar incoming aliens whose assimilation, if possible, could only endanger American standards.

Standing firmly on its fifty years of economic, social and political achievement, the American Federation of Labor approaches our present problems with a constructive conservatism, a conciliatory attitude, and an able leadership, all animated with the spirit of social idealism.

Labor faces the future backed by courage and buttressed by faith.

American Federation of Labor Prepares to Present Measure Which Will End Injunction Evil

Officials of the American Federation of Labor will present labor's anti-injunction bill to the United States congress as soon as it convenes in December and urge the necessity of the prompt enactment of the measure into law.

The bill is organized labor's well-considered remedy for a despotism that for many years has stood as an insurmountable barrier to the onward march of the workers toward their emancipation from the various forms of tyranny mobilized by those who own and control our industrial system.

Labor officials believe the measure will definitely end the judicial dictatorship exercised by federal judges in issuing injunctions in labor disputes prohibiting the workers from organizing in trade unions and from carrying on, without molestation from the courts, the work for which the unions are organized.

Corrects Injunction Abuse.

The bill is intended to be a practical and effective medium to correct the abuse of the injunction, which has become notoriously oppressive to labor. The convention regarded injunction relief legislation as one of the most important parts of its legislative program.

Labor's Bill of Rights.

In this proposed legislation, labor does not ask for a privileged status. Labor undertakes to secure for itself the exercise of the right of free speech, free press, free assemblage, the right to organize, the right to engage in collective bargaining, and to prevent the equity courts from giving status and legal standing to "yellow dog" contracts.

Involuntary Servitude.

The Thirteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States declares:

"Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

In most labor injunctions federal judges set up some form of involuntary servitude for the workers.

Ends Injunction Slavery.

The bill endorsed by the convention proposes to end all forms of injunction slavery by writing into the federal statutes a declaration of public policy which declares that "every human being has under the Thirteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States an inalienable right to the disposal of his labor free from interference, restraint or coercion by or in behalf of employers of labor, including the right to associate with other human beings for the protection and advancement of their common interests as workers, and in such association to negotiate through representatives of their own choosing concerning the terms of employment and conditions of labor, and to take concerted action for their own protection in labor disputes." The bill declares that any "undertaking or promise" in conflict with this declaration shall be contrary to the public policy of the United States, and shall not be enforceable or subject to relief from the courts.

"Yellow Dog" Contracts Illegal.

The bill then takes up the contracts which employers require workers to sign pledging themselves not to join trade unions and declares such contracts to be contrary to the public policy of the United States and not enforceable.

With this groundwork outlawing activities against the right of labor to organize and the imposition of yellow dog contracts as against public policy, the bill considers the rights which injunction judges have barred workers from exercising and gives them the status of legality.

Injunctions Declared Illegal.

The bill declares it to be illegal for federal judges to issue injunctions in labor disputes prohibiting workers individually or collectively from striking or threatening to strike, whether the strikers have a grievance against their own employers or strike sympathetically to bring pressure in favor of some other union engaged in a dispute, and prohibits federal judges from issuing injunctions barring workers from membership in trade unions.

Legalizes Strike Activities.

The bill also declares it to be illegal for federal judges to issue injunctions in labor disputes prohibiting workers individually or collectively from paying or withholding strike or unemployment benefits, from giving publicity to labor disputes, from aiding by all lawful means any person interested in a labor dispute who is being prosecuted in federal or state courts, from assembling peaceably to act or organize to act in the interest of a labor dispute, and in general from urging others, without threat, fraud, or violence to do these things.

"Unlawful Conspiracy" Injunctions.

The federation's bill further provides that no federal court may grant an injunction "on the ground that any persons in a labor dispute are engaged in unlawful conspiracy."

Protects Trade Union Officials.

It relieves the officers and members of labor organizations of responsibility for the unlawful acts of individual officers and members or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation and knowledge.

"Irreparable Damage" Injunctions.

According to the federation's bill, the only circumstances under which a judge could issue an injunction in a labor dispute are the commission of unlawful acts which will continue and cause substantial and irreparable damage to the property of the complainant who has no other remedy but the injunction.

Contempt of Court.

In contempt of court proceedings for alleged violation of a labor injunction the federation bill gives the parties to an industrial dispute the right to demand the withdrawal of a federal judge if the cause is an attack on his character or conduct, and not made in open court. Upon filing the demand the judge would go no further in the contempt case.

Jury Trials Granted.

After a labor injunction is granted, violation of it and charges for contempt of court shall be tried by a jury instead of by the judge, except contempt in the presence of the court or interfering with its operations.

Most Important Labor Measure.

"Our immediate and foremost task," the convention declared in its approval of the anti-injunction bill, "is to secure remedial legislation from the coming session of our national congress. Every effort should and must be directed to that end, and all other legislative proposals ought to be subordinated to this great task.

Unions Mobilized.

"We earnestly urge all national and international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies and local unions to respond whole-heartedly to every call which may be issued by the executive council on this subject."

MORE ABOUT WAGE-CUTTING

with wages cut to a bare living their demands will be greatly lessened.

Increasing business by cutting wages is like the proverbial lifting oneself by his bootstraps. It cannot be done. I have never seen a depression overcome until wages began to rise. I can remember the last few months of the Cleveland panic and I remember that an increase in wages preceded prosperity.

I believe with liberal wages and a system of caring for wage-earners such as suggested by Gov. Ritchie that the solution of the unemployment problem will have been reached, or at least its evils will have been greatly lessened.

Patch Work "Cures" Fail to Solve Cincinnati's Unemployment Crisis

Cincinnati, Dec. 3.—The inadequacy of patch-work "remedies" for the present economic upheaval was illustrated here when Fred Hoehler, Cincinnati's welfare director, finally admitted that 45,000 workmen are idle in a town of 450,000 persons. The 45,000 estimate is of those in industries of which some fair reckoning is kept. Actually the number of unemployed is believed to be much higher.

Hoehler, a former Y. M. C. A. secretary, has enthusiastically boosted all welfare schemes and soup house projects thus far proposed as a substitute for real work for the unemployed. Everything from raking leaves to putting in the winter's coal has been tried with official sanction, but the number of unemployed steadily increased until it has reached the point where even the welfare director himself admits the situation is critical.

Hoehler's figures of 45,000 unemployed is really 25 per cent. of Cincinnati's employable population, although it represents 10 per cent. of the total population of the city. Cincinnati's main industries are tool making, chemicals, printing, leather products and some woodworking enterprises.

"Hunger Parade" On Capital Reds' Biggest Effort

Timidity of Secret Service Announcements in Face of Frankly Admitted Communist Program Is Laughable.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—Congress and the miscalled "march of unemployed" are due to descend upon Washington simultaneously.

The "unemployed" are on their way and so are members of congress.

There is at this hour no forecasting what tragedy may grow out of the pilgrimage of propagandists who are rolling toward the nation's capital.

There is, however, a burst of humor in the situation. The United States secret service has swung into action and after much inquiry has put forth the speculation that the parade seems to be controlled by communists.

Why the Guarded Language?

The timidity of the secret service announcements is laughable. The secret service either knows that the parade is an out and out communist propaganda affair, or else it has fallen down on its job. If it knows, as it undoubtedly does, many are wondering why its public announcements have been so guarded.

The official parade route, instructions to squads and other official material for the guidance of the red mobilization, were publicly broadcast by the reds themselves, with unblushing pride in the program, a full week or more before the secret service came forward with its timid announcement that the affair seemed to be controlled by reds.

Whole Affair Is Communist.

The facts, as stated by the communists, are that the demonstration is officially communist, that careful instructions, as reported by International Labor News Service a week ago, have been issued by red headquarters, that squad leaders are to be in command of each automobile or truck and that the entire program is to be under communist direction. Most of the personnel will be communist and non-communists included will be there only for "window dressing."

The "unemployed march", which is an automobile ride and not a march, is the most ambitious project yet carried out by the reds, though they have planned more ambitious ones. Automobiles have started from various points of the nation, including the Pacific coast, to converge at strategic points, and unite in Washington the night before congress assembles.

Reds Armed with Stones.

The one new point announced by the secret service is that the secret instructions issued to souad leaders by the reds call for a supply of stones to be carried in each car.

The possibilities of the propaganda parade are shown by the fact that demonstrations already held in cities en route have resulted in riots and serious injuries to a goodly number.

Plans to drag the White House into a discussion have thus far failed, the reds having been refused admission to the executive offices.

Police Mum on Tactics.

Original communist announcements asserted that 1,200 demonstrators would converge in Washington. There is reason to believe this number is an underestimate, perhaps purposely put forward to throw police off guard. Little is being said by Washington police as to their plans. Two years ago a red demonstration on Capitol Hill brought tear bombs into action. There is no indication yet as to what the police tactics here will be.

But the demonstration itself, in its scope and in point of territory covered, is an out and out revolutionary communist effort on the greatest scale yet attempted in the United States. Official documents show secret service timidity as to its proper classification to be ridiculous.

Attempts to Cut Pay of Teachers Sharply Assailed

Wage Slashes Will Never Bring Prosperity, National Education Secretary Says — School Salaries Low, Report Shows.

Washington, Dec. 3.—"If our classrooms are in the hands of incompetents, then we are committing intellectual suicide," declares J. W. Crabtree, secretary of the National Educational association, in a foreword to a report on teachers' salaries made public by the association.

Crabtree denounces efforts to cut teachers' pay, saying that teaching is an underpaid profession, and adding:

"Recently a few thoughtless persons and some organized groups have thought it possible to relieve the economic depression by reducing the salaries of teachers. Economic stability and the return of prosperity will never be secured by widespread reduction in buying power through arbitrary wage cuts."

The report says that a majority of teachers in city schools throughout the country receive salaries lower than the average annual income of all gainfully employed workers, despite the fact that educational salaries have risen in the last two years.

Salary figures for the academic year of 1930-31 were obtained by the association from 1,682 cities with populations of 2,500 persons or more.

Of the 301,000 teachers employed in the cities reporting their educational disbursements for salaries, more than 164,000, or 54 per cent. of the total, received less than $2,000 annually, the approximate average income of all gainfully occupied persons in the United States.

The best showing was made by cities of more than 100,000 in population, where only 34 per cent. of the elementary, kindergarten, part-time and junior and senior high school teachers were paid less than the average national income. But the percentages rose rapidly in the smaller cities. In cities of between 30,000 and 100,000 persons in population, the majority of teachers, 69 per cent., were listed as receiving less than $2,000 a year. For still smaller centers the percentages of teachers in that category were as follows: In cities of population between 10,000 to 30,000, 84 per cent.; centers of 5,000 to 10,000 in population, 89 per cent., and those of 2,500 to 5,000 in population, 94 per cent.

A study of the median salaries in 1,040 cities which reported educational outlays for teacher remuneration both in 1928-29 and in 1930-31 indicated that there had been a general increase.

TEACHERS PAID LESS THAN WAGE EARNERS

Washington.—A majority of teachers in city school systems in the United States are paid salaries lower than the average annual income of all gainfully employed persons, according to a survey conducted by the National Education association. This low pay basis obtains despite the fact that educational salaries have risen during the past two years.

Out of 301,000 teachers, the association points out, more than 164,000 received less than $2,000 annually, whic his the approximate average income of all gainfully occupied persons in the United States.

ZIEGLER OFFERS SANE PROGRAM TO END SLUMP

Local Attorney Advocates Intelligent Action.

MUST INCREASE PAY AND SHORTEN HOURS

Tells Optimists Cause of Depression Is Underconsumption, Not Overproduction.

Alvin Ziegler, local attorney, is the latest prominent Chattanoogan to publicly state views respecting the causes of and remedy for the present industrial situation which coincide in full with the position taken by the American labor movement. Mr. Ziegler, although considered as among the younger members of the local bar, is a deep student of economics, and his public utterances carry much weight.

As a guest of the Optimist Club Tuesday, Mr. Ziegler displayed a keen insight into the present situation, analyzing with unusual clarity and thoroughness a condition which has baffled the greatest minds of the country.

Overproduction, he said, had no part in the economics stress, but the trouble lies in underconsumption. "We don't have more food and clothing than the people need, but more than the people have the purchasing power to consume." Higher wages and shorter hours, he continued, must come before the nation returns to that oft-promised era of prosperity which is just around the corner.

"One school of thought—and fortunately not many people in this country adhere to it—is that the whole capitalistic system is wrong and that Russia towers high on the economic skyline," Mr. Ziegler said, terming the soviet experiment "impractical."

"Another school of thought terms itself the deflationist. It says, 'Use fewer automobiles and fewer radios, and reduce wages.'"

Mr. Ziegler scouted that theory also. "There is enough shoe machinery in the United States to manufacture 900,000,000 pairs of shoes a year," he said. "Ordinarily consumption would not be half that. There is enough automobile machinery to produce twice as many cars as there is any ability to purchase. The same condition exists in other lines. Does that look like the solution of our problem lies in decreasing production?"

The solution lies, in the consumers' view, in diffusion of purchasing power, Mr. Ziegler said, and he declared that "this theory seems worthy of the most serious consideration and some of the leading thinkers in the country are thinking about it."

Mr. Ziegler also leaned toward the proposition that industry must create, in good times, a surplus to take care of labor during times of depression.

Three factors in the present depression make this slump different from those that have preceded it, Mr. Ziegler said: "It is not national, but world-wide; it is not financial, but rather industrial, and it is agricultural also.

"The stock marekt crash in October of 1929 was not the cause, but rather a small eddy in the depression," the attorney said. "Artificial stimulants to prosperity, such as installment buying and the creation of a craze for new models of automobiles every year, had already begun to fail.

"The agricultural depression preceded the industrial depression. There was overproduction not only in manufactured articles, as in the previous depressions, but in raw materials." He cited figures to show the large increases in the production of raw materials for several years up to 1929, in several instances as high as 50 per cent.

Mr. Ziegler saw no basis for talk to the effect that the capitalistic system is endangered.

"There is no ill will in the United States today," he said. "There is a lot of apprehension. There is no factor in the United States today that has caused the decline of any nation in the past. We have enough to supply the average man with the conveniences of life and with the leisure to laugh and live and get some of the better things of life."

Organized Professors to Boycott Colleges Curbing Free Speech

Chicago, Dec. 3.—Colleges and universities that fail to respect the right of free speech will be boycotted by the American Association of University Professors.

Meeting here, the professors adopted a resolution declaring that colleges and universities found guilty by the association of violating its standards of academic freedom and security of tenure would be placed on a non-recommended list and association members advised against talking positions on their staffs.

Boycotted institutions would remain on the non-recommended list until they again reached the standards of the association, the resolution provides.

The report from the association's academic freedom and tenure committee showed in the last ten months 68 complaints by college faculty members were lodged against their respective institutions.

The association, it was said, accepts for investigation only cases in which it believes serious and real injustice was done.

Labor Executive Declares Banks Force Pay Cuts

Make Loans to Contractors Contingent on Wage Reductions, Building Trades Council Secretary Charges.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 3.—Baltimore bankers have contributed to prolonging the depression and lowering the standard of living by making loans to contractors in some instances contingent on cutting wages, Alfred J. Ahern, executive secretary of the Baltimore Building Trades council, charged in delivering the first of six monthly addresses on topics of the day at the Westminster Presbyterian church. His subject was "The Current Wage."

After citing the legislation enacted in 1908 making it mandatory that on all public work in Baltimore not less than the current daily wage be paid to laborers and mechanics, Ahern said:

"Since that time the Baltimore Federation of Labor has had an uphill battle attempting to have this law enforced," adding:

"You may talk about the difficulty of enforcing the eighteenth amendment and preventing the bootlegging of liquor. It isn't a marker beside the difficulty of enforcing the 'curernt rate'; and bootlegging of labor is engaged in by some of the pillars of the churches in Baltimore city."

Ahern asked if the contractors on public works have been paying that rate. The answer is, except in rare instances, "No," he declared. "They still continue to purchase their labor at the lowest possible price, and in the face of this depression I'll leave the amounts paid to laborers to your imagination."

A. F. of L. Report Shows Total of Idle at New Peak

Unemployment May Reach 7,500,000 in January and Relief Funds Are Totally Inadequate, President Green Warns.

Washington, Dec. 2.—Reports received from trade unions by the American Federation of Labor show that unemployment in industry has reached a new peak, though encouragement is seen in the fact that unemployment in November increased no more than is usual during this month.

Trade union weighted figures for the first part of November show 20 per cent. out of work, as compared with 19.8 per cent. in January, last year, the highest unemployment since last May. The weighted figures are as follows: August, 19.2 per cent. out of work; September, 19.4 per cent.; October, 19.5 per cent. (revised); November (preliminary), 20 per cent.

Commenting on the report, President Green of the A. F. of L. said that the present unemployment crisis will far exceed that experienced at any time in recent years and warned that relief funds are totally inadequate.

One Encouraging Fact.

"One encouraging fact appears from our weighted figures: Unemployment in November has increased no more than is usual at this season, even in the most prosperous year," President Green said. He continued: "In October, also, the increase in industrial unemployment was no more than seasonal. Thus for two months in succession it appears that the abnormal rise of unemployment has been checked. This is the first time since February that unemployment has not increased more than normally. On farms, the number laid off by the first of November was less than usual. Thus the total increase in unemployment by the first part of November was less than expected by about 200,000 persons.

"This check in industrial unemployment may be due largely to efforts to keep men at work. It is worthy of note, especially since trade and industry were declining during October, that it has been possible to prevent unemployment from declining correspondingly. Since our figures are based on reports from trade unions, this has doubtless been due also to the efforts of unions to provide for their members. There have been only five other months since October, 1929, when unemployment did not increase more than normally.

Idle May Reach 7,500,000

"Although this brightens the future outlook a little, it does not alter the fact that the present unemployment crisis will far exceed any we have experienced in this or any other depression in recent years. Already there are 6,000,000 out of work. Unemployment in industry increased by 120,000 last month, and 300,000 were laid off on farms (the usual November layoff is 480,000).

"If unemployment increases as much in the next two months as it did in the years 1928 and 1929, on the average, we ma yexpect from 800,000 to 1,000,000 to be laid off from farms and industries in December and from 500,000 to 700,000 in January. Unless these layoffs can be prevented by increased efforts to keep men at work, some 7,500,000 persons will be out of work in aJnuary.

"As yet relief funds at hand are totally inadequate to meet the need. Although the community chest drive has brought in 14 per cent. more than a year ago, only $36,000,000 are on hand, and we are told that 70 per cent. of this will be needed for the normal expense of the community organizations. Thus only 30 per cent., or $11,000,000, is available for the unemployed. Compare this with the $11,000,000 that wage earners have lost this year. Relief available is only one one-hundredth of their loss. It is impossible for families to exist on one one-hundredth of their normal income. The result is already manifest in cases of undernourishment and starvation in our hospitals, in children who are born without the energy to develop into normal human beings."

DEPARTURES OF ALIENS THREE TIMES NUMBER OF ARRIVALS

Washington.—The Department of Labor reports that three times as many aliens left the United States in October as arrived. Only 3,913 came in, while 10,857 left.

Alien women entering continue to be almost double the total of men, numbering 2,425 compared with 1,488 men and boys. The largest number of departures were Mexicans, of whom 5,190 returned to their native land.

SHOALS REPORT SEEN AS SCHEME OF POWER TRUST

Progressives Denounce Proposals of Commission.

SAY NORRIS BILL WILL BE REPASSED

Writer for "Labor" Finds Senators Bitterly Opposing Private Leasing Plan.

Another move in the ten years' war over Muscle Shoals was made last week, says Eliot Harris, writing for Labor, when the commission created at the suggestion of President Hoover made a report, recommending that the entire plant be leased to some private corporation for 50 years, and used:

First, for the production of fertilizer.

Second, for research and experiment for the benefit of agriculture.

Third, for the manufacture of chemicals.

The report says that "a corporation exclusively owned and controlled by organizations of farmers, operated without profit," should be given preference in making the lease. All power needed for making fertilizer should be allocated to that use, but the leasing corporation should be allowed to sell the surplus—"at the switchboard"—giving preference to "states, counties, municipalities and chemical operations."

One Point for Norris.

Cove Creek Dam, the report declares, should be built by the government. This would add tremendously to the value of the Shoals as a power proposition. Norris has been backing this extension for years, and therefore the president's commission supports him in this important particular.

The commission consisted of nine members, three named by the president and three each by Alabama and Tennessee. The chairman, Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau federation, has been repeatedly charged with being too friendly to the interests which sought to take over Muscle Shoals.

Progressives in house and senate lost no time in denouncing the report. They predict it will receive little or no support and that Norris' proposal, vetoed by the president during the last session, will be put over again.

"Under various disguises for more than 10 years," said Senator Norris, "the power trust has tried to get Muscle Shoals by the pretense that they were going to make cheap fertilizer for the farmer.

Would Favor Power Trust.

"In this report, under the cloak of pretended farm relief, is a scheme for giving to the power trust and some unnamed but favored chemical monopoly the use of the wonderful possibilities of surplus power at Muscle Shoals."

Senator Norris declared that under the terms of his bill just as much fertilizer would be made as under the present bill.

"If the power trust and the chemical people had been in earnest in their claim that they were going to make cheap fertilizer for the farmer, they would have jumped at that offer," he said, "and Mr. Hoover would have signed the bill. Their bluff of many years' standing was called, and the power trust wolf was shorn of its farm cloak."

Senator Norris emphasized the provision in the commission's report that surplus power must be "sold at the switchboard." That was a serious "joker," he declared, because it barred the municipalities, which have no transmission lines and no authority to build them. The Alabama Power company would probably get all the surplus power under that plan—and on its own terms.

Norris would have Uncle Sam construct the transmission lines, if necessary, to get the right market for the power.

Penny-Savers Aid Unemployed in South

Atlanta, Ga.—In scores of cities throughout the South penny clubs have been organized to help the jobless. In Atlanta, where the plan originated, the penny contributions of citizens are giving regular employment to 200 men.

Mrs. Thomas K. Glenn, wife of an Atlanta banker, conceived the idea of asking employed Atlantans to give a penny a day for each meal they eat to create jobs for the needy. This amounts to three cents a day, or twenty-one cents a week. The scheme caught on quickly.

"The Penny club is giving $750 each week for men in the improvement and and beautification of parks, school grounds, hospital grounds and other civic projects," Mrs. Glenn said.

The municipal authorities are quite elated over the scheme. It enables them to get municipal work done by charity contributions instead of through taxation.

The following communications were received too late for any of the early editions today of The Labor World and so have been inserted in this edition:

(Via Least Wire.)

A Few vs. the Many No, Aloysius, you are wrong. There's no dispute at all over whether our government is "of the people, for the people and by the people." The whole argument is over who "the people" are at present the government happens to be "of, for and by."

Tears or Jeers? Sixty-five married women city jobholders who have husbands earning a living wage will be dismissed next Saturday, Dec. 5, in Syracuse, N. Y. Relief of the unemployment situation is declared by Mayor R. B. Marvin to have inspired the order. The ladies affected by the de-jobbing edict have held a meeting, but could not come to a decision as to how to make their exit, weepingly or sweepingly.

(Via Underwire.)

$1-A-Day Slaves Thanks to a generous negative vote, a referendum before the voters of Monroe, La., to levy a 1-cent gasoline tax, the revenue to be used in employment to the jobless, was quickly decided. The $390,000, after deducting political wear and tear on the funds, would only permit paying the unemployed $1 a day. Therefore the voters thought the politicians in office were already sufficiently paid through their salaries, so it was decided not to add to their wealth and subject their income to the luxury tax of the state of Louisiana.

Whistle It, Too A 100 per cent American citizen is one who never fails to stand and join in singing the "Star-Spangled Banner" by humming it. The Left Is Right The inherent privilege of people to "boo" a policeman has been upheld in Chicago. During a meeting conducted by a communist group seventeen boosers were arrested because they booed uniformed policemen who walked through the hall to arrest a man in an adjoining room. Judge Donald S. McKinlay, before whom the defendants were taken, released them. "Our mayor has been booed," he said. "No one was convicted for that. Why then cannot one boo a policeman?"

RESTRICTED PROFITS TO RESTORE PROSPERITY

Restricted profits in the major industries is advocated as an efficient measure to restore prosperity by Sidney H. Scheur of Scheur & Co., cloth brokers, of New York city.

Mr. Scheur points out that during the boom period preceding the depression the corporations took unheard-of large profits out of industry. These huge profits, he says, appropriated by a relatively small part of the population, seriously impaired the consumers' purchasing power. Added to that impairment, employers since 1929, by layoffs and wage cuts, have reduced the workers' buying power more than eleven billion dollars.

To meet this tremendous deflation in the purchasing power of the masses, Mr. Scheur urges the owners of our major industries to price their products so low as to make consumer replacement compelling. The corporations could do this, he says, by utilizing part of their large surpluses.

"Consumption can only be brought back if the dangerous unlimited profit policy of the past is substantially revised," Mr. Scheur said.

"We must re-educate our industrialists to the wisdom of planfully and consciously limiting profits, especially in times of prosperity.

"For the next few years they should forget earnings and consider only employment as a barometer of our well-being.

"They must expect and desire shrinking surpluses until the manpower of the country is again employed."

Mr. Scheur suggests a revolutionary change in our industrial system as it has been developed by American business men, legalized by American law, and buttressed by American judicial decisions.

The basic, the fundamental principle in our economic order is that the establishments which constitute it are owned by a relatively few individuals called stockholders and operated primarily and exclusively for their private profit.

Under this system the interests of the employes—their wages and hours—have neither legal sanction nor moral standing when they contravene to any considerable extent the profit interests of the stockholders.

Labor holds that our industrial system should be organized with the interests of the workers paramount. Mr. Scheur suggests a similar system.

The great problem before the statesmen of labor and of business is to effect such an economic reorganization promptly and effectively.

Labor is ready.

LABOR IMPROVES SERVICE

Four years ago officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad company established a bureau of new ideas for the improvement of transportation on the Pennsylvania system. The new ideas were to be submitted by the employes of the company.

Since the inception of the bureau, Pennsylvania employes have submitted 8,800 suggestions to better the service. Of these, company officials adopted more than 2,000 and embodied them in railroad operation.

Company officials recently awarded cash prizes for the three best suggestions adopted for the current six months period. The first prize, $100, was paid to an electrician; the second, $50, to a clerk, and the third, $25, to a conductor.

The accepted suggestions belong of course to the railroad company and are used to create profits for those who own the road.

The reports of the company do not mention suggestions for improved service made by stockholders or bond owners.

Evidently labor not only does the necessary work in railroad transportation, but also provides the ideas for its improvement.

UNION HOME FOR HIGH COURT

The American Federation of Labor takes pleasure in announcing the new home for the United States supreme court in the capital of the nation will be constructed by union labor.

The supreme court building commission, presided over by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, awarded the contract for the construction of the superstructure to the George A. Fuller company, which employs union labor. The contract cost is $8,383,000.

The home of the supreme court will be one of the stateliest structures in the government's building program. It will occupy a prominent location in the framework of improvements being made around the capitol grounds. It will be just north of the library of congress and facing the east front of the capitol.

The building will be 385 feet from east to west and 305 feet from north to south. The courtroom and the offices of the justices and court officials will be on the first floor. The second and third floors will contain law libraries, rooms for members of the bar, conference rooms and a reading room.

The new home for the supreme court will not only be a work of architectural splendor and beauty. It will also be a deserved recognition of union craftsmanship, union hours and union wages.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter II
JESUS AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES

PART I: The Pharisees, Religious and Social Arbiters of Palestine

WM. L. MOSS

We are going to compare, or rather contrast, the religious teaching of Jesus and the most powerful religious body in Jewry of His day, a religious school of thought which from immediately following the primary stage of His ministry and on until they conspire among themselves to force the Roman representative at Jerusalem to order Jesus taken to the Place of the Skull, Golgotha, to be crucified, never for one day desisted in open and secret machinations to trap Him into convicting Himself before the eyes of Israel. This religious body which opposed Jesus' teaching with such determined and unrelenting bitterness was made up of men whom the world calls the Pharisees. But before engaging in the actual study of the Pharisees let me preface what I have to say about them by stating that the kernel of our Lord's preaching, that is, the two things He seems to have struck at more often than any others, is His warning against (1) indifference and (2) hypocrisy. I believe these are the two things Jesus hit harder than anything else.

He preached against indifference because He saw that it led men to ignore God, and when it did not lead this far, on the other hand it failed to inspire them to inquire as to what or who God really is, leading in the end to wrong conceptions on their part as to God's real nature.

He preached against hypocrisy because, from the revelation He had of the Fatherhood of God, this was the most despicable failing among men—it meant assuming a false, deceptive front, and He knew a man who attempted to deceive his fellowmen would, in the boldness of his conceit, eventually try to deceive God. A hypocrite is, as our Lord said in describing one, a man who meticulously cleans the outside of the cup and platter but whose inward state is foulness and wickedness.

Now when Jesus hit at indifference toward God and His true nature all Jewry, if sensitive at all to the shock of His criticism in this respect, felt the sting of His many rebukes. But when He struck boldly at hypocrisy the objects in the main of His remarks necessarily must, because of their lives, be the Pharisees and nobody else! They were the self-appointed leaders of Palestine, religious and socially, and moreover the essence and fruition of their teaching was—hypocrisy! Being the self-chosen leaders of Palestine we can see where, in the light of their self-assumption, that Israel must not be permitted to have any leaders other than themselves, the Pharisees were incensed, not at Jesus personally, but at His teaching, and, because of that teaching, planned to do away with Him as the disseminator of such a doctrine, a doctrine so contrary to that of their own false teaching.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

Before the close of the Civil war, in September, 1864, the first successful attempt to form a national—in this case also an international—organization of organized crafts took place. During 1863 numerous national organizations were organized of local or "city central unions." Among these national bodies made up of the locals of single crafts organized at this time were the Brotherhood of the Footboard (predecessor of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers), the Cigar Makers' International union and the Bricklayers' and Masons' International union. So successful were these national organizations that it was felt the time had come to organize several different crafts into one national body. Accordingly, as stated above, the first successful national labor union, the Industrial Assembly of North America, came into existence. As can be seen by its name it was also international in scope, although its field being limited to this continent.

Although at the time the Industrial Assembly of North America was organized the membership of the unions in this country numbered over 200,000 it soon expired. The need for another national union to take the place of the now defunct Industrial Assembly arrived by 1866 when the soldiers returned and the zeal for unionism was on the increase. A National Labor Congress was held in that year resulting in the formation of the National Labor Union, the second successful attempt at consolidation of all labor unions. Its conventions were held yearly from 1867 to 1872. But the National Labor Union was a weak federation, and when the convention was called to order in 1872 only seven members responded to the call of the roll. It might be added in closing that the National Labor Union was organized solely to influence legislation and when the congress of the United States, in June, 1868, at the instigation of the National Labor union passed an eight-hour law to apply to all laborers and mechanics "employed by or on behalf of the United States government" it can readily be seen that after all, considering the purpose for which this particular national labor body was organized, there was little need for its continued existence.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Maj. Frederick Palmer has written the story of Newton D. Baker and his five years of war experience. It is a moving story, bound into two volumes that nick the buyer for $7.50, which in all too many cases will have to go for food and shoes, and not for books.

Baker made a great start, along with Tom Johnson in Cleveland, when the welkin rang with regularity and a whole lot of precision in Johnson's 3-cent fare days.

He came to the war department rated as a pacifist and he got himself nicknamed Pansy Baker. Anyhow he ran the war department and got along pretty much O. K. with organized labor. After Baker got back into private practice it's another story—not so good, from some angles, particularly labor's angle.

However, Maj. Palmer went digging through the Baker records and he found a good deal besides Baker. For example, he found, inevitably, Samuel Gompers.

Was there anybody in those war days any more active than Samuel Gompers? Not even John J. Pershing himself. To Maj. Palmer, Gompers' active part in the war was "one of the revelations of the records."

This activity was to such point that he came gradually to the conviction that "by the summer of 1918 the home effort was better organized than that in France."

It may be that a half century will have to elapse before the full worth of Samuel Gompers will be written into the records and laid open to all men.

The war days were not exceptional for Samuel Gompers, except that they changed the course and enlarged the scope of his efforts.

The war days didn't make Gompers work harder, because he always worked up to capacity. If it wasn't war it was organizing, or fighting injunctions.

But the war activities were ponderous, dealing with matters of enormous size.

Missions were dispatched to Europe just as formerly organizers had been dispatched to Illinois. He headed one himself.

Large conferences and small conferences were organized.

Men were called from across the country and men were sent across the country.

A great enterprise for Mexican-American co-operation was organized. And there was the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy.

What a man! Maj. Palmer has found it out. A great many trade unionists knew it from observation and participation with that amazing leader.

We have just passed another Armistice day. Orators said it marked another mile post since the guns were silenced.

But the guns have never been silenced. True, they haven't blazed on that terrific western front, but somewhere in the world they have been blazing through all of those thirteen years—and today they blaze in Manchuria.

Gompers labored to end war, but war hasn't ended. That was not his failure, nor labor's failure.

A professed pacifist himself, he came, in the war, to call himself "a first class fighting man," and so he was.

So every trade unionist will have to be, until the ways of democracy supplant throughout our great industrial structure the lash and spur of autocracy and until political life yields to the same impulse.

FUR CONCERN SEEKS WRIT AGAINST PICKETS

Washington.—An injunction to prevent the Fur Workers' union, local No. 72, from picketing its property was asked of the District Supreme court by Francke Furrier, Inc.

The concern claimed that representatives of the union walked back and forth in front of its place of business carrying cards accusing the company of being unfair to organized labor. The picketing, the company said, was injuring its business.

The petition for the injunction evidently overlooked another angle of "business." It is the business of the furrier to sell his goods. It is, on the other hand, the business of the fur workers' union to inform the public that the goods are made under what the union considers as unfair conditions and to urge them not to buy the goods.

NEEDY ASKED NO QUESTIONS AT ERIE'S MULLIGAN HALL

Unique Institution, Founded by Newspaper Man and Supported by Voluntary Contributions, Ends Year of Feeding Hungry, Free of Charge and Regardless of Color, Race or Religion.

(By Staff Correspondent.)

Erie, Pa., Dec. 2.—Mulligan hall, a unique institution in Erie, celebrated its first birthday last Tuesday. Not that the day was different from any other of the 365 gone before, but that the institution was still feeding the hungry and needy—and no questions asked.

Mulligan hall, labeled with a name plucked from the "jungle camps" of the hobo world, is different from any other relief institution in America. To begin with, it was founded by a newspaper man (who has no more money than the average newspaper man, and that isn't much), Tom Sterrett, who was one of the editors of "Stars and Stripes," the A. E. F. newspaper durin gthe World war, and who at the time of the founding was a columnist on the Erie Times. Mulligan Hall asks no questions of anyone seeking a meal, only that he be hungry and a "down and outer," and needs food. Race, color, religion and previous affluence have nothing to do with getting a meal at Mulligan hall.

And with one year slipped away, Mulligan hall is still carrying on with the same purpose for which it was set up.

Supported by Public.

This huge dispensary, feeding thousands weekly, is operated entirely on contributions received voluntarily from the public. People in all walks of life contribute; but without the assistance of the working men and women of Erie there would be no Mulligan hall. Tom Sterrett says so himself.

When the hall was opened in the abandoned Presbyterian church, which faces on Perry square, it was greeted with acclaim. Its sponsors were lauded for taeir charity and foresight. Today, the hall goes along its charitable way, supported by the newspapers of Erie day by day. The long line of destitute and hungry that wends its way three times a day into the spacious building gives dramatic testimony to the good that Mulligan hall is doing and has done in this Pennsylvania lity.

"Uplift Society" Sponsors Hall.

Mulligan hall is the result of an idea given to Tom Sterrett by Maude McKee of the Perry theater goods shop. Sterrett elaborated on the plan and explained it in detail through his column in the Times. He attempted to have some fraternal order take over the plan, but none of them felt financially able to do it. Sterrett with John Meade, Sr., publisher of the Times; William McClelland, school director; Peter Pulakos, business man, and Mayor Joseph Williams, had organized a joke luncheon club which they ironically named the "Uplift Society." One day Sterrett proposed that the "Uplift society" sponsor Mulligan hall. The mayor and common council agreed to donate the church building (owned then by the city) for the hall. Members of the "club" (which consisted of a name only) agreed to sponsor the institution. The "Uplift society," consisting of five men, had no by-laws, no dues and no definite purpose. Sterrett, however, got busy and with a single gesture the Uplift crowd became a big factor in Erie charity. And Mulligan hall was a reality.

Success From the Start.

The hall was a success from the start. Sterrett worked himself into a long sick spell over it, but the hall went over. Thousands of hungry and needy will testify to its benefits. Relief experts from many other places have visited Erie to watch the operations of Mulligan hall with the idea of incorporating it in their own charity work.

Mulligan hall stands today as the only free food dispensary operated without organized support in the country.

It depends entirely on the working men and women, the merchants and the business men and institutions of Erie for its support. Its upkeep is slight and virtually all contributions received are turned back to the hungry and the needy.

In a brief resume of Mulligan hall by Tom Sterrett, in his newspaper, the Weekly Sun, he said: "I know that just one year ago tonight Mulligan hall was opened. It was raining, but an immense crowd gathered just the same. I made more than 50 talks that night to various groups, telling them how we expected to run the place. For which 20-hour-a-day stuff I've paid the penalty during the entire year of 1931. But it was worth it, and if I had it to do over again I'd start Mulligan hall even though I knew I was going to be sick for a whole year."

The needy and unemployed of Erie have on numerous occasions expressed their gratitude to Sterrett. Contrary to usual opinion, Mulligan hall's free food privilege is not abused. And if it was, the actual hungry and needy would not be penalized because of its abuse by the unprincipled. Mulligan hall's food, like salvation, is free, without money and without price. And no questions asked.

Hub Building Unions Consider Lowering Wages

Employers' Association Urges Voluntary, Temporary Reduction on Ground It Will Stimulate Construction Work.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 3.—The Boston Building Trades council has under consideration a suggestion from the Building Trades Employers' association that a voluntary reduction in wages be made by the building unions. The council has been collecting data and expects to submit its attitude on the suggestion of the employers in the near future.

In response to the suggestion of the employers that the unions cut wages as a way of improving conditions during the prevailing depression, the carpenters' union has offered to accept $1.17½ per hour for a week of 40 hours. This rate is to remain in effect until April 1, 1933. The reduction is 20 cents. There is also a reduction for shop and mill carpenters under the voluntary reduction. The new rate is 92½ cents. The carpenters' union is not a member of the Boston Building Trades council, hence its individual action in treating the suggestion of the employers. The latter asked that the temporary reduction be for at least 18 months. The employers' organization claims the temporary reduction will help in improving conditions in construction activities by assuring a decreased cost for building work. The employers claim they have no intention of seeking a permanent cut in wages.

It is estimated that approximately 8,000 men are affected by the action of the carpenters. The voluntary action of the carpenters was taken after giving the proposal of the employers five weeks' consideration. The decision was reached that the high cost ing of big building projects, and that of building was causing the postponit was advisable to comply with the suggestion of the employers to see if tangible improvement resulted. The reduction in wages becomes effective on Jan. 1.

It's so awfully simple to demand UNION GOODS and SERVICE that it is simply awful more trade unionists do not do this important thing.

Says Rich Favor Charity as Less Costly Than Giving Work to Idle

Greensboro, N. C., Dec. 3.—"The American charity dole costs less than putting people to work. Since our government is controlled by rich men who would rather give a comparatively small amount to charity than to spend the money necessary to provide work for men and women, we continue to have milions olf unemployed and increasing calls for funds to give charity to them. I think we would solve our unemployment problem in the United States if we would wor kout some means of putting 2,000,000 of our jobless men and women to work."

This is the opinion of Michael Hudson, secretary-treasurer and general manager of Belk's department store of this city. He is also prominently connected with the Belk chain of stores that operates in this and adjoining states.

Hudson, who has devoted much thought and extensive study to economic problems of the moment, has been the leading spirit in the formation of the Economic League to Alleviate Unemployment, which came into existence here during the late was held and drew a large assortment of substantial citizens.

The economic league will be interested in two programs. It will cooperate with existing organizations that are handling the work of giving immediate relief to distress due to the depression. It wil lalso bend its efforts toward working out an intelligent plan that will remove the cause of the depression. Practically every important group in the city has already enrolled representatives in the economic league.

The organization is really the outgrowth of a movement started by the rGeensboro Central Labor union last fall. At that time the Greensboro Central Labor union invited representatives of various groups and organizations in the city to consider plans for finding jobs for the large number of unemployed people in the city. The results were so very striking that they elicited hearty commendation from Gov. Gardner's state chairman of relief and employment, Prof. R. W. Henninger, of Raleigh.

"I See by the Paper"

By HECK

Much space in the papers this week has been devoted to the trial of W. B. Jones, miners' union officer of Harlan county, Kentucky, during which many accusations have been made against Jones, chief among them being the plotting of the murder of Deputy Sheriff Jim Daniels. Miners are accused of signing pledges to do certain acts of violence with blood from their own bodies, at the instigation of Jones. Jones is accused of saying the only way for the union to gain any justice from the mine owners and Harlan county officers would be to eliminate Daniels, who was the chief of the mine police, and the superintendent of the mine.

It seems doubtful that union men would resort to such tactics as these union men have been accused of doing. When county officials and officers join with mine owners in oppressing union men they are justified in taking steps to protect themselves from such oppression. But a union officer is intelligent enough to realize that murder will only end one way, and will not gain anything for him and his fellow union men. Could it be possible that the killing of Daniels was not premeditated, resulting only in a spontaneous clash between the miners, who were protecting themselves, and the mine police, who were trying to force the miners into submission to the mandates of the mine owners; and the county officials and mine owners have seized upon it as a chance to frame a union officer and put a black mark against the union?

Undoubtedly the mine owners have spent more money in trying to force the miners to their way of thinking than they would have spent if they had paid the miners a decent wage—and they haven't forced the miners to their way of thinking yet. It has been an expensive strike, to both the miners and the mine owners, and could have been avoided entirely if the mine owners had been willing to take a little smaller profit and pay the miners a decent wage.

The capitalist invests his money and expects a return from it—the bigger the better. He expects a return which will enable him to enjoy a high standard of living and amass a big fortune. Is not the laboring man entitled to a return from the investment of his labor which will enable him to enjoy a standard of living commensurate to his social position and save a little for his old age? All the laboring man has to invest is his ability to work, and when he is no longer able to work what is he to do if the returns on his investment have not enabled him to lay by a little for a rainy day?

Bakers and barbers in the Latin section of Tampa, Fla., have joined 7,000 cigarmakers on strike. It seems that the real reason the tobacco workers walked out was because of an attempt of the manufacturers to interfere with the custom of having books read aloud to the workers at their benches in factories.

Newspaper accounts of the strike give the main reason for the strike as being a protest against the arrest of a group of communist sympathizers, with a secondary reason being that given above. From this distance it is difficult to say if the papers give the correct version, but may I ask a question:

Why should a group of workers, with a legitimate reason like the attempt of employers to interfere with working conditions, use a flimsy reason, like the protest against the arrest of communist sympathizers, for a strike? That's why I say the real reason seems to be a protest against a change in working conditions. We need a labor news service which gives the real facts about all labor disputes, current. We are entitled to know the facts in labor matters and we can't depend on the newspapers, and the labor news services we have are not adequate.

PALESTINE LABOR WEEKLY SUSPENDS PUBLICATION

Tel Aviv, Palestine.—The executive committee of the General Federation of Jewish Labor in Palestine has announced suspension of the publication of the English Weekly Supplement of Davar, the Palestine Labor daily. The suspension was made necessary by the withdrawal of M. Shertok from the editorial staff of Davar to accept the political secretaryship to the executive of the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem.

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

Proposed Income Tax Bill Is Defeated After Major Amendment

Sr. Chamlee Would Raise Exemption to $2,500.

AMENDED BILL LOSES BY HUGE "NO" VOTE

Senator Todd Introduces Proposal to Repeal Barbers' Law — Labor's Representatives Active.

According to information from Nashville Thursday morning, Representatives George W. Chamlee, Jr., and D. M. Coleman cast their votes in favor of the proposed 5 per cent tax on working people of Tennessee, after, however, Mr. Chamlee had succeeded in amending the proposal to raise exemptions from $1,000 to $2,500. Both voted against passing the amended measure.

A number of strong protests had been wired the local representatives, including one from Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council, against the abominable proposal backed by the Horton-ites.

David Hanly, legislative chairman of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, told The Labor World that J. Mitt Payne was opposed to the bill, but was not present when the vote was taken.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Dec. 9.—The so-called income tax bill, highly recommended by Gov. Horton, was put to the table in the house by an overwhelming vote Wednesday.

The bill declared the right to work a privilege, and taxed it as such. It provided for a flat rate of 5 per cent on all salaries and wages over $1,000 a year. It made no distinction between a married man and a single man. It provided no exemption for dependents nor for any other taxes paid by the individual. It further provided that the wilful failure or refusal of any taxpayer to pay the tax or make any return would be declared a misdemeanor and anyone violating this provision would be subject to a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $1,000.

The bill was amended to raise the exemption to $2,500 and was then tabled.

Representative Charles Mooney, of Shelby county, made the principal speech against the bill. He said that a taxing measure that taxed the wage-earners and let the others get by was un-American. He said further: "I always thought that any man had a right to earn a living; there are certain inherent rights that cannot be curtailed by any man or set of men. This is not an income tax, but rather a tax on what a man sweats to produce." Mr. Mooney further characterized this bill as the product of an immature mind. He called attention to the fact that a man who might have earned an income in 1931, who had been thrown out of work, would be subject to a fine of from $10 to $100 if he did not pay it, whether he had it or not.

The joint legislative committee, composed of H. V. Reid, W. Chrisman, Perry E. Daly, W. Jacobs and myself, were active in opposing this bill.

Senator Todd, of Sullivan county, introduced a bill today to repeal the barbers' examination law.

It is the consensus of opinion that a graduated income tax law will be passed.

The house today passed a bill reducing the expenses of the state government 11 per cent for the remainder of the biennium, which means that the salaries of all state officials and employes will be reduced by 15 per cent for the two years. This decrease will not apply to the salaries of judges, but does apply to the salaries of district attorneys-general.

Virgin Remains Confined to Home

L. Wergin, well-known member and official of Central Body and Lodge 56, Machinists, is still confined to his home with an infected hand. "Bill's" friends hope the ailing member will soon get back to normal, when the old-timer may go about his business as usual.

Plumbers Offer Splendid Tribute To National Heads

Union Decides by Overwhelming Majority to Postpone Convention—Local No. 43 Has Close Vote.

Remarkable tribute has just been paid the officers of the United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steam Fitters by referendum vote of the membership of the entire organization.

In a poll that was carried approximately 12 to 1, the membership of this big international has decided to defer until November, 1935, the taking of the customary referendum on the question whether a convention shall be ordered. Members of Local 43 voted against the convention by a small majority, officers told The Labor World.

Had the recent vote not been taken, or had it been defeated, the membership would have voted this year on whether to hold the usual quadrennial convention.

Big Majority for Proposal.

The result of the referendum just taken has just been tallied and is announced as follows: In favor of postponement, 33,864; against postponement, 3,083; total vote cast, 36,956.

The tremendous majority by which the referendum proposal was carried is regarded as a remarkable tribute to the officers, in whose hands the affairs of the organization rest until another convention is ordered and held; and at the same time it demonstrates a magnificent spirit of confidence and co-operation with the general executive board and officers.

Question Voted On.

The question voted on was: "Shall the referendum proposition for or against a convention to be sent out in November be postponed until November, 1925, and shall the moneys now held in the convention fund and other accumulations in said fund up to and including December, next year, 1932, be transferred to the general fund?"

When the vote was taken the union had $174,502.82 in its convention fund. It is estimated that by December, next year, the total will be approximately $300,000, all of which will be turned into the general fund, to aid in the protection of the wage and working conditions and principles of the United Association.

The vote is the more remarkable in view of the fact that all expenses and wages of delegates are paid to them out of the convention fund, which is derived from the detachment of a percentage of dues. By voting to defer the convention a great many members were voting to deprive themselves of a convention trip at organization expense.

Organization Strengthened.

Turning the immense convention fund into the general fund will obviously strengthen the position of the organization, adding to its prestige in the eyes of employers, a fact that is regarded as of great importance at a time when wage reduction moves are occupying the minds of many in the employing world.

President John Coefield and Secretary-Treasurer Thomas E. Burke, the administrative officers in whose hands the welfare of the organization must rest until another convention is held, are extremely gratified by the result, and are being congratulated by their membership and their fellow trade unionists.

Local Unions Preparing for Year of Activity; Three Report Elections---Old-Timers Favored

PERRY AGAIN HEADS BARBERS

Re-Elected for Third Term Without Opposition—Old Officers Favored.

George W. Perry, president of Local 415, Journeymen Barbers, for the past two years, was last Monday night renamed to that position without opposition at a largely attended meeting of the local union. Mr. Perry is one of the best-known members of the local trades union family, and has served as an officer and member of his organization, as well as of Central Body, for many years.

J. S. Boyd, at one time president of the local, was elected to the vice-presidency, and the preference for old-timers was carried throughout the list, next in line being E. D. Stevenson, who was re-elected financial secretary merely as a matter of form.

Then Gaston Helms, whose record of service also includes a time or two as chief executive, was chosen as recorder, and having gotten this far the members evidently did not want to spoil a good start, and completed the list by naming T. N. Briggs as guide and J. S. Ball and G. D. Hill on the finance committee.

President Perry expressed confidence in the future of the trade, and predicted that the coming year will be one in which the membership will forget all about the trials and tribulations of a depression.

"We have learned much during the past year or two," the executive said, "not the least of which has been to meet our problems in a spirit of solidarity and mutual good-will. We intend to follow that policy from now on. Watch us grow!"

OFFER CONDOLENCES TO BEREAVED BROTHER

Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, at the regular weekly meeting last Friday night, adopted unanimously a resolution expressing condolences to Barney Walker, a fellow-worker, in the tragic death of his brother, which was noted in these columns last week. The resolution follows:

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to deprive our brother, Barney Walker, of his brother, James L. Walker, by a violent accident; and,

Whereas, this local holds the warmest regard and brotherly love for Brother Walker and sympathizes with him deeply in his bereavement; be it

Resolved, That this local does hereby extend to Brother Barney Walker our deepest regrets and sympathy for him and his family in this untimely loss and death of his brother; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, a copy sent to Brother Walker, and a copy sent to The Labor World for publication.

Jobless Relief Asked By Dewey's Committee

Washington.—The joint committee on unemployment relief, headed by Dr. John Dewey, at a meeting here, stressed federal legislative relief for unemployment. Its legislative program demands the appropriation of $250,000,000 to feed and clothe the unemployed, $250,000,000 to aid state unemployment insurance systems, $5,000,000,000 for public works, and increased surtaxes and estate taxes and a gift tax to finance the projects.

MACHINISTS 56 NAME PALMER

Newcomer to Official Family Brings Years of Active Experience.

Members of Lodge 56, International Association of Machinists, Tuesday night elected officers for 1932, and chose for their chief executive a newcomer to the official family in the person of Frank H. Palmer, succeeding O. R. Hubble, who declined to stand for re-election following one term in that office.

Mr. Palmer has been identified with either Lodge 56 or Lodge 1450 almost continuously since 1910, having been away from Chattanooga a comparatively short time during that period. He has been employed by the Southern railroad and by various contract shops. He is a native of this city, and learned his trade here. Although he has never served before in the position of president, he has always maintained an active interest in union affairs, and his friends are predicting a successful administration of the local's affairs under his guidance.

Other officers chosen by the lodge were:

Vice-President—Herman Metz.
Recorder—Roscoe Jobe.
Financial Secretary—Harry Kelley.
Conductor—Anton Buol.
Sentinel—W. F. Lange.
Trustees—R. D. Brown, Sam H. Duggan, W. L. Wergin
Business Agent—Dave Sivley.

The new officers will be installed at the first meeting in January. According to members of the lodge, the election night was marked by one of the largest attended meetings in months, and considerable important business was transacted with unusual enthusiasm. Among other matters the lodge instructed its secretary to wire strong protests to Hamilton county representatives in the legislature against the so-called income tax law which was killed in the house Wednesday.

President of Loew's Gets $304,000 a Year

Treasurer Paid $270,000 Salary and Bonus — Extra Dividend Declared—Wages Cut.

New York, Dec. 10.—The directors of Loew's, Inc., moving picture producers and theater owners, paid Nicholas Schenck, president of the company, $130,000 salary and $274,000 bonus for 1930, a total of $304,000.

The directors also paid David Bernstein, treasurer, $104,000 salary and $164,000 bonus, a total of $270,642 a year.

The directors declared an extra dividend of $1 a share, amounting to around $1,413,573, in addition to the regular dividend of 75 cents, amounting to about $1,060,179.

J. Robert Rubin, a director, who presided at the meeting, said that every effort was being made to reduce expenses at the company's California studios. Salaries of all employes in the studios except officials and those under contract had been cut, he said.

Old Stuff.

Brown—Why do you keep going to the doctor? He said it was no longer necessary.

Jessup—I'm reading a continued story in one of his waiting room magazines.

SANDY SUMMERS AGAIN HONORED

Heads Musicians for 'Steenth Time—Johnny Mahoney Secretary.

"I want to report our annual election of officers," said John T. Mahoney, correspondent of The Labor World from Local No. 80, American Federation of Musicians.

"Fine," said the representative of The Labor World. "Who's the new president?"

"Sandy Summers," replied Johnny.

"Give us some news," urged the L. W. scribe. "There's nothing startling about Sandy being elected to office by the Musicians."

Well, to make a long story short, he was, anyhow, and efforts to learn how many years Mr. Summers had spent in that office failed.

Lester Cohn, who himself has some record as president and other more or less lesser positions of honor with the local, was named vice-president.

A newcomer to the official family is Mr. Mahoney, who, while having taken active interest in the affairs of Local No. 80, has not heretofore served in an executive capacity. Johnny was selected as the new secretary.

Back to the old-timers after this deviation, the members selected George VanArsdale for treasurer and finished up by calling on Herman Dodds for the strong-man position of sergeant-at-arms.

Iron Molders Plan Get-Together Meet

Lodge 53, Iron Molders, will observe their annual election night next Friday, Dec. 18, with a smoker and general get-together in preparation for the year's work, James O'Connor, corresponding representative of the local, announces.

"Uncle Jimmie" declares the local union is still functioning as usual, despite the depression, and with the coming of a new year the members are expecting some big developments.

Plenty of good cigars will be provided the members present next Friday night, he said, and a practically 100 per cent attendance is expected to help choose the officials and discuss plans for the future.

Compensation Awarded Man Hurt Going to Work

Olympia, Wash.—In a five to four decision the supreme court of Washington reversed a decision of a lower court denying compensation to a worker who was injured in an automobile accident while going from one place to another pursuant to his employer's orders.

The majority opinion claimed the fact that the employe was not paid wages but merely transportation expenses while enroute was immaterial, and held that compensation was payable because the employe was performing his duty to the employer when injured and was within the scope of his employment.

NOTICE!

Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council will meet Monday night at 7:30 o'clock, in regular session. All delegates are requested and expected to be present, as matters affecting every local union will come before the meeting for discussion.

Labor Confronts New Congress With Pleas For Vital Measures

CONSPIRATOR?

ALFRED HOFFMAN
Must Serve Two Years for Organizing Activities.

Superior Court Rules Alf Hoffman Must Serve Time

Decision Seen as Big Danger to Organized Labor—Local Unionists Have Utmost Confidence in Convicted Official.

Under a superior court decision regarded by labor officials and counsel as extremely dangerous to labor as offering an opening for a host of "conspiracy" cases, Alfred Hoffman must appear before the court on Monday and is expected on that day to begin serving the prison sentence imposed upon him.

Hoffman, organizer for the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, was convicted on a charge of conspiracy growing out of a strike at the Mammoth Hosiery mills in Stroudsburg. It was the charge that he conspired with others to assault certain Mammoth employes. Indicted on five counts he was convicted on three and sentenced to jail for two years. Hoffman is well known and liked by Chattanooga and state trades unionists, who, while admiring his intense zeal for the cause, are confident that he is not guilty of law-breaking, despite the conviction.

Organized labor in Pennsylvania is solidly behind Hoffman. The state federation of labor has planned a campaign for a pardon, in co-operation with the hosiery workers. The miners' organization in the state also have planned to join in the effort in Hoffman's behalf.

The superior court had before it sixty assignments of error in the appeal from the Monroe county court of quarter sessions. These the appellate court dealt with under six headings, denying all. It is the view of labor that the superior court decision has turned the state's conspiracy statute "upside down," endangering rights that were thought to have been properly safeguarded.

Lookouts to Have A New Shortstop

Joe Engle's Chattanooga Lookouts will have a new shortstop. The newcomer has not as yet signed a contract, and may not be ready to play for some time, but nevertheless he is certain to star when placed in the line-up. He is without professional experience, but is described by those who have seen him as a bawl expert.

All of which foolishness is preliminary to announcement that Robert Martin Angel arrived last Friday morning at Children's hospital to brighten the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Angel. "Papa Joe," connected with the Angel Printing company, is known to thousands of Chattanoogans as one of the most ardent baseball fans and authorities on the great national game in the south. According to him, Robert Martin's first words were:

"Well, pop, I believe this Duster Mails will be a big help, and if Cousin Joe can just pick up the material to strengthen one or two positions we'll be in line this year for that long-promised championship of the Southern league."

Mother and babe are doing well. "Papa" was still unable to grant an interview at presstime.

He—what are all those men doing in a circle with their heads together? Is it a football team?

She—No, my dear, just a bunch of Scotchmen lighting a cigarette.

Important Bills to Be Pressed at Present Session.

SEVERAL PROPOSALS TO MEET OPPOSITION

Unemployment, Immigration, Injunction to Receive Major Attention of American Federation of Labor.

As congress opens, organized labor is ready with a program of constructive labor legislation that will be vigorously pressed.

Foremost on labor's program is anti-injunction legislation. A bill drawn up by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor and approved by the recent Vancouver convention will be offered and every possible effort made to secure its early enactment into law. Prospects of passage of anti-injunction legislation are said to be brighter than at previous sessions and it is felt that this session will see victory in the long fight of labor to curb the injunction abuse.

Unemployment Looms Big.

Unemployment will be a main issue with labor at every step of the way, according to the convention instructions and the known position of the officials. Every plank in the program now developed will bear heavily upon the unemployment issue. Labor will not, however, join in the general clamor for fantastic measures or for enactment of legislation that "sounds good but doesn't work." It probably will be under the necessity of opposing several measures sponsored by non-trade unionists and organizations. It can be expected to adhere firmly to its principles and program and to seize every opportunity to use legislative methods where they conform to those principles and that program.

Another important bill on labor's program provides for federal control of the bituminous coal industry. A bill sponsored by Senator Watson, of Indiana, is favored by the United Mine Workers of America and determined efforts will be made by the representatives of organized labor to secure its passage.

Further Immigration Curb.

Immigration also occupies a prominent place in labor's program, the American Federation of Labor feeling that there is no more important question than the protection of wage-earners of the United States from excess immigration. It is the purpose of the A. F. of L. to continue a most vigorous campaign to bring about as great restriction of immigration as possible.

Labor is watching the working of the prevailing wage law closely and is prepared to offer amendments to the law correcting any faults that may develop. It is planned to work for extension of the law to road construction aided by federal money. Labor believes that it is most important that the law cover road work. It is also possible that labor will ask addition of a penalty clause to the bill.

Other proposed legislation to be supported by labor includes a bill to make the federal employment service of further help to the unemployed, a bill to place an embargo on importation of oil and restoration of the maternity and infancy act.

Bills to Be Opposed.

Several legislative proposals expected to come before congress will be vigorously fought. At this writing, chief of these seems to be sales tax proposals and attacks on the pay scales of federal employes. Labor is committed to opposition to a sales tax and of course will strongly resist any attempts to reduce federal employes' wages. Bills to unite the various border patrols, which were introduced in the last congress, will be opposed.

In the field of state legislation, the American Federation of Labor will give all possible assistance to state labor bodies fighting for improvements to workmen's compensation laws, outlawing of the "yellow dog" contract, old age security, ratification of the child labor amendment and minimization of the competition of prison labor with free labor.

"I See by the Paper"

By HECK

One thousand men in Waterloo, Ia., are probably feeling a little less downcast this week, due to an order of the John Deere Tractor company. The company has decided to return that many of its employes to work on a two-day week basis.

While two days' pay is a mighty small amount to feed a family on for a week, it's a 10 to 1 bet that many of these men will save a few cents out of their pay to "buy Santa Claus" for their children. It takes a hard-hearted father to resist the appeal of Christmas time and fail to bring joy and happiness to his kiddies, unless he is unemployed and has no money to spend.

Since entering the teletypewriter, or printer service branch of communication, the A. T. & T. has announced that it has re-employed some 1,500 former workers. This seems to give the lie to my comments of a couple of weeks ago wherein I said the new service would probably cause many employes to be let out.

The news item merely states "1,500 former workers," not giving the class of workers re-employed. When one thinks of A. T. & T. employes, one first thinks of the "hello girls." However, it would be safe to say that very few, if any, of these "1,500 former workers" were hello girls. The majority probably consists of installation crews.

When the rush for the new service is over, will these 1,500 former workers be kept on, or will they again be laid off? When the new service has been installed in the majority of big business places which have need for it, which don't take long once it is proven to big business that it is the best method of telegraphic communication, it seems safe to state that only a small per cent of telephone workers now out of work will be required to handle the service.

I still say that the telegraph companies' employes will be the ones to suffer once the new service is in popular use.

I'm wondering if the low prices offered for leaf tobacco in Owensboro, Ky., last week will be reflected in the prices of cigars, cigarettes and other tobacco products when the tobacco finally reaches the retail trade? The price paid on the opening day of the sales is just about half what it was last year. However, only 78,000 pounds were sold as compared with 500,000 pounds on opening day last year.

The tobacco farmers objected to the prices, and after hurling apples at the auctioneers, broke up the sale and unanimously agreed to raise no tobacco next year. They threatened to take their tobacco back home rather than accept the prices offered.

However, there will be quite a lot of tobacco sold, even if the price isn't raised, but will the consumer benefit from the low price? No, absolutely not. The tobacco manufacturer is not content with paying his non-union workers a small wage to insure high profits for himself, but is going to take advantage of the depression and pay a low price for tobacco and increase his profits still more.

During the depression the retail prices on most everything has dropped, but the prices on tobacco products have remained the same they were during the prosperous times of a few years ago. Employes of tobacco companies, except where anion workers were employed, have had their wages cut. The farmer last year received less for his tobacco than the previous year, and this year is offered just about half what he received last year. Cuts have been made all along the line in the tobacco industry, but the consumer has not benefited. The man who has his money invested in the tobacco industry is the only one who has benefited.

STUPID—OR WORSE?

Wage cutting editors of employer journals continue to deliver essays on the alleged necessity and equity of slashing wages to meet reductions already made in the cost of the workers' living.

These protagonists of lower wages for the wealth producers in the interest of larger profits for stockholders endeavor to create the impression that wages are still at 1929 levels. Their propaganda was vigorously renewed when the executives of the organized railroad employes refused to accept the 10 per cent wage reduction demanded by the executives of the railroad companies.

The editor of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle is very much incensed at the action of the railroad employes. He declares that the railroad owners are justified in asking the railroad workers to accept the cut "since the cost of living has so largely diminished, and hence a given wage represents a corresponding increase in buying power."

The editor of the Washington Post echoes the same sort of sophism with the statement that the railway workers and other workers are attempting to maintain wages that "are out of adjustment with living costs."

Let's see how this claptrap balances with the facts.

Ethelbert Stewart is commissioner of the U. S. bureau of labor statistics. His sources of information are comprehensive. His accuracy is unimpeachable.

In a recent statement he declared that from December, 1925, to June, 1931, the workers' cost of living had been reduced 15.5 per cent, while the employers reduced the total wages paid workers in the manufacturing industries during the same period almost 40 per cent. This means that workers in the manufacturing industries have had their wages reduced already 25 per cent below the fall in the cost of living.

Commissioner Stewart concluded that, taken as a whole, the workers in the manufacturing industries "had suffered far more from declining pay than any had gained from lower prices of the things they had to buy." He added that the condition of the workers in other industries was little if any better than in manufacturing.

Statistical compilations of the American Federation of Labor, based on government figures, show that the wage-earners' yearly income is now $11,000,000,000 below the 1929 level, not including salaried workers. The same sources reveal that the workers' cost of living is around $1,300,000,000 below the 1929 level. This means that the net loss of the factory workers in 1931 is $9,700,000,000 in 1929 dollars.

As to the railroad workers, during 1929, 1930 and the first eight months of 1931 their total wage payments were slashed $59,999,000 a month. Their present wages are 25 per cent below the 1929 level, compared with a 12 per cent reduction in the cost of living since that date.

Labor holds that the cost of living has no more to do with wages than the spots on the sun. But statistical facts knock the underpinning completely away from the theory, untenable as it is.

With these figures public property, the repetition of the statement that wages either in the manufacturing or railroad industries have not been adjusted and much more than adjusted to decreases in the cost of living must be described as either dense ignorance or crass mendacity.

WE'RE DUE FOR EDUCATION.

Americans will know a lot more than they now know about international relations before the world is out of its present chaos.

Among questions on which they will be enlightened is the reparations question. We are told now, quite frankly, that there will be no more reparations payments. There will be no more war debt payments. And, a good deal of the money privately loaned to Europe since the war will never be repaid.

The money that has gone to Europe was skimmed from the pay rolls of American workers. It was the cream. So far as American workers are concerned, and it seems, so far as American capitalists are concerned, the cream has soured and is no good.

The outlook thus painted is not good.

We may say, of course, that all of this "should teach a lesson"—burned fingers, etc.—but the most effective way to stop cream from going into such channels is to see that it goes in the right channel in the first place. When the labor movement is strong enough to induce a proper wage adjustment we shall have fewer international financial complications. That is the real cure—the permanent cure.

WORTH CONSIDERING.

Most proposals offered by those who like to call themselves "radical" or who rate themselves as "progressive" for dealing with unemployment look toward the creation of more governmental machinery. This is not true of all such proposals. But in evaluating plans for unemployment remedy it should be every citizen's duty to answer to himself this question: Do I want a bigger bureaucracy to grow out of this depression? And he should remember that bureaucrats, once aboard, never voluntarily give up their berth aboard.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter II
JESUS AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES

PART II: The Pharisees

I feel after a close and intensive study of the Jesus-Pharisee problem that the Pharisees had good grounds for regarding—and did so regard—Jesus as a faithful son of Israel, a "good Jew," if you please, except for what He taught! Much in the New Testament leads me to think this, although it is foreign to our purpose in this series of articles to enter into any discussion of why I think so other than to point out to you briefly two facts:

WM. L. MOSS

(1) Note the numerous times Jesus is approached by Pharisees and their ilk with no thought in their minds that they will become "unclean" because of their contact with Him; (2) note also the number of times they use a term like "good master" when addressing Him. Ah, they were forced in spite of all their opposition to Him to recognize His outstanding personal ability as a Teacher in Isreal, but they detested His doctrine!

This, then, in as few words as I could possibly put it, is the rock upon which the Pharisees and Jesus split—namely, not Jesus personally but His doctrine.

Well, what if that is true? you ask. What difference does it make and what bearing has all this on the social teaching of the Pharisees and the social teaching of Jesus? Suppose, because of Jesus' religious doctrine, the Pharisees plotted His death; what bearing had this on His and their social teaching? What about the Sadducees; what about the Herodians; what about the scribes—did not they also oppose Him and help plot His crucifixion? What light, you are still asking me, will a comparison of the religious teaching of the Pharisees and Jesus throw upon the social teaching of both and how will it help reveal the force of Jesus' social teaching for us of today?

These pertinent questions bring us immediately to the crux of the whole matter: Who were the Pharisees and what did they teach? Next week I shall enter into the answer to this double question, and therefore we will first inquire, "Who were the Pharisees?"

Sales Tax

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

News comes out of Washington that William Randolph Hearst is trying to persuade a group of senators and representatives to go to Canada at his expense and "study" the sales tax of that country.

Mr. Hearst is rich—spends a lot of his time in Europe. Commonsense teaches one that Mr. Hearst is going to advocate most anything that will protect his bulging purse—even if it means, as in the case of the sales tax—taxing the income of the poor man. Naturally he wants congress to pass a sales tax, for no better scheme exists for the protection of mammoth fortunes. Also, naturally, Mr. Hearst wants to get the minds of as many congressmen as possible off the question of an income tax.

A sales tax on the necessities of life—and it is coming to be more and more the tendency of our lawmakers to tax the things that sustain life itself rather than the surpluses of men's wealth—hardly affects the rich but is a real hardship on the poor.

The merchant always passes on a sales tax to the consumers, and since the average working man must spend his entire earnings on his family this means that he pays a tax on practically every dollar he spends. The rich man does not have to spend all of his income, hence what he has over and above living expenses remains untouched by a sales tax. Mr. Hearst being rich, no wonder he wants our congressmen to forget all about an income tax and "study" more about a sales tax!

What Next!

Film for home movie cameras, so "fast" that it can take indoor motion pictures at night with as little as two 100-watt bulbs for illumination, has recently been perfected.

Sporting events in artificially lighted buildings, street scenes at night and even "close-ups" of a face illuminated by a single match, have been successfully taken in tests of the new film; but the increased possibilities for movies within the home are expected to prove the most important result.

Twenty Million in Poverty—Children Underfed—Industry Held Responsible.

"We are now going into our third winter of excessive unemployment with its by-products of hunger, despair and disease, not to mention the loss of morale," declared Edward F. McGrady, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, in a recent address.

"Unemployment cannot help but be a permanent problem," McGrady continued, "when all of us know that according to the best figures obtainable approximately two million jobs have been permanently eliminated from the production and transportation industries by modern machinery. Yet with the elimination of these skilled workers our industries are capable of producing more in volume and value than ever before.

Twenty Millions in Poverty.

"Approximately twenty millions of our people are living in poverty and eight millions exist only with the help of charity, and all of this in spite of the fact that our granaries are overflowing with hundreds of millions of bushels of grain.

"In the industrial centers, where goods are capable of being turned out in larger quantities than ever before, we find want and hunger stalking the streets and men, women and children have been digging in garbage cans, raking over the refuse trying to find something to eat in order to keep life in their bodies.

Six Million Jobless.

"Today there are more than six million working men and women without employment of any kind, and six million more working only part time.

School Children Lack Food.

"The United States health service recently declared that more than six million of our school children are suffering from malnutrition, making them easy victims of many serious diseases.

"Authentic testimony shows that the hospitals are reporting an alarming rise in the types of physical trouble due to under-nourishment, and all schools are reporting a marked decline of mental alertness among the pupils and a marked appearance of physical lassitude.

"We cannot now estimate the tragic consequences which will flow from such developments. Unemployment and its consequent poverty is reaching into the lives of men and women in all walks of life."

Mr. McGrady unhesitatingly and positively charged those who own and control our industries with being responsible for the present deplorable conditions.

"We solemnly remind industry," he said, "that its right to exist, its right to function, rests upon social sanctions. If it is unmindful of these sanctions, it will be at its peril.

"Industrial leaders must forget that industry is created solely for profit. Industry and business now and in the future must be considered as institutions created for the purpose of serving and supplying all social needs created for the good of humanity.

"Industry is indeed facing the alternative that it must demonstrate the point that private initiative, private enterprise and private ownership are superior to any other form of ownership and industrial control. If they fail to prove it, this control and ownership will be regulated by others for the good of all and the safety of the nation."

Parcel Post Rates Higher Than Express

Washington.—John A. Smith, Jr., of the Frank E. Davis company, Gloucester, Mass., told the interstate commerce commission that the increased short-haul parcel post rates asked by the postoffice department are higher than second-class express rates now, and that the increase would drive his concern to patronize the express companies.

A number of readers took us quite seriously when we suggested that someone pick an All-City dance orchestra. One of the first selections to come in ran something like this: Drums, Herbert Weaver; piano, Hubert Pless; banjo, Herman Dodds; bass, Earl Van Arsdale; trumpet, Marion Liner; saxs, Jimmy Cox, Ralph Miller and Ramon Pryor.

So in a spirit of fun we'll let it go a little further and make up some rules. Here they are: Any reader of The Labor World may send in a ballot, but it must contain only names of members of Local 80 who are active in the dance field. A careful check will be kept and some sort of prize given to the musician whose name appears on the most ballots.

One lady sent in this bunch of sheiks whom she claimed were the most handsome band in town: Piano, Joe Leland; drums, Wally Weber; banjo, Ellis Goodloe; trumpet, Lloyd Wolfe and J. T. Holdam; saxs, Stimson and Stamper, and bass, George A. Van Arsdale.

OUR ADVERTISERS ARE OUR FRIENDS

GREEN TELLS MARCHERS THEY ARE VICTIMS OF PROPAGANDA

Washington, Dec. 9.—"Hunger" marchers, more than a thousand strong, booed to their hearts' content as they paraded past the American Federation of Labor building here Monday. They were protected in their demonstration by one of the largest police escorts ever seen in the capital.

Inside of the big building, in the great council chamber where executive council meetings are held and where American labor made its great war decision, President William Green told a selected committee a story that wiped the grins from their faces and sent them from the room before he had finished.

President Green told them they were the dupes of the soviet regime, that the purpose of their leaders was revolutionary, that they were tools and pawns and that the purpose of their leaders was not to get relief, but to foment revolution.

A. F. of L. Represents Workers.

"The American Federation of Labor," said President Green, "is representative of the millions of working men and women in the United States and we are endeavoring through the American Federation of Labor to advance their best interests. We are always willing to listen to bona fide complaints and petitions, but we are unwilling to give consideration to the complaints of any group dominated by Moscow or the communists.

"They are not genuine. There are many sincere and honest people concerned, but the leaders are not interested in the welfare of the working people. They don't want relief. They don't want unemployment insurance, even though it might help. Their real purpose is the overthrow of this government and you are only their dupes. Foster and Benjamin want the overthrow of our government and you are their tools. Well, the American Federation of Labor will have nothing to do with any such movement. They are insincere and they are cowards."

Delegation Leaves Suddenly.

At this point the delegation leader said, "Come on out of here"—and out they went.

The paraders, their cars parked elsewhere, marched to Federation headquarters from the White House, the first stop having been at the capitol grounds.

As the line reached the federation building the paraders were met by Edward F. McGrady, designated by President Green to receive them at the entrance. They were informed that a committee of six might enter. The committee was escorted to the seventh floor by McGrady.

President Green asked the committee members what unions they represented. They responded: John Hecker, Painters 275, Chicago; Max Rosen, Painters 2717, New York; Jake Rubicki, Die Makers, Chicago; Morris Nelson, Painters 194, Chicago; Nathan Greenfield, Cloakmakers, New York; John Hubert, Painters 195, New York.

Hecker Is Truculent.

They were asked, "Did your unions elect you and authorize you to present these resolutions?" They asserted they were elected, but the resolutions were adopted in Washington. "My local is 90 per cent out of work," said Hecker, who acted as spokesman and who appeared truculent throughout, as though enjoying his opportunity to scold and defy.

Police precautions were elaborate. Three patrol wagons were parked near the building. Motorcycles and scout cars hovered about and the line of march was protected by a policeman at about every fourth tier of marchers.

The resolutions presented by Hecker demanded unemployment insurance, denounced the federation and took a pot shot at Matthew Woll. President Green asked them what that had to do with unemployment insurance, whereupon Hecker declared Woll was an enemy of the "workers' government, soviet Russia."

Paraders Housed and Fed.

In Washington the demonstrators were housed and fed. William Z. Foster visited them the night before their demonstrations, but he was not in the line of march to the capitol, White House and A. F. of L.

En route the marchers "booed" lustily, sang more or less and took in the sights.

Labor's Program Is Creating New Industrial South

Paul W. Fuller Declares Organizing Campaign Has Been Successful — Public Sentiment More Friendly.

DIRECTS EDUCATION

PAUL W. FULLER
Chief of Educational Activities in Southern Campaign.

Paul W. Fuller, educational director of organized labor's Southern Organizing Campaign, reports wonderful progress in the educational program carried out in the south. "We have built new organizations and rebuilt old ones lately in Georgia and South Carolina," he says. "As a result we have a strong favorable public opinion and strong labor unions. When I first went to Augusta a year ago the Central Labor union of that city only had eight delegates representing the five local unions. With the result of our educational program the Augusta Central Labor union has ninety-five delegates representing twenty-one local unions. This seems like good progress to me in the face of the depression.

"Recently we began educational activities in Columbia, S. C., including New Brookland, Union and Rock Hill, S. C. In Columbia, the capital of the state, I have had a number of mass meetings and preached in several of the largest churches and have been rewarded, as has been made clear by many evidences, that I have created splendid interest for trade unionism among the public, but especially the religious groups. In a word, I feel sure that if we can continue our progress of education here, a new south, as far as industry is concerned, will be created."

Chicago Union Printers Pay $500,000 to Idle

Chicago, Ill.—During the last fifteen months Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 has collected and disbursed $500,000 in out-of-work benefits, declared William J. Hedger, president of the union. In addition, the union during the same period has paid out $321,055.90 in sick and death benefits, hospital expenses and local pensions, making a total of $821,055.90. This sum was collected and disbursed, Mr. Hedger said, with an administrative expense of less than 1.5 per cent of the total amount collected.

ENTRAL BODY PLANS TO HOLD SOCIAL SESSION

t-Together Meet Set for December 28.

OHN T. O'CONNOR INVITED TO ATTEND

mmittee Named to Arange Entertainment Feaures—Perry Chairman.

To make 1932 a year of progss for local trades unions is the goal of Chattanooga Trades nd Labor council, the district arent body," and in order that nstructive plans may be outlned and discussed to that end, great meeting, open to all mbers of affiliated locals, will e staged at Central Labor hall Monday evening, December 28. he idea for this session was rought forth at Monday night's egular meeting by George W. erry, delegate from Local 415, ourneyman Barbers, and inludes the serving of soft drinks, andwiches and cigars for all esent. In discussions of the rojected meeting Monday night, t was recalled that in former ears these sessions had been held more or less frequently, and had always been productive of much good.

According to tentative plans, Major John T. O'Connor, of Knoxville, will be asked to come and be the guest of Chattanooga ionists, and members of a committee named by President Ortwein are confident that only pressing business could prevent the former state official from attending. It was said Mr. O'Connor will be asked to come more as a counsellor than an orator, although he is known to be able to fill an assignment in either capacity. The Knoxville official is one of the best-known and most universally liked men who has ever held membership in a Tennessee trade union, and if he finds it possible to attend, a capacity audience is assured. It was pointed out that, with the addition of extra chairs, the large hall at Central Body will accommodate several hundred people, and ample ante-room space is available for the preparation and serving of refreshments, etc.

President Ortwein named Mr. Perry chairman of the special committee to prepare for the event, and with W. D. Canada and the standing entertainment committee as assistants, he promises a number of unusual entertainment features which will make the session enjoyable as well as instructive. Mr. Perry said Thursday the committee will have some interesting announcements to make for Labor World readers next week.

lumbers to Hold Special Meeting

Owing to the fact that the last Friday night in this month, which would naturally be the night and installation of new officers of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, has ordered a special meeting for Friday night, Dec. 18, on which night the election and installing of new officers will form a special order of business, and the full membership of the local will be requested to be present, according to H. F. Brown, Labor World correspondent from that local.

"There will be no meeting of the local on their regular meeting night, Friday, Dec. 25, of course," Mr. Brown explained. "There is an effort apparent to have President Frank Watson continue in the office, but other changes in the personnel of officers are expected.

"The local officials urge a full attendance on that night, Friday, Dec. 18."

lders Expecting Large Attendance

According to James O'Connor, corresponding representative of Local Union Molders, a big turnout of members is expected for the smoker and get-together meeting scheduled for tonight (Friday), when officers for 1932 will be named.

Considerable interest in the session has been shown since publication in last week's issue of The Labor World of plans for the get-together, Mr. O'Connor said, and it is believed one of the largest crowds in months will be present at Central Labor hall when the meeting is called to order at 7:30.

MACHINISTS 1450 NAME OFFICERS

Only One New Member of Official Family Elected by Railroad Lodge.

Continuing the apparent policy of local trades unions to give preference to experienced men for the various official positions, Lodge 1450, Machinists (railroad branch) last Thursday night renamed C. W. Pfeiffer president, and continued in office those who served during the past year, with the exception of vice-president, electing Reece Taylor to that place. J. C. "Jimmie" Rogers, veteran financial secretary, was re-elected without opposition, as was F. W. Parks, treasurer. Jack McGraw, as trustee, and Hiram Johnson, sentinel, complete the official list, with delegates to Central Body to be named by the new president after the installation.

A committee from this lodge was named to endeavor to arrange for a joint installation of officers with those of the sister lodge, 56, which has been a customary feature of a combined session the first meeting night in the new year.

Officers of 1450 were instructed to remain in readiness to render any possible assistance to Central and State Body officials in the matter of protecting the workers' interests during the present session of the legislature.

J. T. Titmarsh, long-time member and official of the lodge, was reported as seriously ill at his home on Oak street. Mr. Titmarsh has been "laid up" several weeks, and his friends are hoping for an early recovery and return to work.

Atlantic & Pacific Opposes Clerks' Union

Threat of Job Loss Used to Keep Employes From Joining Trade Union.

Lafayette, Ind., Dec. 17.—C. C. Coulter, secretary-treasurer of the Retail Clerks' International Protective association, publishes a scathing indictment of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea company's hostile attitude toward union clerks in the current issue of the Retail Clerks' International Advocate.

"The Atlantic and Pacific company has maintained its resistance against the organization of its employes," Mr. Coulter says. "There are a number of their salespeople who are members of the Retail Clerks' International Protective association, but are to be found in well organized communities where a store cannot successfully operate with a non-union sales force, where the power of organized labor is sufficiently strong to make itself felt and its voice heard.

Intimidation Used.

"It is a difficult matter, however, to establish contact with 80,000 men who are kept isolated from each other, with no spokesman, and who are prevented by intimidation and threat of loss of employment from joining an organization with representatives of their own selection to present their grievances and negotiate satisfactory terms for employment.

Trade Unionists Dismissed.

"An organizer or a representative of the R. C. I. P. A. has only to start canvassing among A. and P. clerks and he instantly becomes an object of suspicion, finding himself followed and observed by supervisors who immediately report to their superiors, when it invariably follows that several clerks are summarily discharged, and, strange to say, those dismissed are always those who have been brave enough to indicate an interest in a movement to organize."

Union Clerks Banned.

"The A. and P company and similar concerns," Mr. Coulter points out, "realize that their power lies in the complete subjection of their employes, which is the reason for the edict banning membership in the Retail Clerks' International Protective association for their clerks. Loss of employment, particularly under present conditions in the business world, is a penalty that assumes rather serious proportions to a man who feels that he must hold on to anything that will bring daily bread for himself and those dependent upon him, even though the butter must be spread thin and the jam is entirely lacking."

Change Chain Store Labor Policy.

"Chain stores are to be accepted as a factor in the present day and age," Mr. Coulter concludes, "but new policies are needed. Hours and wages are burning questions in which these 80,000 men are directly concerned and should have some voice. It should be the serious purpose of all union men and women to do their utmost to aid this vast army of wage-earners to find expression in a well-ordered group under intelligent leadership. We believe this is an obligation that should rest heavily at the present time upon the American labor movement."

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE HEAD FLAYS "SHYSTER METHODS" OF BUILDING CONTRACTORS

President of Business Organization Delivers Stinging Rebuke to "Wage Profiteers," and Demands "House Cleaning" of Cut-Throat Competition—Calls on Employers to Co-operate and Pay Living Wages.

Advising elimination of "shyster methods," asserting that "a house cleaning" seems necessary and urging the end of cutthroat methods, President Roy Le Craw, of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, has addressed a stinging letter to Hugh Roberts, executive secretary of the Georgia branch of the Associated General Contractors of America.

President Le Craw by his letter puts the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce "way out in front" and strikes a terrific blow at the union-hating contractors from southern states who have gone into northern states to cut wages on federal contract work. President Le Craw declares that his organization has conferred with union representatives and he declared the chamber is for "fair and reasonable wages."

"The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce is definitely on record in favor of 'fair and reasonable' wages through our 'Declaration of Intentions,' which we have sponsored and circulated," he said in his letter. "This declaration has been signed by approximately three hundred business concerns of our city, both commercial and industrial, who have pledged themselves to strive to maintain a fair wage scale and to make no further reductions in the number of their employes.

Three Groups of Builders.

"From all the information we can gather, it seems that there are three general groups of building contractors operating in Atlanta.

"First: A group who pay the union wage scale. I understand that the government accepts this scale as the 'prevailing wage scale.'

"Second: Your group of contractors, a number of whom I am informed submitted five or six different wage scales in bidding recently on an Atlanta contract. These, I believe, ranged from very low up to nearly the union scale.

"Third: A group of so-called 'curbstone' contractors who submit bids based on practically starvation wages which take advantage of the present unemployment situation and the desperate plight of carpenters, plumbers, laborers, etc. I am further informed that the second group referred to above have not themselves been entirely free from this practice.

"A thorough study of this situation and the conflicting elements evident therein has convinced me that your problem is purely a 'trade problem' at the present time, peculiarly limited in its adjustment possibilities to your own ranks. In other words, it looks to the unprejudiced observers as if you folk need a house cleaning. You need to replace throat-cutting competition with 'give and take' co-operation. I have learned personally during the past few years that I cannot climb to success over the prostrate forms of my competitors, but that I must carry them up with me in a determined effort to raise the general level. In that way and in that way only can I in my business or you in yours hope to eliminate the troubles which are now robbing you of the reasonable profit to which you are entitled.

Co-operation Urged.

"When and if the building trades and contractors of Atlanta get together among themselves and a three-quarters majority decide to co-operate for the mutual benefit of your profession, then the chamber of commerce can certainly aid you in getting rid of the one-quarter minority who still insist on wage profiteering and shyster methods, but until that time comes, I am convinced that the efforts of this or any other outside body would be absolutely futile, and I can only suggest to you to tackle this problem yourselves with clean hands and open minds."

Hugh Roberts, to whom the letter was addressed, declared a year ago that depressions "are a very old and periodically recurring problem" and that "panics are caused by the improvidence of the stupid and the foresight of the intelligent embarked on an ambitious and entirely selfish program." He also observed, from his non-union vantage point, that "the alien and the ex-service man take their places side by side in the bread line."

Sears, Roebuck & Co. Cut Wages in Denver

Julius Rosenwald, Noted Philanthropist, Develops Into Wage Slasher.

Denver, Colo., Dec. 17.—Sears, Roebuck & Co. announced wage cuts of from $1 to $5 a week for fifty-three employes of the company's retail store here, effective Dec. 24, in a notice filed with the state industrial commission.

On a percentage basis the lower paid workers get the largest slash and the higher paid ones the smallest. Two $50 a week men are cut to $45, a 10 per cent reduction, while one $10 employe was cut to $8, a 20 per cent slash.

New Wage Schedule.

The following schedule of wage reductions gives an instructive picture of the living standards imposed on the workers of one of America's largest mail order and chain stores:

Two from $50 to $45; one, $45 to $40; two, $40 to $36; one, $37.50 to $32; two, $35 to $32; one, $26 to $22; one, $25 to $22; one, $24 to $22; eight, $24 to $20; one, $22 to $17; one, $21 to $19; one, $21 to $18; three, $20 to $18; two, $20 to $17; one, $18 to 17; one, $18 to $16; two, $18 to $15; two, $17 to $16; one, $16 to $14; one, $16 to $12; one, $15 to $14; five, $15 to $13; two, $15 to $12; two, $14 to $12; two, $13 to $10; one, $12 to $10; one, $11 to $10; one, $10 to $8.

Dividends on Watered Stock.

On Dec. 30, 1930, Sears, Roebuck & Co. had 4,747,973 shares of stock outstanding. Since 1911 the company officials have given the stockholders over 150 per cent in stock dividends, and have been quite liberal in cash dividends. But the stockholders are howling for more, and the directors think the easiest way to transfer additional money to the stockholders is to take it out of the pay envelopes of their already underpaid employes.

Rosenwald the Philanthropist.

The managing genius of Sears, Roebuck & Co. is Julius Rosenwald, who is chairman of the board.

In addition to being a wage slasher, Mr. Rosenwald is noted as a philanthropist. In 1917 he established the Julius Rosenwald fund with capital of $30,000,000 dedicated to "the well-being of mankind." He is honorary president of the Jewish Charities of Chicago, chairman of the Chicago bureau of public efficiency, and executive committee member of the Chicago plan commission. He is also a trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation, the Chicago Art institute, the Tuskegee institute, the University of Chicago, Hull House, and the Baron de Hirsch fund.

NOTICE, BARBERS!

A special called meeting of Local 415, Journeymen Barbers, will be held Monday night, Dec. 21, at 7:15 o'clock. All members are expected to be present, as business of vital importance to each and every one is to be discussed.

GEORGE W. PERRY, President.

Canadian Rail Unions Reject Wage Slash

Montreal, Can.—Railway labor leaders declared they would be unable to accept the 10 per cent reduction in wages recommended for Canadian railways by the board of conciliation.

James Murdock, representing the committee of general chairmen of railway union heads, voiced the labor men's opinion in an advice sent to the minister of labor. He said:

"We have further advised the minister that the whole question at issue will be referred back directly to the 26,000 employes directly interested.

"Though our general chairmen were distinctly instructed not to accept any form of wage reductions, we feel that the matter should be referred back to them for further consideration."

FAMILY SIZE DECREASES.

Washington.—The average size of the family in the United States decreased from nearly five in 1890 to a trifle over four in 1930, according to a statement by the U. S. bureau of the census. The exact figures are 4.9 per cent per family in 1890 and 4.1 in 1930.

MINE WORKERS STILL HOPEFUL

Not Discouraged Over Setback in Straight Creek Field, Says Williams.

United Mine Workers in the Straight Creek, Kentucky, coal fields are not discouraged over the setback received recently when operators chose to do battle with the communistic organization rather than to co-operate with the American organization, as reported in a recent issue of The Labor World, according to Ben Williams, representative of the national organization, who was in Chattanooga for a brief visit this week.

Mr. Williams said the workers refuse to believe that operators will continue such an attitude, and they are accepting the present situation philosophically and "watchfully waiting" developments. The miners' representative, however, promised some interesting disclosures concerning conditions in the Straight Creek field as a possibility for the near future.

Conditions in the Wilder field, from which Mr. Williams had just returned, were contrasted with the situation in Harlan and Bell counties, Kentucky. The Tennessee camps, he said, are operating full blast, with employer and employe bending every effort to stabilize the industy and make it profitable for all concerned. "The picture at Harlan," he said, "needs no elaboration. Why employers will prefer such conditions is beyond my comprehension."

Mr. Williams left Thursday for Pineville.

Western Union and Postal Cut Wages

Company Union Used to Approve Reduction — Stockholders Pocket the Benefits.

Chicago, Dec. 17.—The way anti-union employers use their company unions to approve wage cuts is well described by Frank B. Powers, international president of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of North America, in an article in the Commercial Telegraphers' Journal giving an account of the recent wage cuts imposed by the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies.

10 Per Cent Slash Decreed.

Western Union officials decided to slash wages 10 per cent for all land employes, excepting messenger boys who had already had their wages reduced. The cut was to remain in effect until the board of directors decided that conditions warrant restoration of earnings either wholly or in part.

"Company Union" Gets Its Orders.

Having reached this decision, the officials called in a committee of its association of Western Union employes, told the committee what the company officials had decided, and suggested that the company union make a statement approving the wage cut. The company union obeyed orders and issued a statement in which it was said that prior to reaching its approval there had been a "lengthy discussion" of business conditions affecting adversely the company's business.

Western Union Owns Company Union

"When it is recalled," declared President Powers, "that the Association of Western Union Employes was set up in 1919 by the Western Union with handpicked officers, with a constitution prepared in the legal department of the Western Union, it takes no great stretch of the imagination to picture the 'lengthy discussion' of affairs in general and the decision to put telegraph employes on a starvation standard of living.

Coercion Used.

"The diabolical thing is that the employes, if they wish to remain as employes, feel that they must tolerate the existence of this company union and even contribute of their limited income to its upkeep. The Western Union could well afford to pay all expenses."

Pay Knocked to 1914 Level.

"So far as the public is concerned this is the only cut which has taken place," Mr. Powers went on. "As a matter of fact the 'sliding scale' has been in operation for years, and particularly since the panic of the fall of 1929. Even before the general slash was announced, wages had been reduced to as low as $85 a month for simplex operators and $125 for Morse operators. A general cut was made in April of this year, affecting all classes. The new rates bring telegraph wages down to prewar levels."

Mr. Powers points out that the officials of the Postal Telegraph company slashed wages at the same time as the Western Union, so that now Postal rates are as low as $45 to $55 per month for simplex operators. Even the Postal's messenger boys were cut from $2 and $1.75 a day to $1.75 and $1.50 a day and the guarantee of a minimum day's earnings of 85 cents was withdrawn.

Stockholders' Dividends Protected.

"The Western Union has reduced its dividend rate from $6 to $4," concludes Mr. Powers. "Why not $4 or $2, if necessary, to maintain the very skimpy wage rates paid by that concern? By what right do the stockholders take money from the workers? By the right of might. Nothing else."

GREEN BACKS EMPLOYES OF UNCLE SAMUEL

Sharply Protests Government Pay Cuts.

FEDERATION SOLID BEHIND WORKERS

Byrns Declares Fat Salaries Should Be First to Be Slashed.

Because two bills have been introduced into congress and others are threatened providing for a reduction in the wages and salaries paid government employes, President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, addressed a letter to Congressman Joseph W. Byrns, chairman of the committee on appropriations, house of representatives, protesting against such action.

Only a few days ago Congressman Rich, of the Sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill providing for a general reduction in the salaries of all government employes. The introduction of this bill, together with suggestions made in various other ways, inspired the letter of protest in behalf of the American Federation of Labor. The officers and members of the American Federation of Labor are tremendously interested in the economic welfare of their fellow workers employed in the government service, many of whom are directly affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

It is the intention of the officers of the American Federation of Labor to carry out the intent and purpose of this resolution by opposing in every honorable way any attempt on the part of congress to lower the living standards of government employes through the imposition of reductions in wages.

The following letter was sent by President Green to Congressman Byrns protesting against any attempt to reduce the wages of government employes:

> Because of my deep solicitude for the economic and social welfare of the thousands of government employes and because of the feelings of apprehension which prevail in the minds of the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor, I am writing you regarding suggestions which have been made in various quarters that a substantial reduction in wages should be made and must be imposed upon government employes. I know of no action which the government could take which would arouse so much disappointment and dissatisfaction. The laboring people employed in private industry in all sections of the land will join with the government employes directly affected in a vigorous protest against a lowering of the standard of living through the imposition of a reduction in wages upon government employes.
> May I take the liberty of reminding you that during the war period and following the war, when many workers were more fortunate than government employes insofar as wages and conditions of employment were concerned, government employes were not so fortunate as to receive increases of pay commensurate with the increase in the cost of living.
> I wish to present to you, and through you to the leaders of congress, a most vigorous protest against any attempt to reduce the modest wages and salaries paid government employes. The officers and members of the American Federation of Labor could not, under any circumstances, give approval to such a legislative policy nor could they reconcile themselves to such action on the part of congress.
> I most earnestly request you to oppose vigorously any attempt to reduce the salary of government employes. I will be pleased if I may receive from you a favorable response to the request which I have herein submitted.

The prompt reply of Congressman Byrns to this communication follows:

> I have your letter of the 11th which was delivered to my office.
> Immediately upon returning to Washington I gave an interview to the press in which I stated that I was not in favor of considering the question of reduction of government salaries until every other means of balancing the budget be resorted to and was found wanting; that I felt the burden should be upon the higher bracket incomes which had received substantial reduction. I further said that if it finally appeared that salary reductions were absolutely necessary that those with the high salaries be first to receive the reduction.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter II
JESUS AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES

PART III: Who Were the Pharisees?

Following the return from Dispora (Dispersion), that hour of tribulation for the Hebrews, when as a nation they were, in the main, taken captive to Babylon and quite a few others fled to Egypt, there was set up throughout the length and breadth of Palestine in practically every hamlet, town and city little religious centers designated then and still called the "synagogues," with the chief center of worship being at Jerusalem, the governing body there being called the Sanhedrin. In these synagogues groups of men called Pharisees, or Chasim, because as the name itself ("separated") indicates, they taught the separation of the people of God (the Jews) from all defilements and snares of the heathen life that surrounded them, assumed the leadership.

WM. L. MOSS

This body of religionists inside the nation of Israel were an outgrowth of the same spirit which back in the Maccabean days had led Hebrews to risk everything, forfeit even their lives, to defend the sanctity of both the Temple and their right as God's chosen people to worship Him as they saw fit, which they made sure was according to His law. By the time of Christ they were a group devoted solely to the scrupulous observance of the minutiae of a complex system or code of religio-social teaching they labeled "the Law." As a body of men they were the aristocracy of moral assumption. They regarded themselves as the official patterns in things religious and social; they had largely superseded the priesthood on the religious side, and on the social side because of their predominate wealth and with the help of the scribes, scholarly and pedantic "searchers of the scriptures," or religious lawyers, they always arrogantly took the upper or chief places in the synagogues and in private homes and at public gatherings.

By the time of Jesus the Pharisees had been quite successful in putting over on the common folk of the land a high estimate of their superior virtue and had managed to build up the belief that they alone possessed the secret of God's will for His people in what they taught. The heart of this secret was that there dwelt in man an immortal energy or vigor he could nourish to rewards or punishments in the world to come. By a punctilious obedience of "the Law" a man could, they taught, hope to make for himself a record here in this life that would stand to his credit in the next, or if he failed to obey "the Law" in this life it would lead to his punishment after death.

Daddy—Young lady, do you mean to tell me you've been carrying that money around in your stocking?

Daughter—Why, daddy, you told me to put it where it would draw interest.

INDIGESTION

"My work is confining, and often I eat hurriedly, causing me to have indigestion. Gas will form and I will smother and have pains in my chest.

"I had to be careful what I ate, but after someone had recommended Black-Draught and I found a small pinch after meals was so helpful, I soon was eating anything I wanted.

"Now when I feel the least smothering or uncomfortable bloating, I take a pinch of Black-Draught and get relief."

VICTIMIZING INJURED WORKERS

State workmen's compensation laws abolished a number of legal and judicial technicalities which had been built up by employer governments and courts to deprive the workers of adequate and sure compensation for industrial accidents.

The federal employers liability act of 1907 placed employers engaged in interstate commerce under the federal law.

Unfortunately, the federal law adopted a number of technicalities whose absence characterizes the state compensation laws.

A recent decision of the United States supreme court shows how these technicalities are used to victimize injured railroad workers.

One of the functions of Eugene Bolle, an employe of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway company at Waukegan, Ill., was to fire a stationary engine used to generate steam for heating the passenger depot and other structures used for general railroad purposes.

When the stationary engine was out of order a locomotive was used. One day, when a locomotive was used in this way, Bolle was directed to accompany the locomotive to a coal dump to obtain a supply of coal. Bolle's locomotive was attached to three other engines being prepared for interstate transportation.

While coal was being taken upon one of the engines, Bolle was seriously injured. He sued the company for damages under the federal employers' liability act. The company fought the claim. Three times the case reached the supreme court of Illinois. Three times the Illinois court affirmed Bolle's legal right to damages under the federal law.

The railroad company appealed the case to the supreme court of the United States. The U. S. supreme court overruled the decision of the supreme court of Illinois, and denied compensation to Bolle. The decision was based on one of those antiquated legalisms and judicial definitions used to victimize the workers and deprive them of compensation for injuries.

The supreme court held that although much of the time Bolle was employed at work coming under judicially-defined interstate transportation, the work in connection with obtaining coal to fire the locomotive to generate steam to heat the railroad station and other structures used in interstate transportation, the specific work to which he had been assigned when injured, was not of itself interstate transportation. The court said:

"The sole object of the movement of the substitute engine was to procure a supply of coal for the purpose of generating steam. Its movement was in no way related to the contemplated employment of the other three locomotives, and its use differed in no way from the use of the stationary engine when that was available. * * * At the time of receiving his injury he was engaged in work not incidental to transportation in interstate commerce, but purely incidental to furnishing the means for heating the station and other structures of the company. His duty ended when he had produced a supply of steam for that purpose. He had nothing to do with its distribution or specific use.

"Indeed, what he produced was not used or intended to be used, directly or indirectly, in the transportation of anything. It is plain that his work was not in interstate transportation and was not so closely related to such transportation as to cause it to be practically a part of it."

Workers are of right entitled to compensation for injuries. They should not be deprived of it by legal and judicial technicalities which developed during that period when labor received neither respect nor justice from either the law or the courts.

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

Business as Usual!

Editor Labor World:

In Wednesday's Times there appeared a picture of Mr. Jo Conn Guild, Big Boss at the Tennessee Electric Power company, with a big write-up because of the fact that he had a birthday and WENT TO WORK AS USUAL!

Ah, what magnificent acts would be unheralded and unsung were it not for the industrious newspaper reporter. Such a deed of duty by Mr. Guild barely tops the everyday occurrence of millions of less fortunate Americans who have birthdays but HAVE NO JOBS TO GO TO.

Howbeit, let us pause a moment with uncovered domes in tribute to Mr. Jo Conn Guild. He actually labored (?) on his birthday. What truly depressing times we have come to! Cheer up, Mr. Guild; things will not always be so gloomy. Some sweet day (dividend day) you will reap the reward of the just and dutiful; the pill may be bitter, but the reward will be sweet. Cheer up!

Reverently,
T. R. CUTHBERT.

Mooney

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

"You're the fourth governor since my boy went to jail and his purty black hair turned gray. It looks like you're usin' my boy for a football like all the governors."

These are the words of Mrs. Mary Mooney, the mother of Tom Mooney, in San Quentin prison, a victim of men's hatred and greed aroused by a preparedness day mob explosion in San Francisco fifteen years ago, to Gov. James Rolph, Jr., the other day.

Her words tell the political story behind Mooney's continued imprisonment in San Quentin but furnish us with no insight into why San Francisco and all California permit Mooney to remain in prison when there is no proof of his guilt and a preponderance of belief in his innocence.

Mooney is kept in prison by the same powers that put him there—the business element in California and especially of San Francisco.

To turn him loose now and say that he had been "punshed enough" would bring the wrath of the business element down upon the head of any governor who freed him.

It is not at all a question of whether Mooney is guilty or not—he was sent to prison through the efforts of the powers that controlled the business life of San Francisco in the days when the bomb was exploded and he must be kept in prison until he dies in order that his incarceration may have a supposed salutary effect upon all and sundry.

Mayor Jimmy Walker's trip to San Francisco to plead in Mooney's behalf was in reality to tell him goodbye, for Mooney will never go free—he will die in prison unless America wakes up.

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Police "third degree" methods are getting hard and deserved blows in Washington, D. C., these days. As the result of a department of justice investigation, the floodlight of publicity has been turned on the "third degree" and eighteen police officers have been indicted on charges of assaulting prisoners. Six have been tried and of these, three convicted.

The "third degree" is a method without warrant of law for obtaining "confessions" from accused persons. It involves mental or physical torture or both. The poor and friendless are the victims of the practice. The wealthy and high-placed are almost never subjected to the "third degree."

Every believer in fair play, in law and order, in constitutional right, has reason to rejoice in the fight against the "third degree" in Washington. The nation's capital is setting an example for other cities cursed with "third degree" brutality.

The census says a family is "a group of persons, whether related by blood or not, who live together as one household, usually sharing the same table." And then the census counted them, discovering that there were 29,980,146 families of that kind in the United States.

The average number of persons per family in 1930 was 4.1; in 1920 it was 4.3; in 1910 it was 4.5; in 1900 it was 4.7; and in 1890 it was 4.9.

Well, we won't need so many in a family now; we've got machines! You'd need a lot of ox-drivers to handle the stuff that two men can take care of now with a three-ton truck.

Strangers—How old are you, little man?

Bright Boy—Damned if I know, mister. Mother was twenty-six when I was born, but now she's only twenty-four.

HOOVER MESSAGE OFFERS MOUNTAIN OF CREDIT, BUT EVADES PURCHASING POWER

Prestige and Profit of Bankers in Sight in Renewed Boom Period, But Depression-Prevention Is Not in Sight. "Strong America" Asked, But Labor Is Not Mentioned.

Washington, Dec. 17.—Congress has convened and the president's message has been delivered.

Ranking in importance with the message is the liberalization of house rules, under the democratic regime in that end of the capitol.

The presidential message threw an issue of tremendous proportions into the arena. It proposed creation of an emergency reconstruction finance corporation with a capital stock of $500,000,000, with authority to issue debentures or other obligations up to $1,500,000,000, which translated into words is one billion five hundred million dollars.

The purpose of this enormous corporation, patterned after the finance corporation, but with "broader" powers, is to stimulate or provide credit to absorb the "shocks" that have rebounded against American business from foreign nations.

Small Fraction's Power.

The "shocks" that have thus rebounded have come from a fraction of our total industrial volume never put at more than 10 per cent and probably nearer 4 per cent.

The ridiculous situation that permits a fraction so small to reverberate so enormously has not been properly explained. It is made to serve an altogether exaggerated purpose.

The gigantic corporation proposed by the president will, if set up, undoubtedly put vast new credit into the industrial arena and stimulate industrial operations, but in so doing it will add to the power prestige and profit of the great banks and financial institutions that admittedly saw the 1929 collapse coming and failed to act in the direction of prevention and that then proceeded to urge wage reductions, putting the penalty upon the shoulders of the workers.

The message points out that in the year there have been revolutions in nineteen countries, inability to meet obligations in ten and abandonment of former monetary standards in fourteen. It then declares that our difficulties have arisen "in large degree" from these (foreign) sources.

Hope for Recovery.

"A strong America is the highest contribution to world stability," says the message in one of its high spots. And hope is found in the assertion that "we can make a large measure of recovery independent of the rest of the world."

Expenditures on public works this year will, it is asserted, reach a total of $780,000,000, three times the 1928 total.

These statements indicate improved conditions. They indicate the freeing of credit, the spending of money and a wholly new concentration on American industrial unity as a thing apart from the rest of the world. But they do not mention purchasing power and they do not contain the seeds of measures necessary to prevent a recurrence of expression and they do little more than hint at the possibility of an America enabled to stand above the rest of the world, so placed as to prevent 4 per cent of its business from again disrupting the remaining 96 per cent.

Labor, except for unemployment, is not mentioned in the message. There is no reference to establishment of rights now denied, no reference to any labor objective, and yet there are points of agreement with labor, as in the definite opposition to the dole.

Unemployed Migrate To Western States

Washington.—The president's organization on unemployment relief, in connection with officials of western states, are exerting strong influence against the mobility of jobless workers, it was announced by Merle Thorpe, assistant director of the organization.

It was stated that many of the unemployed in the eastern states are migrating to the warmer climate of the west in search of jobs. Officials of the western cities say they cannot employ transient jobless in addition to their own unemployed.

P. G. Spilsbury, Arizona representative of the president's organization, declared that in that state hundreds of transient unemployed often arrive on a single freight train. At some points soup kitchens have been established so that men can pass through without resorting to panhandling or thievery. The numbers are so great, Mr. Spilsbury said, that Arizona cannot give them jobs or accept them as public charges.

The transients, it was stated, are not professional hoboes, but young men of 16 to 25 who have taken to the road because of economic conditions.

The president's organization urges the jobless to stay at home and take what they can get in the nature of relief where they are known rather than run the risk of becoming vagrants in the western states.

$15 Wages for Jobless Fixed in Rhode Island

Providence, R. I.—It did not take the special session of the Rhode Island legislature long to act on the unemployment situation as presented to it by Gov. Norman S. Case. The legislature met, received the governor's recommendations, enacted them into law, adjourned and went home, all in one day.

The law sets up an unpaid commission of three, with the state bank commissioner as chairman, to supervise unemployment relief.

Cities and towns are authorized temporarily to exceed their statutory borrowing power by one-tenth of one per cent of their assessed valuation. The law appropriates $1,500,000 to finance relief work.

Relief funds are administered by local directors of public aid, subject to the approval of the city council and the state commission.

The law fixes a limitation of $15 a week in the payment for work by a citizen who has resided two years in the state and six months in the city. If no work is available, it is permitted to furnish money or orders for shelter, food, fuel, clothing or other necessities at the rate of $1 a day for the applicant and 50 cents a day for each dependent, but in all not to exceed $15 a week per family.

Court Upholds Right of Labor to Strike

Baltimore, Md.—Chief Judge Samuel K. Dennis, in the circuit court here, upheld the right of organized labor unions to refuse to work for any employer without assigning a reason for the refusal.

The decision is far-reaching in its effect, and is said to be the first of its kind given in Maryland.

Judge Dennis held that while unions actively engaged under a contract may not walk out or strike without legal justification, they are at perfect liberty to refuse to work at the expiration of the contract. The opinion in part said:

"Members of a labor union, singly or collectively, whether speaking individually or through their unions, have an unqualified, absolute right to peacefully withhold their labor (provided no contractual relation be illegally impaired thereby) as to the future from any would-be employer whatsoever."

Judge Denunis said that the rule laid down in his decision applies equally to the right of the employers to refuse in the absence of any contract to employ labor in the future.

The opinion was handed down in the suit of Seymour Ruff & Sons, Inc., local contractors, engaged in building the new United States post office, against the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International Union of America.

How many FRIENDS have You...
There are so many attractive sections of the city in which to live, that one's friends are sure to be scattered, and of course many friends and relatives live in distant cities. Keeping these friendships alive, however, is easy with a telephone in the home.
Whether it's just a social conversation with a neighbor in the next block, or a voice visit using the quick and inexpensive long distance telephone service, talking with friends by telephone is a convenient way to visit them.
Of course the modern family uses this telephone for many other purposes. The day's groceries are ordered—an appointment is made with the dentist—dad at the office and mother at home discuss some little problem—and all without the bother of a trip in person. Should some danger threaten—the doctor, the police department and the fire department are quickly available at those times when minutes are important.
With all the countless ways in which it serves through the routine of daily life, and with its presence an assurance of help in emergencies, modern telephone service is so low in cost that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Hello, Folks!

CLARK BROS. OFFER UNUSUAL VALUES IN CHATTANOOGA-MADE FURNITURE

It is almost Christmas! I wonder how many poor and unfortunate people there are in Chattanooga to whom Christmas won't mean much? I wonder how many children Santa Claus will not visit? Now, Mr. Workingman, you who have spent your money in a chain store, you who have not demanded Chattanooga-made merchandise, could have helped the poor and unfortunate by trading at a home-owned store. Every dollar you spend in a chain store hurts you. The chain store sends your money out of Chattanooga. The chain store does not help build your churches and schools. They dodge every tax they possibly can. Mr. Working Man, Clark Bros. is home-owned and home operated. We have spent over a million dollars in Chattanooga. We keep your money at home. You help build the furniture we sell. This store is for working people. We offer the most liberal terms in all Chattanooga — 1 to 5 years to pay your bill. Trade at a home-owned store and help your fellow man. Every time you buy Chattanooga-made furniture you help to employ Chattanooga Labor. Stay away from the chain stores. Don't fatten the pocketbook of Wall Street. Keep your money in Chattanooga! We have sold and satisfied over 35,000 customers. We can satisfy you. Pay us a visit. We want you to make our store your store. Use our telephone. You are welcome whether you buy or not.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

The local welcomes Mr. William C. Still, formerly of Cleveland, Tenn., and the University of Chattanooga. Bill filed application for membership this week and it will be acted upon at the January meeting.

Frank Worthy and his rejuvenated orchestra put on a real dance at the University gym last Saturday evening. It was a big night for local orchestras. Jimmy used ten men at the Golf and Country Club. Tommye was cheering up the Shriners while John Patty and the Rounders were tooting the blues for the dentists. Joe Gattis and his Merrymakers hit the trail for Mineral Park Springs, leaving Uncle John Washburn with the only idle band in town. We understand that John's boys would rather rehearse at his house than play anyway.

Herman Dodds has asked this column to tell all his old acquaintances that his election to the Execution Board has not made him one bit high-hat, and that he will gladly speak to any fellow member whom he should happen to pass on the street.

Earl VanArsdale slapped the bass so much the other night at the gym that he had to tape up the ole hand before intermission.

Among the thousands of people to witness the Steinborn-Londos match at the auditorium could be seen the faithful of the local in their usual 50-cent seats.

We wish the committee of Cohn, Worthy and VanArsdale would begin functioning and tell us how to raise money. We are of the opinion that President Summers should have called it a commission.

Brother VanDeventer, who is showing the musicians of Atlanta just how to play a saxophone, was a welcome guest at the last meeting. We hope that he can come up often.

Joe Gattis and his Merrymakers were given a lot of praise for the splendid music they played at the Layman's Dinner Club a few weeks ago. They were announced as playing through the courtesy of Local No. 80. Things like that really help.

WITH THE ELECTRICIANS

By E. E. CROSBY

Some important business to be taken care of next meeting. Every one should be present.

Looks like L. L. Lowe and W. B. Dyche ought to be well fed by now. They have been lighting up Williams & French's restaurant.

The boys from the shops who worked on Market street's "Greater White Way" sure made thinks look real colorful.

Brother Jack Frost received a very warm reception while working on Market street's "Greater White Way" Sunday morning.

W. P. Howard was elected business manager of the local last meeting.

Ira Patten had to make a hurried run up to Soddy the first of the week, and, boys, believe me, he brought back a big sack of fresh meat. Let's get together and call on him and if W. Worley hasn't got there ahead of us maybe we can get a feed.

Ed Carroll finally was able to get the Ford back together and took W. P. Howard for a ride to LaFayette. Hope they don't have to walk back.

W. D. London, when asked what he was talking to himself about, just said, "Red, amber, blue, yellow, green."

Jesse Clark says if Santa gets as far as Chattanooga and has anything left to be sure to send him on to Ringgold, Ga.

Brother Fred Adamson sure does shake a mean ladder.

W. M. Stillwell wants to know who would have ever thought it was so far from Sixth to Ninth street on Market.

Tom Tucker would like to know why L. L. Lowe stayed so long in front of the State theater last Friday night.

Official Denied Compensation

Raleigh, N. C.—The North Carolina supreme court held that an executive vice-president of a corporation who is skilled in the performance of duties that do not lie within the field of duties of an ordinary workman or employe is not an employe within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act and consequently his heirs are not entitled to compensation.

The vice-president was killed while in New York negotiating trust contracts and other business for his company. The North Carolina industrial commission ruled that he came under the workmen's compensation act. The superior court of Durham county reversed the decision of the commission, and the supreme court sustained the superior court.

ROCHESTER SEEKS MILLIONS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Rochester, N. Y.—The Rochester civic committee on unemployment sent out 1,150 personal solicitors to make a house-to-house canvass to persuade people to buy more goods to stimulate business and indirectly provide employment. The drive was expected to uncover and make available millions of dollars of hoarded money. Home owners were asked to pledge themselves to hire men for repair work.

Stranger—Why aren't you in school, my little man?

Child—Hell, lady, I'm only four.

SYRACUSE CARPENTERS WIN PREVAILING WAGE RULING

Syracuse, N. Y.—Building forms for concrete is carpenters' work. The prevailing rate of wages for carpenters in Syracuse on June 17, 1930, was $1.20 an hour.

This was the decision of State Industrial Commissioner Frances Perkins in the controversy of Carpenters' Union No. 12 of Syracuse with the Bates & Rogers Construction company, Inc., of New York and Chicago. The decision is a victory for the union.

The company had the contract for the erection of a road viaduct here, which was the first construction step in the elimination of grade crossings.

Part of the work was building forms for concrete. Although the men who built the forms used saws and hammers, the contractors claimed the work was not carpentry and paid the workers 80 cents an hour. The union claimed the work was carpentry, and that the men were carpenters and entitled to the union rate as the legal prevailing wage rate.

Miss Perkins' decision upheld the claim of the union. The men who built the forms are now entitled to an additional 40 cents an hour.

John Ryan, of New York, international organizer of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, and William S. Quinn, secretary of Carpenters' Union No. 12, handled the case for the carpenters before James Brady, who represented the state industrial commissioner.

WAGE REDUCTIONS EAT UP DROP IN LIVING COSTS

New York.—"Even for those who have jobs," declares the Labor Bureau, Inc., "widespread wage cuts and the prevalence of part-time work have more than eaten up the gain from cheaper prices during recent months. With living costs down only 10 per cent, even fully emp workers are suffering a reducti living standards."

John T. O'Connor To Be Honor Guest At Social Session

Presence of Knoxville Mayor Will Feature "Get-Together."

Birthright and Cheek Also Probable Guests—Arrangements Committee Promises Entertaining Program Monday Night.

JOHN T. O'CONNOR

John T. O'Connor, one of the well-known trades unionists in the south, and who incidentally is mayor of the city of Knoxville, will be a guest of honor at Central Body's get-together session Monday night at Central labor hall, and the presence of the distinguished Tennessean will of itself insure a capacity audience for the occasion.

George W. Perry, chairman of the special committee arranging for the event, asked The Labor World to stress the fact that, while a more or less elaborate program is being arranged, there will be no long and tiresome addresses. Mr. O'Connor, who will, of course, feature the program, will come more as a counsellor and friend than to deliver a speech," and those who have had the pleasure of hearing him—and few local trades unionists have not—are well aware of his unusual ability to deliver a message which is both interesting and instructive.

It is possible also, said Mr. Perry, that W. C. Birthright, secretary-treasurer of the Journeymen Barbers' International union, another outstanding Tennessee labor official, and W. E. Cheek, secretary of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, will both be on hand. Mr. Birthright is said to have stated privately that he will make an effort to attend, and Mr. Cheek declared that he would make every effort to accept the invitation of the committee.

With these well-known unionists to furnish the more serious feature of the evening, the committee is preparing an entertainment program which will be outstanding. Some of the best local talent available is being sought, with indications that enough "acts" will be secured to make a reasonably lengthy program.

A representative of the American Tea and Coffee company will be on hand with a plentiful supply of steaming coffee to wash down sandwiches provided by the refreshment subcommittee, and a good union-labeled cigar will be available for everyone present.

The meeting will be open to all trades unionists. Extra chairs will be provided, and arrangements are being made to care for several hundred. M. H. Ortwein will call the session to order at 7:30, and will immediately turn the festivities over to the program committee.

Molders Hold Fine Session

Members of Local 53 Enjoy Smoker and Elect Officers for the Coming Year.

"The best meeting old Local 53 has had in years," was the way James Connor, veteran official of the molders' union, described the smoker and get-together staged last Friday night in connection with the annual election of officers.

"We had a splendid attendance," the old-timer continued, "and an address by Paul J. Aymon was an inspiration to each and every one who attended. Mr. Aymon reviewed the accomplishments of the iron molders' union since the time, many years ago, when he himself worked at the trade, and offered some sound advice and counsel relating to our future duties.

"While we have had a bad year of unemployment and wage-slashing, members of Local 53 realize that after the turn in the road we will be in position to continue the progress which has been temporarily delayed by conditions over which we had no control. Our members have taken heart, and you may expect us to do our share for the entire movement during the coming year."

Officers elected, according to Mr. Connor, are:

President—Taylor Buchanan.

Vice-President—Tommy Read.

Financial Secretary—C. A. Carpenter.

Treasurer—R. L. Mowery.

Recording Secretary—Wert Cordell.

Corresponding Secretary — James Connor.

Janitor—Sherley Farr.

Timekeeper—Tom Lawhorn.

Trustees—Charley White, John Hall, Tommy Read.

Machinists Name Fisher Treasurer

Fisher, long-time member of Lodge 96, Machinists, was named treasurer of that organization Tuesday night, succeeding P. H. Turley, who had occupied that position for many years. Election of Mr. Fisher completed the official family of the lodge for the coming year, all other officers having been chosen at the regular December meeting. Installation will take place in January. It has been announced whether the usual custom to joint installation with the Machinists' lodge, 1450, will be followed. Members of both lodges declared that it would probably be the procedure.

Rail Carmen Also "Set" for New Year

Local 211, Railway Carmen, is "all set" to go into 1932 with hopes for a prosperous season ahead, according to J. W. Fuller, recording secretary. Mr. Fuller reports the following from his local:

"At the regular December meeting, Lookout Lodge No. 211, Brotherhood Railway Carmen of America, elected officers for the new year as follows: W. S. Lide, president; J. A. G. Williams, vice-president; J. W. Fuller, recording secretary (re-elected); J. A. Swing, treasurer (re-elected); G. W. Fuller, financial secretary (re-elected); G. C. Smith, trustee (3 years).

"The newly elected president has made the following appointments: J. H. Wood, guide; R. V. Shelton, warden; H. S. Rice, sentinel; B. H. Roy, chaplain.

"The installation ceremonies will be held on the next regular meeting night, which is January 14, and at this time delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council will be appointed."

In the last three issues of The Labor World you published on the front page a list of advertisers appearing therein. WOMEN TO LOSE JOBS.

All state departments under the supervision of Gov. C. Ben Ross, of Idaho, will dismiss married women whose husbands are employed, according to announcement from the governor's office. The governor said that his action was taken in order to furnish employment for as many families as possible. Wives of disabled war veterans will not be affected.

'Twas the Night Before Christmas

'TWAS the night before Christmas, when all through the house

Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse:

The stockings were hung by the chimney with care,

In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there;

The children were nestled all snug in their beds,

While visions of sugar-plums danced in their heads.

—Clement Clarke Moore.

The Holiest of Days

"This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it. Save now, we beseech Thee, O Lord; O Lord, we beseech Thee send now prosperity. O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; for His loving kindness endureth forever."—Psalms 118:24-25-29.

All the joys of the Christmas season; all the spirit of good-will; all the effort for peace among men throughout the earth; all the spirit of charity in the hearts of men, has been created through the advent of the Son of God. Born on the first Christmas Day in Bethlehem, among the lowly, cradled in a manger, apprenticed as a lad, laboring as a carpenter, dying as a Savior for mankind; betrayed by his friends, scorned by the wealthy, opposed by the rulers, crucified, living or dying, He has been the friend of the weak, the despairing, the oppressed, those who rejoice and those who sorrow. The Son of God, the King of Kings, He has given us a Merry Christmas.

A.F.L. Survey Shows Workers Bear Brunt Of Business Slump

Wage Losses Since 1929 Cause Untold Suffering.

Millionaires Prosper While Standards of Masses Are Constantly Lowered—Reforms to Be Demanded by Organized Labor.

Washington, Dec. 23.—The workers are the chief sufferers from the business depression of the last two years.

They have suffered in loss of earnings and loss of jobs.

The millions of the unemployed have had their earnings totally destroyed.

Millions more have had their earnings drastically reduced either by part time work at standard wage rates or full time work at reduced wage rates.

The workers have also suffered from long hours despite increased output and the unemployed army.

Two years of the depression have inflicted untold poverty and distress on those whose brain and brawn contribute the major element in the production of wealth.

The outlook for the coming year is simply a continuation of the distress of the last two years.

These are the high lights of the business and labor review of 1931 made public in the December Monthly Survey of Business of the American Federation of Labor.

"Business depression is said to be a cure for the unbalance and the inefficiencies which develop with prosperity and expansion," the federation survey declares.

"In a negative way it does make necessary adjustments.

Production Reduced 30 Per Cent.

"Instead of raising consuming power to support production, depression reduces production to the level of an inadequate consuming power.

"For the first ten months of this year, production of our mines and factories had fallen 30 per cent from the 1929 average of physical volume—back to the level of 1922.

Building Drops 52 Per Cent.

"Building construction for the first eleven months had dropped 52 per cent from the 1928 high level, that is, below the 1922 average.

"Not only has surplus production been eliminated; we have gone back almost to the bottom levels of the last depression, although we have twelve million more persons in our population to provide for.

"If it were possible for depression simply to correct the unbalance of economic forces left by prosperity, the adjustment would be comparatively easy, and depressions would be short.

Jobless Workers Lose Buying Power.

"But this it not what happens.

"Once business starts to decline, workers are laid off, buying power is drastically reduced, the unbalance becomes vastly worse.

"The orgy of deflations grows and depression forces drag business precipitously downward with no more control than the forces which brought unbalanced expansion in prosperity.

Wage Earners Lose $11,000,000,00.

"At present, wage-earners' yearly buying power is below the 1929 level by $11,000,000,000.

"They have lost, through unemployment and wage cuts nearly twice as much as they gained in the seven years of prosperity.

"Not only in this an immense human loss which will leave its crippling effect permanently on millions of men, women and children through undernourishment and deterioration. It is also a powerful economic force leading to further depression."

Business Volume Shrinks.

The survey points out that because of reduced purchasing power of the masses, department store sales have fallen 18 per cent below 1929, passenger automobile registrations have declined 61 per cent, and 17,000 retail stores have failed during the year.

Prices Shrivel.

Prices of industrial products are 23 per cent below 1929, and farm prices have fallen 44 per cent. The market prices of stocks, bonds and real estate mortgages have also shriveled enormously.

Business 44 Per Cent Below Normal.

"By October, 1931, two years after the stock market collapse," the federation survey continues, "depression forces had reduced business activity to 44 per cent below normal.

Unequal Distribution of Income.

"Certain adjustments have been made, but several fundamental changes have yet to be accomplished.

"We have made little progress in the distribution of income.

"The effort to avoid wage cuts is a step in the right direction and has helped to maintain workers' incomes.

149 Millionaires Get $350,000,000.

"But while workers have lost nearly one-third of their entire 1929 income this year, and total wage payments are back to 1922 levels, we still had 149 millionaires in 1930—twice as many as at the peak of post-war prosperity—and they received $350,000,000 income.

"Although many firms have reduced dividends in 1931, total dividends were not far from the 1929 level.

More Firms Cut Wages.

"This year through October only 1,927 firms have reduced or omitted dividends, while in manufacturing industries alone 2,600 firms have reduced wages.

"Over 3,300 corporations have paid dividends in the first eleven months of 1931, and 675 paid extra or increased dividends.

Long Hours of Labor.

"Likewise in the hours of work, fundamental readjustments have as yet made small progress.

"There is at present only enough work on our farms, factories, railroads and elsewhere to give thirty-five hours work a week for everyone, if all who want work are to have a job.

7-Hour Day and 5-Day Week.

"Industry cannot keep its wage-earner forces employed or maintain their buying power unless hours are reduced to a seven-hour day and a five-day week.

"Surely wage-earners have the right to earn an honest living.

"Already an effort is being made to reduce hours to prevent unemployment and many firms are co-operating. But the movement must be nation-wide before the maladjustment can be corrected."

Third Year of Distress Predicted.

"Unquestionably recovery from this depression will be a long process," the survey continues.

"We must look ahead to at least a year of unemployment almost at present levels.

Unemployment Increases.

"With the widespread improvement in plant efficiency introduced in the last two years, we are continually increasing technological unemployment.

"Unemployment funds cannot last; the adjustment of work hours is essential.

"Industrial activity will continue for some time from 20 to 30 per cent below 1929.

Reduced Living Standards.

"The American people in general must live on a much smaller budget this year.

"Mantenance of wages is essential, and increases wherever possible to improve buying power.

"Since 675 firms increased dividend payments this year, clearly many are able to increase wages."

Congressmen Oppose Cuts for U. S. Workers

Capper and LaGuardia Declare Remuneration of Government Employes Is Not Too High.

Washington.—Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, and Representative LaGuardia, of New York, joined with the American Federation of Labor in opposing pay cuts for government employes.

"I do not think congress is ready to commit the United States government to the shameful practice of wage cutting," Senator Capper said. "I deplore the suggestion and I want to record my ardent opposition to any such program. I shall do everything I can to defeat a wage-cutting scheme if it should come before the senate. Government employes are not paid too much for the fine work they do."

Representative LaGuardia said: "If any attempt is made to reduce the salaries of government employes at this session, the greatest fight that ever took place in the house will occur. The government should set an example for the nation by maintaining the present salary levels."

Negroes Leaving North To Seek Jobs in South

Clarksdale, Miss.—Planters in many parts of the Mississippi delta report that negroes in large numbers are migrating out of the north back to their old homes in search of work. In some communities the number of those who have come recently is proving a serious handicap for the charitable organizations.

The negroes say that they are unable to make a living in northern cities because of the economic depression and they believed that they might find something to do in their former homes.

The Star of Hope

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the King, behold, wise men from the east came to Jerusalem, saying, 'Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we saw his star in the east and are come to worship him.'

We are inclined to think of the Nativity story as a thing for the ears of children, and of our telling them the story that begins, as supplemented with the imagery of the seers—with the prominent star shining high in the heavens, its guard gorgeously attired Western coming out of the East astride their lumbering and lofty camels, its background of the little town of Bethlehem famed in song and story and dear to the heart of little folks.

WM. L. MOSS

We have always thought that the children, once having been impressed with the beautiful features of Christ's birth, would remember Him always as their lowly-born Savior who was made flesh and came to dwell among men even as little children is made flesh and comes to dwell among other children of the earth.

We have tried to relegate the story of the Bethlehem star to the regions of myth and allegory and have made of it a thing for children's entertainment, forgetting its larger and more portentous meaning.

The star that once shone so brightly over Bethlehem is more than merely a picturesque and highly-teachable "Christmas story." Ever since its appearance in the heavens that night some nineteen hundred years ago it has spoken to men of the birth of One who has softened humanity's heart, lifted men and women from the depths of despair and the thralls of slavery, burst the galling chains of sin for weak souls and turning men's minds from the ways of murder and oppression toward thoughts of the nobler values in life.

The Bethlehem star is the symbol of men's hopes for a better world. Nothing else in the course of the centuries since it shone brightly on that Christmas morn so long, long ago has taken its place in this regards. When that Bethlehem star becomes dimmed in the minds of men the great hope for a new order of men who would love each other as brothers will be seen also to have become faded!

When the Bethlehem "Christmas story" is thought of as only a story that entertains then the star as the bright symbol of Him who came that men might have life and have it more abundantly is forgotten and as the star has become forgotten so has remembrance of Him also faded.

May that star's radiance, beauty and glory forever be enshrined in man's heart, not as a thing only to delight our little ones—yes, we want to keep the star for that purpose too—but we want the star to always burn brightly before men's eyes as the ever-lightgiving symbol of humanity's old, old hope—the brotherhood of man.

BILIOUS

"I have used Black-Draught . . . and have not found anything that could take its place. I take Black-Draught for biliousness. When I get bilious, I have a nervous headache and a nervous, trembling feeling that unfits me for my work. After I take a few doses of Black-Draught, I get all right. When I begin to get bilious, I feel tired and run-down, and then the headache and trembling. But Black-Draught relieves all this."—H. C. Hendrix, Homerville, Ga.

Her Christmas Guest

by H Louis Reybold

"THAT will do, thank you, Elise," and Elizabeth dismissed her maid with a smile. It was her custom each Christmas to entertain whatever guest the Charities sent to her, without Elise's help.

Once it had been a down-and-out ex-missionary well along in years, once a lonely girl from the West, and several times thin little waifs from the tenements. On those latter occasions Elizabeth had been glad of the fragrant tree which always stood in one corner of the apartment, alight with colored bulbs and hung with varied gifts.

There was no one in sight now—wait, wasn't that some one just turned the corner?

A moment later the bell rang and if, when she ran down the stairs and answered it, Elizabeth was decidedly taken back at the young man who stood before her, it is probable that he, too, had his moment of surprise as he gazed at the slender vision in a white dress.

"Miss Lowry, of the Charities sent me—" he began.

"Oh, yes," nodded Elizabeth quickly. She mustn't let him think for an instant she had hesitated. She had absolute confidence in anyone Miss Lowry, head of the board, might send. "Hang your coat and hat on the costumer at the head of the stairs. And, let me see, your name—"

Still the young man seemed a bit uncertain. Then, "Drake Gibson," he said, resolutely and abruptly.

Elizabeth breathed an unconscious sigh of relief, as she preceded him up the carpeted stairs. After the first embarrassing moments, she had always found that things went more easily.

Yet it was hard to believe, during the meal which followed, that her guest was the sort of down-and-outer with which the Charities were wont to deal.

He talked interestingly and entertainingly and before she realized it, dinner was at an end and there remained as part of the festivities only the ceremony of choosing gifts from the tree.

She had rather decided to pass that part of the entertainment up when she remembered that she had hidden in a red cheesecloth stocking filled with candy a tiny purse with a five-dollar goldpiece in it. Nor was she to be blamed for supposing that a gift of money so tactfully presented would not be amiss to anyone willing to accept a dinner from an utter stranger.

So, in her winning manner, Elizabeth suggested that they each choose a gift from the tree, and laughed when he carefully untied a little furry monkey.

Then she took down the stocking full of old-fashioned Christmas candy.

"At a proper tree there is always something to take home," she said.

He smiled and accepted it. Then, to her horror, drew out his knife and cut the red string at the top.

"Have some?" he invited.

"No—that is—yes, thank you," she said in confusion, and watched him eat several pieces rather absent-mindedly. He seemed to be considering something.

Then he pulled out the tiny purse and, with a frown, opened it.

Strangely enough, she saw no sudden blush or sign of self-consciousness. Rather he seemed almost relieved.

"This means that I must tell you," he said gravely. "And I'm very much ashamed of myself. You see, I've accepted your hospitality under false pretense. I'm—well, I'm only Miss Lowry's nephew home from globe-trotting for my paper. She asked me to stop and tell you that the old lady she was going to send to your annual Christmas dinner had not shown up. You made the mistake of thinking I was the one and—oh, I've no proper apology but you know a fool reporter never turns down an experience of any kind." He paused and regarded her so wistfully that Elizabeth's anger melted. After all, it was Christmas time when one should be forgiving.

"I'll promise never, never to do it again!" he said with such an air of little-boyishness that Elizabeth laughed in spite of herself.

Neither one of them realized then that all their Christmases were to be spent together.

The Christmas Gift

by Mary Graham Bonner

TWO stockings hung from either side of the mantlepiece of an old-fashioned room. They were well filled. They bulged inartistically but generously at every possible place. Over the pictures on the walls were large branches of spruce green. In one corner of the room stood a small Christmas tree, gayly bedecked with tinsel and favors and on the very top was perched a cardboard Santa Claus who still appeared as ruddy and festive as he had when first he had stood there seventeen years before.

The stockings which hung so heavily looked as though they would drop their load any minute but they were securely fastened and held down at the top by heavy books.

"Mumsie," cried a girl's voice. The front door had just opened.

"Hello," came back the answer from the woman sitting before the fire in the living room. She gazed with half wistful eyes at the stockings, then she called, although she knew the answer—

"Yes! Who is it?"

"Oh, Mumsie," the girl exclaimed as she came in the door, "how lovely the house looks! And you've trimmed the stairway since I've been gone. Did you put some green in the pulpit?"

Louise Waterbury ran out of the living room and up the stairs, around the bend of which was an opening which strongly resembled a pulpit architecturally. There again and again as a child Louise had preached "sermons" to Mumsie who had sat on the stairs, the sole listener to her oft-repeated text and sermon on the theme she loved the best. It gave her a chance for so many repetitions, and again and again, in her own way she would give her text.

"'Sam'el, Sam'el'; and he answered 'Here am I.'" Again and again the Lord would call Samuel in Louise's recitation. If she had gathered some of her friends together at any time she had formed a choir processional and they had added to the service by singing "From Greenland's Icy Mountains." It was such a graphic hymn. She could see India's coral strand, the great icy mountains of Greenland and the hot soil of Africa—all vividly in her mind. She was glad the hymn had been written by some one who had traveled—she was sure it must have been.

Yes, the pulpit had been decorated with great branches of green spruce and pine and hemlock. There was nothing in the house which didn't show that it was Christmas time and the room where they sat, with its four windows, its wreaths at each one, its white woodwork, its huge open fire dancing gayly and throwing shadows and lights and making a wonderful series of fantastic, fanciful pictures on the walls, all breathed the spirit of the season.

So they had sat every Christmas eve now for seventeen years. Mumsie had waited until Louise was a year old to decorate the house.

"Hadn't we better be having supper now? We've a long evening ahead."

So these two celebrated their Christmas together, one of them old, the other young. And when Louise said good-night to Mumsie one little happy tear did escape her, and Mumsie felt it on her cheek.

"What's the matter, dearie?"

"Nothing at all!" Louise exclaimd. "Only I've been thinking that the most wonderful gift of all, the most beautiful Christmas gift, or gift of life or anything and everything, is the way you have always made us have so much happiness and so much joy out of keeping 'days' and entering into the spirit of them, and in making the day-by-day living something so beautiful and so happy. Oh, Mumsie, you put the spirit of Christmas into every moment of the year."

And Mumsie hugged Louise and said:

"My dear, you're the secret of it all. It is because a young, young creature such as you, has never, never made me feel old!"

The Other Fellow—at Christmas

Sometimes it's better to have loved and lost than to be the other fellow, especially at Christmas.

PENSIONS SAVE MONEY.

A saving of $500,000 in municipal relief expenditures for aged persons in need will be affected through the inauguration of the old age security law recently enacted in New Jersey, according to a report of the state pension survey commission.

Our Christmas Gift Record

by Clara Agee Hays

AN OLD, old lady told me something strange one time.

"Santa Claus," she said, "is the saint of little children. But there is a grown-ups' saint at Christmas time, too, who stands beside us measuring our gifts and recording them truly. He wouldn't judge by the means we use. For," the old, old lady smiled sweetly, "love makes a gift great at Christmas time."

In a small bungalow at the edge of a western town, a woman named Martha, and her daughter, Ruth, sewed. They and their house were a bit shabby. But that does not matter at Christmas time.

"Dear me!" Martha sighed as she took the last stitches, "I dread Chirstmas every year. It means work and sacrifice. I could have had a good pair of stockings for what I paid for Aunt Caroline's present. But I'd be ashamed to send her less."

"Yes!" Ruth snapped. "She and Anna probably think we're trash anyway. And look at what they give us! Last year Anna sent a bunch of fancy boxes. Imagine what on earth we'd do with them!"

"Anna's selfish, that's what!" Martha nodded with sudden conviction. "She wouldn't work the way you've had to. She'd think it was beneath her."

The idea enraged Ruth. She glared. "I'll show her some day, the inane snooty thing! I'm going to be somebody. And she with her pampered life—!"

Martha nodded. "She's just like her mother, Caroline always had to have her way. Always haughty and proud.

"Anna's Selfish, That's What!" Martha Nodded.

I never could understand why your uncle Lemuel married her."

"Huh!" Ruth wrote their names on the tags. "Me, either! What a life he must lead with those two."

"With them it's always 'me and mine.'"

"And Anna is as crude as she can me. Remember the time—"

But the recording saint went on. He had found the value of their gifts. And he was anxious to see Aunt Caroline and Anna.

They were in a large living room before a merry fire. There were great holly wreaths in the beautiful windows. And from the kitchen came the song of the cook. Suppose she had been the most expensive cook in the city. That has nothing to do with Christmas.

Anna smiled across at her mother "Almost through with Aunt Martha's present?"

Aunt Caroline nodded. "Yes. And if you've finished Ruth's handkerchiefs, we'll get the package off. I hope Martha likes this."

"She will. Aunt Martha's a dear. Wouldn't it be great if they could spend Christmas with us some time?" Anna's eyes glowed.

"Wouldn't it! Too bad you and Ruth can't know each other better. You're so near the same age. Martha writes that Ruth is working hard. She's going to amount to something!"

Anna arose to write the names on the tags. "I'll bet she does. Remember when she was a little girl, she used to be so ambitious? I'm going to use this pretty tag on her package. Isn't it fun getting things off to them! I wish we could send them something nicer."

Caroline smiled. "Martha is sensitive and I wouldn't hurt her by sending things so much better than she could afford for us. Little things can express our love just as well. I'd be happy with only a card from them. It's the thoughts, you know. . . ."

Anna smiled and placed each package tenderly into a box.

And the packages passed each other in the mails. By chance they had the same kind of tags:

"Merry Christmas and love from Ruth and Aunt Martha."

"Merry Christmas and love from Anna and Aunt Caroline."

But the grown-ups' Santa made very different notations. For Christmas is a memorial to a Prince whose greatest commandment was "Love one another" and who said "Judge not" and "revile not."

What will our Christmas gift record be? For who can prove that the old, old lady was not right?

Santa Will Provide an Up-to-Date Christmas

SANTA CLAUS is a decidedly progressive old chap. He keeps strictly abreast of the times, and in his work employs only modern-day methods. Once he went plodding over the fields in a sleigh no faster than reindeers could gallop. It took him a long time, but he managed to make the rounds.

Then came the automobile. Santa got a big red one and hitched trailers on behind. He could get around faster. He carried bigger loads, got to more homes and made more children happy. When airplanes flew over the North pole Santa got another idea. He believed that planes would be better for his long trips and for skipping from housetop to housetop. He is hardly built for an air pilot, but nobody flies faster nor farther than plump, old Santa.

He does not fancy zeppelins, but he is sure that in another year or two he may be able to broadcast Christmas to the children by radio. As soon as carriers are invented to fly through the air, directed and landed by radio energy, old Santa will sit on his mountain of northern ice and broadcast an up-to-date Christmas to all the world.—William L. Gaston.

One Merry Christmas, One Happy New Year

"MOTHER, mother, Mrs. Thimble is going to give old Miss Jenny a wonderful Christmas present—the thing she wants most in all the world—do you know what it is?"

"Why, no, Johnnie, I'm afraid I don't. What is it?"

"Well, it's two children; it's twins."

"What do you mean, Johnnie? Miss Jenny isn't married. She can't have any children. I know she has always wanted some, but she wouldn't adopt any, and now she is so old and all—it's ridiculous, Johnnie; don't talk such nonsense."

"That isn't nonsense, mother. Of course, Mrs. Thimble didn't say she was going to give Miss Jenny any children, but she did say she was going to give her a lot of presents and nice things, such as a sweater, and a lot of things she can't afford for herself, so that she will have at least one Merry Christmas and one Happy New Year in her life, and I just figured out that that was the best kind of twins an old woman like her could possibly have."—Harold L. Cook.

CHRISTMAS STUFF

"You say you and Tom have had a quarrel—and just before Christmas?"

"Yes. He thinks he'll get out of giving me a present, but I'll make up with him just about a week before Christmas and get a present twice as expensive as I otherwise would."

One kiss for each berry was the original mistletoe ritual, a berry being removed as a kiss was taken.

PAY CUTS GAIN.

According to "Facts for Workers," published by the Labor Bureau, Inc., New York City, "A conspicuous rise in the number of wage decreases recurred in September with 376 recorded as against 238 in August. The figure for the latter month (subject to revision) is the highest since the depression began. Accompanying the outburst of wage cuts there has come a notable increase in strikes. The building industry appears to lead the list, indicative of the concerted attack now being made by building trades employers on the wage scales in their industry."

In an Emergency— or the day's Routine..

FLAMES raged through a big bakery at Memphis, Tenn.—$15,000 in orders were on file for delivery next day—what could be done?

While firemen were still pouring water on the flames, temporary telephone service was established. The bakery's Cincinnati, Dallas and St. Louis plants were called by long distance telephone, and arrangements made to fill orders from these branches. Then distributors were notified by telephone that their orders would arrive on time as usual the next day. At a cost of about $160 for telephone calls, $15,000 worth of business was saved.

That is an example of the value of the telephone in an emergency. But the ordinary affairs of everyday life emphasize to every member of the family what a dependable, labor-saving necessity the telephone really is.

Fair weather or foul, the druggist—the doctor—the grocer—the friend next door or in a distant city—are all within the limits of your voice when you lift your telephone receiver.

And, though you may use it five times a day or fifty, the cost of telephone service is so low that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

ROSS MERVIN paused a moment before he went up the rickety stairs that led to the room where dumb "Soupy" Sam would rent him a bed for the night for the sum of ten cents.

He caught sight of a slight, girlish figure staggering along the street toward him. She stopped suddenly with groping hands.

"Something wrong?" he asked gently.

"I guess—I'm blind! My eyes—" were the whispered words he caught.

Her wide eyes did seem sightless to him. He took her arm quickly under his. "Perhaps it is just for the moment. I'll be glad to take you home if you tell me where to go."

She was a slight thing, and pretty under other circumstances, Ross thought. He learned in that brief but eventful walk that she had been studying art in the city, but success had not come her way. The Christmas rush in the stores had given her an opportunity to earn money. The lights had bothered her after the strain her eyes had been under in her studying and that night on her way home darkness deeper than the night had come over them.

He suggested getting in touch with the police, but she begged him not to. "I have my rent paid until Sunday night, and if I rest tomorrow my eyes may be all right. After that—after that—"

A rigid faced landlady came to the door. In a moment Ross glimpsed the situation. The woman heard the explanation with a scowl; and he decided to wait until he had seen the helpless girl to her room. Then he said quietly:

"Look after her well, and I will see that you are paid."

"She has her room paid until Sunday night. After that the city will take care of her—unless she has the cash Sunday night. You look like a bum to me, but if you get the money, all right," the woman said shortly.

Ross smiled. "You have my number; but I'll have the money. Be good to her. She's a mere kid and up against it."

"So am I," she replied sharply.

The next morning early he was at an agency. He stepped to the desk just in time to hear a man say, "That's no job for me!" and go on.

"I'll take it," Ross agreed.

The clerk smiled. "This job is driving a truck for the construction company at Millburg. The truck carries explosives for their dynamiting."

For two days Ross drove the truck. Saturday night he received his two days' pay and hurried to 80 East street, paid the grim landlady rent for another week, and talked for one long happy hour with the girl he had vowed to aid. Her eyes had improved a little, and under his quiet determination she agreed to rest during the coming week.

"I—I don't see why you are so good to me," she said hesitatingly at parting.

Her hand sought his. "But—your voice out of the darkness—I know! O, I know!"

The next week, the fates seemed to take a hand in remolding his life, and one event followed another speedily.

lie looked up from his engine to see his father's fur-coated figure and hear him say:

"Lad, one of my engineer friends here spotted you and told me. It's almost Christmas. I feel that I have been unjust to you—but won't you come home?"

Ross' mind lingered on the word "Christmas," and he said simply, "I will—if I can bring some one with he. No, not my wife, but a girl I hope to make my wife."

So it came about that one eventful evening Ross bent over a pale, flower-like face and looked into dark eyes to which a great city physician had brought the blessing of sight; and she said:

"Dear, what a dream it seems! This beautiful home—and you with me! And just a few weeks ago, you and I down—"

"In the depths, sweetheart. I began to climb out the moment I saw you that night."

"And you took me with you—" the chime of far-away bells broke into her words with distant music—"what are those bells?" she asked wonderingly.

He touched her lips with his. "Christmas bells, little girl, ringing out the old for us—forever!"

Not just the holly, not just the pine
Nor flaming of candles, makes Christmas so fine,
But the spirit of friendship, that reaches afar,
To wish Merry Christmas, wherever you are.

"Union-made, but does not bear a label" is a stock phrase which we should ignore. Demand the UNION LABEL.

"SAY, can I get some trimmings for a Christmas tree? Fix up the best assortment you've got, please."

Lena Masters looked up at the sound of the pleasant voice and a smile flashed across her face. "In just a moment," she answered, "as soon as I get this package tied up."

Carefully she went over the counter, selecting such things as she would put on a Christmas tree herself. Yards and yards of silver tinsel, boxes of Christmas snow, numerous tree ornaments, several Santa Claus figures, and all the other things that go to make a Christmas tree a thing to exclaim about. And on the top layer of the box she put a beautiful shining silver star, carefully wrapped in tissue paper. Then she tied the package and handed it across the counter.

"Somebody's going to have a lovely Christmas," she said. "I can imagine how beautiful this tree will look.

The man took the box and started to move away, then returned rather slowly. "Pardon me," he stammered, "but—but there was something about the way you said that that set me to thinking. Do you have folks of your own, and—and a Christmas tree and everything?"

For a moment Lena Masters was silent, then as she looked into the strong, kind face, she answered: "The only relative I have, an uncle, lives in Montana, and—and I have never had a home Christmas. But—but I love the day just the same."

Then John Anderson told her something of his own life. He had gone away at twenty-two—had been sent abroad as the representative of a large concern—now, after five years he had come back at the request of his father, to help him with his business. His father and mother were growing old. And because he had come back, they wanted a Christmas tree, and so he had come for the fixings.

Later that evening, just as Lena Masters was getting ready for closing time, she looked up to find John Anderson standing by the counter. He was accompanied by a sweet-faced old lady—his mother, Lena knew even before he introduced them. "I just had to bring mother down," he said. "As soon as I told her about you today, she just insisted that you spend Christmas with us. You—you've got to see the Christmas tree, you know; you had a part in its making."

The days that followed were the happiest Lena Masters had ever known. The joy of Christmas was multiplied a hundred fold by the kindness and attention shown her. The Anderson family left nothing undone to make her happy. And they told her over and over again how much her coming had meant to them all. There was but one tiny cloud on her sky, the thought that this could not last forever.

But Lena Masters found the happiness that Christmas had brought her was going to be lasting. From now on, all the joy of happy home life and comradeship was going to be hers. For, as they stood beside the gleaming Christmas tree, John Anderson's hand reached out and clasped hers, and she heard him whisper: "Ever since I put that star on the Christmas tree, it—it seems like a symbol of the happiness that lies ahead for us two."

Snow at Christmastide

There is an inviting loveliness in the snowy Christmas. There's a fascination in watching a snowstorm, especially one at Yuletide, that is unsurpassed by the charm of any other aspect of nature. Snow is beauty obliterating the world. Its glamor is akin to that of moonlight, steeping the visible universe in radiant bloom. There is a power of gentleness in it that we seldom dream of. Snow is gentleness, chaste as the mountain air, virginally cool, compassionately adorning the faded earth.—American Magazine.

Always Memorable

Christmastide, with its warm spirit of fellowship, its renewal of old friendships, its generosity and jollity, is always an occasion to be remembered. —American Magazine.

Christmas in California A Century Ago

by Charles Frederick Wadsworth

WHEN one thinks of the traditions of Christmas celebration in New England, the Middle states, and even farther West, in the early part of the Nineteenth century, it is to vision snow-covered ground, sleigh rides, and the jingle of sleigh bells, with Christmas trees and Santa Claus, much as today in those sections. Whole families going visiting in the bob-sled, to partake of the Christmas feast built around the turkey!

Those were great times and days, and their annals live in the works of famous literati of the East coast when our Republic was comparatively young.

But at the same time a mighty civilization was being builded on the West coast, though how different was the Christmas observed in the sparsely settled and undeveloped land that is now California! And how few to leave record!

However, Albert Robinson, a clerk who left Boston for California in July, 1828, and after 110 days reached Valparaiso, and Monterey on February 15, 1829, has left in his "Life in California," published in the late forties, a description of a Christmas celebration held at the mission in San Diego that shows the contrast between such events on the east and west coasts at that time.

Robinson's business took him to various parts of the (now) state, and while on a visit from his headquarters in San Francisco to his friend Don Jose Antonio Estudillo, comandante of San Diego, wrote of the Christmas festivities he had witnessed:

"Don Jose Antonio . . . was ever on the alert seeking for some new device for my gratification. It was nearly time for the religious festival of 'la noche buena' (the holy night) and he directed the customary exhibition of the 'pastores.' They were rehearsing night after night, till at length Christmas arrived, and I had an opportunity of beholding the midnight mass and the subsequent performances.

"At an early hour illuminations commenced, fireworks were set off, and all was rejoicing. The church bells rang merrily, and long before the time of mass the pathways leading to the presidio were enlivened by crowds hurrying to devotion. I accompanied Don Jose Antonio, who procured for me a stand where I could see distinctly everything that took place. The mass commenced, Padre Vincente de Oliva (died 1845) officiated, and at the conclusion of the mysterious 'sacrificio' he produced a small image representing the infant Savior, which he held in his hands for all who chose to approach and kiss.

"After this, the tinkling of the guitar was heard without, the body of the church was cleared, and immediately commenced the harmonious sounds of a choir of voices. The characters entered in procession, adorned with appropriate costumes, and bearing banners. There were six females representing shepherdesses, three men and a boy.

"One of the men personated Lucifer, one a hermit, and the other Bartolo, a lazy vagabond, whilst the boy represented the archangel Gabriel. The story of their performance is partially drawn from the Bible, and commences with the angel's appearance to the shepherds, his account of the birth of our Savior and exhortation to them to repair to the scene of the manger.

"A dialogue is then carried on of considerable length relative to the attributes of the Deity, which ends in the submission of Satan.

"The whole is interspersed with songs and incidents that seem better adapted to the stage than the church.

"For several days this theatrical representation is exhibited at the principal houses, and the performers at the conclusion of the play are entertained with refreshments. The boys take an enthusiastic part in the performance, and follow about from house to house, perfectly enraptured with the comicalities of the hermit and Bartolo."

How different from the gay Christmas celebrations of California's present millions! And how different from what was taking place on the east coast!

(©, 1931, Western Newspaper Union.)

Speaking at a big mass meeting under the direction of the Rochester, N. Y., Central Trades and Labor council, William Collins, American Federation of Labor organizer, charged that international bankers were largely responsible for the present depression and called upon capitalists and manufacturers to accept organized labor's program for the relief and prevention of unemployment.

The Christmas Message

By ELIZABETH CLARKE HARDY
in Wisconsin Agriculturist

OH, CHRISTMAS BELLS that sweetly chime,
And Christmas lights that gleam and glow—
Oh, silent stars that softly shine
Across the world of frost and snow,
Ye fill the world with joy and light,
What message do you bring tonight?

Oh, Christmas trees with twinkling lights,
And shining branches bending low
With gifts that gladden all our hearts,
And thoughts of loving kindness show,
Ye bear the fruits of pure delight,
What message do you bring tonight?

Oh, radiant spirit of the day,
Thy message thrills the whole world o'er,
It fills the world with hope and joy
From zone to zone, from shore to shore,
'Tis meant for every human heart,
And none need stand alone, apart.

The peace, good will and Christmas cheer,
The shining lights, the magic tree,
The joy that thrills the Christian heart
For all the world is full and free,
The Christmas message from above
To all the world is love, is love.

Glittering Things

By Martha Banning Thomas

PERHAPS it's a healthy trait that most human beings like and are drawn to bright and glittering objects. At Christmas time this craving is satisfied in a hundred ways.

When we are children we look with awe upon the shimmer of tinsel on Christmas trees. The wings of the angel on the topmost peak seem like the wings of those heralds above Bethlehem who announced the coming of the Christchild. Our eyes shine half blinded by the glory of legend and expectation.

When we are older we become (as we think) more sophisticated. Tinsel on a larger scale. Bright lights, beautiful decorations, dazzling entertainment. The same child-like needs transposed into a more worldly manifestation. But we can't quite forget the stars or the moon. They attract us with a strange delight.

And when we are quite old and wise we know and admit that we must rely on something which shines beyond us, a bit out of reach. We remember the breathless moments of childhood and the blazing Christmas tree. We knew wonder in those days and found it precious.

We think of later years somewhat obscured by false values. Something more than tinsel: something less than simple pleasures—glitter, certainly, but little of that quality which yields the magic of happiness.

So perhaps we forget the middle years and go back to the earlier ones, feeding on the first joys of childhood.

The long festoons swinging gracefully among the green branches of the tree! The glimmer of make-believe icicles, the powder of make-believe snow, the cheerful flames of candles and the laughter of people we loved.

W. C. BIRTHRIGHT

Birthright Pays High Tribute to State Movement

Following is the address of W. C. Birthright, secretary of the Journeymen Barbers' International union, before Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night:

It is always gratifying to be privileged to visit Chattanooga and mingle with my friends in the labor movement, with whom I have had the pleasure of laboring for a number of years, and to attend a meeting of this character and say something encouraging to the great rank and file.

In the past years I have been privileged to visit many sections of the North American continent, and attend meetings of the local unions and central bodies, and am happy to say that the labor movement in Tennessee, as represented in this group tonight, is as militant and as conversant with the affairs which concern the workers as any labor movement I have had the pleasure of meeting with. The great labor movement of Tennessee has been the spark plug and incentive to organization of the workers of the south. While contributing to the uplift of the men and women of their state they have made their light so shine that it reflects the good work in the neighboring states, and as a result many have availed themselves of the opportunity of associating with their fellow workers through the organization as represented by the American Federation of Labor.

Tennessee Federation of Labor, past and present, has always subscribed to the principles and policies enunciated by the great federation of labor, and has always tried to conduct the affairs of the organization in a militant fashion to the end that the workers were always in a position to tell those who opposed our cause, whether industrially or politically, that they were going to fight for the rights of labor.

Mr. Cheek, my successor in office, will make a great secretary, and it will be my pleasure to render him every assistance possible so that we will have a greater and more militant organization in Tennessee. As for my colleague, Brother Hanly, you know his work so well that it needs no eulogy.

The capital question of the moment is, "How is business?" On every corner or any place you might visit that is the first question. Of course, the usual answer is that business is dull. Never before in the history of our nation have we faced such tremendous pictures of suffering and want as we face at this time.

One can hardly walk from his residence to his place of business in peace without being asked on the highways and byways for alms for the unfortunate, who are victims of this great machine age of overproduction and underconsumption.

Approximately ten million men and women unemployed in the United States of America, multiplied by four, aggregates some forty million souls, whose bodies are to clothe and whose mouths are to feed, and these millions are without visible means of support except through charity. You know the history of all nations which have fallen—when the wealth came under control of the very few, the end was inevitable. We in America live on traditions of our forefathers—that what was good for them is good for us. America must have

"Sinister Lobby of Corporate Interests" Dominated State Legislature, Hanly Declares

Legislative Chairman of Tennessee Federation Declares Great Corporations Powerful Enough to Prevent Consideration of Measures Designed to Place Tax on Their Products. "Depression" Hits Convict-Labor Contractors.

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Dec. 30.—The second extraordinary session of the Sixty-seventh general assembly adjourned sine die on Dec. 19. It assembled on Nov. 30.

There was also assembled on that day a sinister lobby of the corporate interests of this state.

Gov. Horton in a special message to the legislature advocated what was known as the Durham tax bill. This measure declared every occupation a privilege and taxed it as such. It fixed a flat rate of 5 per cent on all net incomes. It exempted $1,000 of the salary or wages of the individual. This outrageous proposal was tabled in the house.

Another measure sought to place a sales tax on electric current based on kilowatt hours. Repeated efforts were made to get this bill up for a vote in the house, but as it required a two-thirds vote to set it for a special order, the power interests were successful in preventing its consideration.

The corporations defeated a bill that sought to levy a severance tax on products severed from the soil. Coal and timber were exempted from the measure. The opposition to this proposal came from the American Zinc company, which owns a zinc mine at Mascot, the copper mining corporations, the marble companies and the sand and gravel interests. The state geologist did his bit toward the defeat of this bill.

A bill to further extend the corporation excise law was introduced, but the manufacturers' association was powerful enough to prevent this measure from being considered.

A bill to extend the Hall income tax law was passed. The Hall law levies a tax on the incomes from stocks and bonds. An effort was made in the senate to repeal this law, but it was unsuccessful.

An attempt was made to place a tax on chain stores. This bill was amended so as to exempt H. G. Hill from the operation of the bill. The author of the measure then withdrew it. An amendment was tacked onto the revenue bill placing a tax on chain stores, but this was killed by a conference committee.

It was discovered that the new code which becomes effective in 1932, levies an 8-cent tax on real estate.

The appropriations made by the regular session were reduced 15 per cent. This cut does not apply to the state treasurer, comptroller and secretary of state, nor to the judges and district attorneys-general.

A general income tax bill was passed. It exempts $2,500 of the income of a married person and allows $300 a year for each dependent. It also exempts $1,500 a year of the income of a single person, who is also allowed an exemption of $2,500 where he is the head of a family. A rate of 1 per cent is levied on the first $2,500 after all exemptions are allowed. It fixes a flat rate of 4 per cent on the net incomes of corporations. The Aluminum Company of America and other corporations tried to have the bill amended so as not to tax them on the profits from their interstate business, which constitutes about 85 per cent of their total income. They came near defeating the measure by a parliamentary maneuver. If this law is held constitutional by the supreme court it will prove to be the most progressive law enacted in Tennessee in a decade.

The general assembly was jockeyed into a position by the corporations where it went against least resistance and levied an additional tax of 1 cent a gallon on gasoline, which makes the tax 7 cents a gallon. In addition each automobile owner is taxed $2 for an identification device. Also $1,200,000 was transferred from the highway department to the general fund of the state.

The road contractors and material men, who are said to have contributed huge sums to elect Gov. Horton, defeated every effort to reduce to any material extent the amount of money that the highway department will have to spend for road purposes.

Gov. Horton, who is responsible for the mismanagement of the state's affairs, is still in office. Also the commissioner of highways, who has unguarded moments.

There is a movement by the friends of Hon. Hill McAlester to prevail upon him to again make the race for the democratic nomination for governor.

The depression seems to have hit the stove foundries in the state prison. These foundries are operated by the Liberty Stove and Range company and the Gray & Dudley company. The contract of the last named concern expired last June. The contract under which they worked prisoners in their stove foundry in the state prison provided that they were to employ a stipulated number of convicts at $1.50 a day. The arrangement under which they now operate provides for $1 a day, and they only work the number they require from day to day. I have been informed that these prison foundries have closed down.

Times Barber Shop Joins "Cut-Raters"

The Times Barber shop this week joined the "cut-raters," and the union card was removed. Two union employes, Clyde Garrett and Tom Turner, of course, left their jobs. It is understood Mr. Garrett will be located at Cochran's, 912-A Market street. Mr. Turner had not decided Tuesday where he would "hang his card."

The Times shop, it is understood, has never been successful, being "out of the beaten path," but those who are most conversant with affairs affecting the trade locally seriously doubt the wisdom of the proprietor in attempting to better his business by slashing prices to the level of the "back-bedroom" shop, and at the same time taking a "long chance" on securing the service of competent craftsmen.

Watson Renamed Plumbers' Chief

Frank Watson, president of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, was re-elected for 1932 at the annual election held by that organization this month. Others named with Mr. Watson were:

Vice-President—Barney Walker.
Financial Secretary—O. E. Cook.
Recording Secretary—G. F. Chapin.

Mr. Walker is the only new member of the Plumbers' official family, replacing F. R. Warren, who served as vice-president during the past year.

Comfort For The Jobless

CHEEK, HANLY HONOR GUESTS AT MEETING

Federation Officials Make Short Talks.

STATE BODY GAINS DESPITE DEPRESSION

Secretary Sounds Optimistic Note—"Horton and Highway Department Still Control Tennessee," Says Hanly.

Confidence in the future of organized labor, particularly in Tennessee, was expressed at the "get-together" meeting of Central Body Monday night by W. E. Cheek, of Nashville, secretary-treasurer of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, who was among the prominent guests of Chattanooga who attended and addressed the meeting.

Mr. Cheek declared that in spite of the depression membership in the federation has more than held its own since he assumed the duties of secretary-treasurer last spring. Explaining that he was not present for the purpose of making a speech, the federation secretary said he wished to take advantage of the opportunity to express his appreciation of the co-operation extended by Chattanooga Central Body and local unions.

"I know that you have a somewhat lengthy program," he said, "and that the gentlemen who will follow me have many important things to say to you, but I simply want to say to you that, although we are passing through the greatest economic crisis in history, the labor movement of Tennessee, as shown in records of the state body, is making very satisfactory progress.

"In my work as your secretary I have had every co-operation from Chattanooga unionists, and I want to express my heartfelt appreciation now. We solicit your continued co-operation and assistance, and we intend to do everything in our power to assist in keeping the Tennessee movement in the forefront among southern state bodies."

Mr. Cheek has been the guest of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council on other occasions, and is always accorded a warm welcome.

HORTON STILL IN SADDLE, SAYS HANLY.

David Hanly, legislative chairman of the state federation, contented himself Monday night with a brief review of the recent session of the legislature. He climaxed his few remarks with the characteristic observation that "Gov. Horton and his highway department are still in charge in Tennessee."

He said:

"I did not come here tonight to make a speech. I came to hear my friend, John T. O'Connor, the mayor of Knoxville, speak. I do want to say a few words, however, about the special session of the legislature which recently adjourned. This session was called by Gov. Horton at the demand of bankers to balance the budget of the state.

"In many states of the Union today, legislatures have been called in session for the purpose of making appropriations of public monies to carry on public work so as to provide employment for their citizens who are out of work, but this was not the case in Tennessee. This extraordinary session of the general assembly reduced the salaries of many employes of the state, including those who are now receiving inadequate pay.

"There were numerous measures proposed. Among these was the so-called privilege tax bill, which declared all occupations a privilege and taxed them as such. It exempted $1,000 from the wages or salaries of all persons and levied a tax of 5 per cent on all above that amount. This measure was advocated by Gov. Horton in a special message to the legislature and also by an appeal through the daily press of the state. It was defeated in the house by an overwhelming majority. An income

MAYOR O'CONNOR

O'Connor Pleads For Co-Operation To Meet Crisis

John T. O'Connor, former president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, now mayor of Knoxville, addressing the "get-together" session of Central Body Monday night, said:

How pleased I am to again visit the trade unionists in Chattanooga. There is no spot outside of my own home town that I have a warmer place in my heart for than the city of Chattanooga. Your people have always been courteous and kind to me.

At the inaugural ceremonies held at Knoxville some three months ago your mayor and representatives of the labor movement honored the occasion by their presence, for which I shall always feel deeply grateful to them. * * *

We meet at the threshold of a new year. Just what the future holds for the American industrial army no one can accurately forecast. We do know that the past year has been one of the hardest from the standpoint of unemployment which has resulted in much suffering among our people. What is needed today is the infusion of democratic principles into industry, which means, of course, that at the conference table representatives of employers and employes would meet, not solely to discuss wages and working conditions but to work out a practical plan in industry that would at least minimize unemployment.

While present conditions are due to a great extent to the world war and inflated conditions, yet the installation of labor-displacing machinery has been largely responsible for so many American workers being thrown out of employment. Had there been a recognition on the part of employers throughout the nation of the principles of collective bargaining I have not the slightest doubt but what a practical plan would have been arrived at that would have brought about adjustments calculated to keep the greater number of our people at work.

It seems to me that the president of the United States should call a conference of the representatives of industry, finance, labor and the leading economists with a view of working out some practical plan in industry to relieve unemployment. If the country was at war, our chief executive would unhesitatingly summons to the nation's capital the representatives of these various groups and point out to them their duty to their country. We have a condition within our own portals that is as bad as the state of war, and all groups should be ready and willing to meet at the conference table to work out a constructive plan that would not only relieve the present conditions, but would prevent a repetition of the same. There has been introduced in congress by Senator La Follette a measure that would provide a five-billion-dollar program throughout the nation. This seems to be a constructive and statesmanlike attitude to take because in relieving unemployment it would cause a change in the mental condition of our people from that of depression to that of hope and confidence in the return of normal conditions. * * *

CENTRAL BODY BIDS GOOD-BYE TO WORST YEAR

Confidence, Determnation Keynote of Session.

SPLENDID PROGRAM OFFERED DELEGATES

Local Trades Unionists Rout Glooms in One of Most Enjoyable and Profitable "Get-Together" Meetings Staged by Workers Here.

"Get-together" session of Central Body Monday night proved one of the most thoroughly enjoyable and altogether satisfactory meetings of laboring men held in Chattanooga for years. When Delegate George W. Perry arose at a previous meeting and suggested that the regular meeting night, Dec. 28, coming in the midst of the holidays, might with profit be turned into a "smoker," few if any of those present anticipated anything out of the ordinary. The idea, however, was approved, and Mr. Perry was made chairman of a special committee consisting of himself, W. D. Canada and C. R. Ruggles to work in conjunction with the standing entertainment committee in providing modest refreshments and cigars for the delegates to enjoy while discussing plans for the new year.

Deciding to invite an out-of-town speaker, however, it was learned that John T. O'Connor, mayor of Knoxville and a former president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, was available, and, later, that W. C. Birthright, secretary of the Barbers' international, was visiting in Nashville for the holidays, and an invitation was wired him and accepted. Then the committee, not satisfied with its good fortune, prevailed upon W. E. Cheek, secretary of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and David Hanly, the state body's veteran legislative chairman, to also be the guests of Chattanooga unionists.

But while all this was transpiring, the special committee was also busy with other plans for the enjoyment of the delegates and their guests. Enlisting the services of George Sivley, Charles Leonard, C. W. Lusk, James Ball and others, a splendid menu was prepared and served in the midst of the program. And then—

It was recalled that the Borin brothers, than whom there are no more competent entertainers in these parts, had on several other occasions generously contributed their services to the cause, and they were asked to perform on the big night. They did. And did they make a hit? Ask anybody there how those boys can play that piano and sing those blues!

Not the least feature on the program, from a strictly local standpoint, was the ten-minute address of the Rev. S. P. Buchanon, a member of the Iron Molders' Local 53, who was pressed into service at the last moment to "pinch hit" for Chattanooga in the speaking line.

"Paul," as he is known to hundreds of friends, delivered one of the most powerful and effective short speeches, according to apparently unanimous opinion, ever heard on Central Body floor, and he was given a rousing round of applause at its conclusion.

Climaxing a forceful and dramatic appeal for a militant movement, Rev. Mr. Buchanon said:

"Yes, we need unionism. But unionism is an empty term unless it means also unity. And our greatest need today is solidarity and mutual goodwill and confidence. These we must have if we are to solve the great problems which have been forced upon us by present economic conditions."

Officers of Central Body and members of the committee had but one regret with respect to the session. Among them the fact was generally deplored that the meeting was not held in a much larger hall so that every trades unionist, at least, might have had the opportunity of enjoying the affair. It was the opinion, however, that a vast amount of good was done, and that organized labor will reap the results in the fine spirit of enthusiasm, courage and determination which will surely come out of the affair.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter II
JESUS AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES
PART IV: THE PHARISEES

The essence of faithfulness, according to Hebrew teaching in Jesus' day, was obedience to the law. The Pharisees very astutely took this nationally first and paramount point in the religious belief of their people and used it to their (the Pharisees') own interests. The exaggerated piety of the Pharisees helped them to hold their position in Palestinian society much in the same way the wealthy of today preach that anything which disturbs the source of their income—whether or not the changes to be wrought might bring amelioration in the conditions under which those engaged in industry work, or how much happiness, renewed life and comfort the reforms might bring about—if it will in the least lift others up to their level or give others less fortunate than themselves something of that which they enjoy, they are opposed to any change whatsoever in the social and financial status quo.

WM. L. MOSS

This was exactly the position of the Pharisees of Jesus' day. With their almost endless "hedging of the law," their numerous restrictions that barred all but those in their own station in life, and with their countless demands that only the rich could meet they were barring the masses of the Hebrew nation from approach to and fellowship with God. True, every Hebrew boy, whatever his class, was taught certain parts of the Hebrew scriptures. It is a fact that synagogue worship was open to all and that anyone reasonably fitted to mix with his fellow-citizens in everyday life could take part without hindrance in the worship in the synagogues. But in spite of this theoretical participation of the common people in the religious life of the nation, any but the Pharisees and scholars educated in the mass of tradition were rigidly shut out from entering into the full religious life of the day. The truth is, looking behind these apparent privileges of the common people to worship God as they saw fit, we see the Pharisees and scholars making null the Hebrew boy's knowledge of scripture by interpreting it to their liking out in the busy world of life into which the Hebrew boy went from the religious school to put in practice and live what he had learned of God's Word, and we see these same Pharisees and scholars insisting on control of the synagogues and dominating them with an unbending rule of iron.

CONDEMN IDLE INSURANCE.

New York.—Compulsory government unemployment insurance was condemned at a luncheon of the National Republican club by Felix Hebert, United States senator from Rhode Island; Henry J. Allen, former governor of Kansas, and Matthew Woll, a vice-president of the American Federation of Labor.

CONSTIPATION take

"IF I got constipated, I would get dizzy and have swimming in my head. I would have very severe headache.

"For a while I thought I wouldn't take anything—maybe I could wear out the headaches; but I found they were wearing me out.

"I found Black-Draught would relieve this, so when I have the very first symptoms, I take Black-Draught and now I don't have the headache.

"I am a firm believer in Black-Draught, and after using it 20 or more years, I am satisfied to continue its use."

GOOD CITIZEN PASSES.

Passing of J. M. Wheeler, who died Dec. 24 at his home, 2538 Brainerd road, at an advanced age, recalls to older trades unionists days when Mr. Wheeler was active in the local labor movement. He was many years ago an indefatiguable worker for the cause, and his belief in its principles was not dimmed by his retirement from active service by reason of advancing years.

Members of Chattanooga's large family of craft organizations join with hundreds of other friends in regret at his passing, and extend to his surviving relatives heartfelt condolences.

W. H. "Homer" Wheeler, a son, now connected with the sheriff's forces, was formerly a member of organized labor also.

Bringing Back Prosperity!

Editor Labor World:

In Wednesday's News a United Press interview with Harvey Firestone, big rubber mogul, upheld the policy of wage slashing as the road back to "prosperity." He "proved" that wage cutting was profitable by pointing with pride to the fact that his company had QUADRUPLED its 1931 profits over 1930!

We shoot mad dogs on sight, yet we elect to high office and accept as oracles such men as Firestone and Mellon. How can communism help but thrive, with our public press full of such "progress" as wage cuts and quadrupled profits? Any fool knows wage cutting is profitable to the millionaire—what we want is food for the hungry—not additional Packards and diamonds for Firestone.

Save your money—and pay your poll tax.

Radio Musicians Strike. The Chicago Federation of Musicians, headed by James C. Petrillo, president, ordered all union musicians employed by Chicago broadcasting stations to go out on strike at midnight Thursday of this week. It is stated that about 400 musicians and thirteen radio stations are affected. The strike order extends to musicians employed in cafes, dance halls, hotels and other places if the music is relayed to the stations involved in the dispute.

For the past two weeks the Federation of Musicians has been negotiating for a six-day week with no reduction in pay for the present seven-day scale and for the replacement of technicians at control boards by musicians, according to newspaper reports. The stations involved are KYW, WGN, WBBM, WLS, WSBC, WENR, WWAE, WGES, WCHI, WJJD, WAAF and WIBO.

The demand for replacement of technicians at the control boards by radio trained musicians seems to be a very reasonable demand, and, if acceded to, no doubt would increase the quality of radio programs. A trained musician should know more about how music should sound than a radio technician, and should be better able to keep the programs at the highest possible volume without damage to the quality.

Firestone Profits Quadruple. Despite the fact that the year 1931 has been recognized by everyone as being a most upsetting year in the business world, the Firestone Tire and Rubber company has announced net profits of $6,028,630 for the fiscal year ending Oct. 31, 1931. This compares with the net profits of the company in 1930 of $1,541,034.

A thought for consideration is: How did Firestone make this tremendous profit, when, as everybody knows, tire prices are considerably lower than they have been. Probably many Firestone employes did without things they really needed, because of low wages, so the stockholders of the company could reap large dividends. And probably many unwise working men did without things they really needed, spending the money instead for tires, further increasing the profits of Firestone.

U. S. Bills Attract Investors. Further proof of the fact that there is plenty of "lazy" money in our country lies in the announcement of the treasury that applications for the purchase of $100,000,000 in 91-day treasury bills dated Dec. 30, 1931, totaling nearly twice the amount of the issue. Millions of dollars are laying dormant in the vaults of savings banks, drawing 3 to 4 per cent interest, which should be at work in the business world helping to alleviate unemployment. Banks are becoming overloaded with savings accounts, which accounts for the reduction of the interest rate by banks throughout the country.

Buses Versus Railroads. During the past few years the railroads have been making a big noise about the "unfair" competition of buses. The roads have been fair in their fight against the buses but seem to have made no headway. Employes of the roads have realized the seriousness of the situation and have been helping their employers in the fight. Every time the roads lose a battle it means some employes out of work, hence the willingness of the employes to help in the fight.

One solution of the problem which the roads seem to be gradually getting around to is the absorption of bus lines, or opening new bus lines themselves. That solution will take the buses out of competition with the roads, but it won't be much help to the railroad employes, for more passengers can be transported per employe by bus than by rail. Even though the railroads enter into bus line operation in a big way, it still behooves the railroad employes to keep up the fight against the bues.

Schools

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

Do you realize, gentle reader, that our public schools in Tennessee has suffered an almost complete breakdown from a financial standpoint?

Has it dawned on you that at this very moment as I write this, and when you read what I have written the same condition will exist, that hundreds of boys and girls in the counties in Tennessee cannot go to school today because their schools are closed, and that many more have only a limited number of weeks in which to enjoy the privileges of schooling this year?

Are you conscious of the fact that the educational system of the old Volunteer state is at a standstill—practically all extra-curricula projects abandoned, many regular curricula features dropped, curtailed or temporarily set aside?

Is it "news" to you that hundreds and hundreds of teachers of this state are buying the necessities of life and their clothes on the strength of the state's promise to pay their back salaries some day?

Do you know this condition exists in our educational system here in Tennessee because we have neither a governor competent to meet the crisis nor a state legislature with enough really big men in it to do their duty?

Peace on Earth

At this Christmas season it is well for us to remember the heart of mankind is gradually turning away from the spirit of war.

But the impulse to resort to arms in an effort to right national wrongs or further international political ambitions can never be stamped out until the barbaric monster war is outlawed entirely by enough nations sufficiently strong to make the weight of their abhorrence of war felt and prevail over the saber-unsheathing of greed and politics.

This time will have arrived only when a majority of the individuals of every nation object to war carried on for any reason whatever.

So much for war in a general way—now let's look closer at home:

Our high school soldier-boys, our tin horn-tooting militiamen hardly old enough to grow eiderdown on their chins, our ruthless treatment of industrial workers of every sort by state cossacks and mercenary troops of deputies is a direct slap in the face of universal peace, for we who are not at peace at home and we who still indulge in the horrific luxury of domestic slaughter dare not face the world and shake an admonishing finger at it when it shows symptoms of rising up and calling its brothers its enemies instead of blessed.

First we ourselves must leave off fighting at home; first we ourselves must live amicably together with no thought of murdering groups within our social order before we can advise the nations of the world to live at peace with one another!

It is giving the lie to our noble-sounding pleas for world amity, uttered by grand old ladies of high social standing in their communities, when their husbands, the heads of powerful corporations, hire men to antagonize and slaughter their employes.

THE CHERRY TREE

Where with our Little Hatchet we tell the truth about many things, sometimes profoundly, sometimes flippantly, sometimes recklessly.

An intensive campaign to provide emergency jobs for the unemployed of Rochester, N. Y., is reported attracting wide attention. The Rochester campaign involves canvassing of every household, industrial and business firm and building owner by teams under district captains. Each person called upon is asked to undertake improvements or other work about home, grounds or factory building that will furnish winter employment for jobless men. Each person is also urged to use his normal buying power in purchasing furnishings, equipment and clothing.

The plan is not new, having been tried in some form in other cities with varying degrees of success, but Rochester is giving it a thorough test. It is planned to reach the entire population of the city with the requests for co-operation. Undoubtedly there are many persons in Rochester and in every city who can provide emergency work of some kind, which however inadequate it may be, is better than "handouts."

The Detroit board of education recently adopted a declaration for free speech that every community would do well to follow. The board said:

"Teachers may feel free to discuss and express their honest opinions outside of the classrooms, upon all subjects, including social, economical and political questions, without fear of official reprimand or coercion on the part of anyone connected with the board of education."

In recent years there have been some outrageous attacks on the right of free speech and free assemblage in Detroit. Trade unionists will recall the attempt made during the 1926 convention of the American Federation of Labor to prevent federation executives from speaking in Detroit churches. The stand of the board of education therefore comes as somewhat of a surprise, but a very welcome surprise, to believers in the rights guaranteed by the constitution.

"The 15 per cent reduction in wages sought by the Chicago & Northwestern would save the road about $2.44 a share," says the Wall Street Journal.

That's the Wall Street view for you. No concern over the effect of the proposed wage cut on the workers and their families, only the effect on dividends is considered. And yet Wall Street wonders why the hue and cry against its methods, why demands for governmental regulation of its operations are growing, why more and more its activities are regarded with suspicion.

New Year's Two Resolutions

by Noni Clack Bailey

ONE good resolution deserves another, but that's the story.

"Phil, I smell snow."

"We're in the West, Erma, don't be foolish! You know our resolution when we left Quincy was, 'No more snow for us!' I smelled orange blossoms on that breeze."

"I smell snow."

"The groves begin beyond the Pass and we're on that grade now. Just look at that view!"

"There's a flake now."

"Golly! You're right."

After an hour the car stopped. "Even Hermes can't climb this. I guess you know your snow all right. There's shelter behind that boulder, we'd better make camp."

A spot cleared of snow, tent pitched, campfire burning and they were cozy.

Hardly had the smoke begun to curl ere down the trail came a horseman. "Where's your permit?" he demanded gruffly. "What permit?" asked Phil. "Fire permit. I'm a ranger. Don't you know it's against the law to build a fire in these mountains or smoke? Put out that cigarette. That's two counts against you."

"Lord, man, we're stuck. I couldn't let the little woman freeze even if I'd known." "Tell it to the judge!"

"So this is the Far West!"

"Wait, brother, until you've seen the havoc the fires have wrought—our beautiful pines, liveoaks, manzanitas, turned into acres and acres of charred nightmare landscapes, gaunt and hideous. It's pitiful! You won't blame us. First trip, though, so I'll just put you wise.

"The best way to build a campfire in the forest country—law or no law—is never light it! See? Now for good news. You're not a hundred yards from the down grade; scrapers are clearing the highway—be here in an hour; so light your camp cook stove inside the tent for heat, flap open for air, and make coffee for three."

"Hooray!" shouted Phil; "Welcome old-timer. And here's another resolution we'll sure keep; we'll never ask for a fire permit unless it's on the beach."

"No more snow and no more campfires," agreed Erma. "Who cares, with the whole New Year in the West? Now for hot coffee, smoked ham and cherry preserves from back home!"

The commerce department reports that "motor trucks in interurban service handle only about 2.5 per cent of the freight transported annually in the United States, or one-fortieth of the total, whereas the railroads carry 75 per cent of the total tonnage." There seems to have been a lot of noise about that one-fortieth.

A NEW YEAR'S CALL

By HAROLD L. COOK

JANUARY first was hanging heavily on the hands of Mr. and Mrs. Willer. They felt that they should do something to distinguish it from other holidays or from Sunday, but four o'clock in the afternoon arrived without anything happening to impress upon them that they had really entered upon a new year.

The New England town where they lived lay peacefully under its blanket of white, and probably most of its forty thousand inhabitants were as peacefully dozing in their chairs, satisfied with their creature comforts, and thankful that they were not as other people.

Mr. Willer was roused from his quiet doze by the clang of the door bell. "Are the Misses Baker in?" queried a throaty voice, as he opened the door and saw an elderly couple standing on his porch.

"The Misses Baker!" he exclaimed. "You mean Miss Bell and Miss Louise?"

"Of course," replied the voice.

"Why, the Bakers don't live here," Mr. Willer explained. "They live on Caroline street. They haven't lived here in over twenty years."

"Thank you," was the only response. "My wife and I just thought we'd pay our New Year's call on them."

"Can you imagine that!" shouted Mr. Willer to his wife, when he had closed the door. "The Lewises calling on the Baker girls here, and we've been in this house ourselves for over twenty years! Mr. Lewis didn't even seem surprised when it was I who opened the door."

"Well, of all things!" laughed Mrs. Willer coming down the stairs. "But do you know, John, that gives me an idea. Suppose we go around the corner and call on Mrs. Crump. We haven't been there in a long time, and it might cheer her up."

"All right," Mr. Willer replied. "Mrs. Crump is getting on, and I don't suppose we can wish her many more Happy New Years. She must be over ninety now."

"Yes, ninety-three," said Mrs. Willer, drawing on her rubbers. "And we haven't dropped in to see her in sometime."

"How long is it, anyway?" asked Mr. Willer.

"I don't know," replied his wife, "but we certainly haven't been there since we are living in this house."

So, after twenty years, Mrs. Crump received a New Year's call from her friendly neighbors, the Willers.

At Christmas the heart dethrones the head. It compels us to do high things; it permits us to do foolish things. It sanctions our being childlike. It urges us, for one brief week, to be gloriously, recklessly, unselfish. —American Magazine.

FORCED FARM SALES RISE; VALUES HIT PREWAR LEVEL

Washington.—During the year ending last March 15, forced sales of farms through financial default rose to 26.1 farms per 1,000 compared to 20.8 in 1929-1930, the U. S. bureau of agricultural economics stated in its annual review of the farm real estate situation. Farm land values, the report said, have declined nearly to the prewar level.

Hoffman Begins Jail Term on January 4

Stroudsburg, Pa.—Judge S. E. Shull in the Monroe county court granted Organizer Alfred Hoffman, of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, permission to spend Christmas at home and finish certain work for the union before going to jail to serve a two years' sentence for alleged violation of an injunction issued during the strike at the Mammoth Hosiery mills in Stroudsburg. Hoffman will begin his jail term on Jan. 4.

John A. Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, will appoint a committee of prominent trade unionists of the state to make a protest against Hoffman's sentence and develop a plan for amending the conspiracy laws of Pennsylvania so that a recurrence of victimizations of the Hoffman type will be prevented in the future.

NEW RETIREMENT ACT FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYES

Washington.—A government employe, with thirty years of service to his credit, could retire regardless of age under a proposed amendment to the U. S. civil service retirement law proposed by Senator Dale, of Vermont, chairman of the senate civil service committee.

Under the present retirement law of 1930 employes have the limited option of retiring two years earlier than the age limits fixed in that law for automatic requirements.

The present law fixes the age limit for retirement of department clerks at 70, and they are permitted optional retirement at 68. There are two other general age limits for other groups of workers, namely, 65 and 62, and each group has a two-year optional provision.

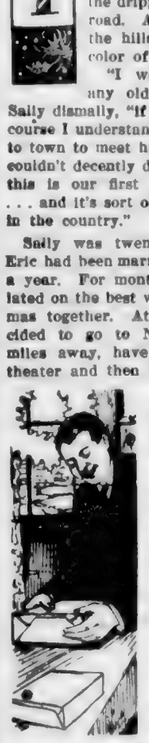
"Lena"

The Christmas Present
By Martha Banning Thomas

IT WASN'T in the least like Christmas. Sally stood at the window and surveyed the dripping trees, the soggy road. A gray fog lay upon the hills; the sky was the color of gun metal.

"I wouldn't care about any old weather," thought Sally dismally, "if Eric were here. Of course I understand that he had to go to town to meet his cousin Lena. He couldn't decently do anything else, but this is our first Christmas together . . . and it's sort of lonesome out here in the country."

Sally was twenty-three. She and Eric had been married a little less than a year. For months they had speculated on the best way to spend Christmas together. At first they had decided to go to New York, only 40 miles away, have dinner, go to the theater and then some exciting night club. But gradually they discovered that they were not as interested in celebrating the holiday in this manner: Sally and Eric had been to plenty of dinners, plenty of dances and plenty of night clubs. They were a bit fed up. After considerable argument and trying to find out what the other really wanted, they came to the grand conclusion that they would get a thrill out of Christmas at home in their little house in the country.



"No party," said Eric.

"No guests," chimed in Sally.

"Nothing . . . but Christmas and us!" They had shaken hands solemnly on this.

They had talked over the dinner, which Sally was to prepare herself (the maid having begged to be let off to go to her family for the day). They had decided on the kind of Christmas tree they wanted; Eric had gone out two days ago and chopped it down. They had trimmed it with the glitter of make-believe icicles and silver-blue lights. They had shopped furiously, buying quantities of jokes and silly presents. These two young things, very much in love and full of zest and ideas, swept away the more obvious entertainments in one gesture. They were as excited as children.

Then at 2:00 o'clock of the afternoon the day before Christmas, while Eric was chuckling to himself over some ridiculous gift he was wrapping up for Sally, the telephone rang.

Eric talked very hurriedly into the transmitter. And in a low tone, Sally could hardly hear what he said. When he hung up the receiver he announced that he must leave for town at once. "But why?" asked Sally.

"Well," he hesitated, "you see I've got to meet Lena. She's just come."

"Lena! Who in the world is she?" Sally's voice became a bit edgy.

"Oh, er . . . a sort of cousin. Terribly sorry, old girl. I'll tear over in the buzz-buggy and be back in no time."

So, he had gone. And the trees dripped. And the sky grew dark. And Sally cried a little and decided this Christmas eve was the horridest she'd ever spent.

She tried to remember if she had ever heard Eric speak of Lena before. "A wretched name," she said aloud, "and probably a perfect nit-wit of a girl. One of his odious relatives."

She waited and waited. Christmas eve was going to be spoiled. She could tell that. Why hadn't they gone to New York like everyone else? Then this Lena pest would never have roped in Eric.

At 6:30 the telephone jingled. Sally flew to answer it. "Sally, darling, I'm a bit delayed. Just called up to tell you not to worry. Traffic heavy . . ."

"Oh yes," said Sally in a cool polite voice.

"I'm bringing Lena home, dear. I know you'll like her. Expect us about quarter past seven."

Sally was in a rage. How dare he spoil their cherished Christmas by bringing home a stranger? How cruel . . . how thoughtless!

At quarter past seven she heard the car rush into the drive before the door. Her heart hardened. She went to the kitchen and looked into a closet.

The front door banged. "Hey, Sally! Hey! Where are you? Come here and meet Lena!"

She heard footsteps in the dining room. The swinging door pushed open. Then before she could catch her breath, Eric had her by the hand. He literally dragged her into the dining room, through the living room to the front door. "Got to meet Lena right away," he laughed. He thrust her out of the door on to the tiny porch. "Lena!" shouted Eric, "God bless 'er—there she stands!"

Sally blinked. Tears of rage dried in her eyes. "Lena?" she murmured in a foolish little voice, "Eric . . . what have you done?"

A small, smart car stood by the steps. Light from the house flowed along its polished sides. It panted gently with a quiet engine.

"Meet the wife, Lena," said Eric and made an elaborate gesture of introduction.

"Whose?" demanded Sally.

"Yours, woman! Christmas present! Delayed in delivery! Had to go in to get her. Thought I'd give you a whirl. Like the looks of the dear girl?"

"Oh, Eric . . . she's superb. You wonderful boy!"

The trees dripped. The fog closed in. The country road became soggier than ever . . . but Sally declared it was perfect Christmas weather.

"I feel I really ought to offer her a piece of turkey," said Eric at dinner, "with a little gasoline gravy!"

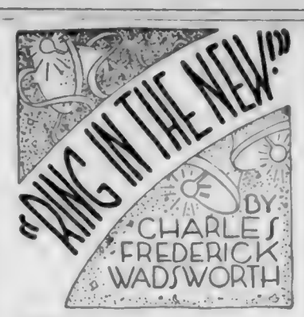
A Letter to Santa

"The Gulf Southwest" is the name of the district including Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, western Tennessee and Mississippi. That district furnishes 70 per cent of the cotton grown in the United States; and 40 per cent of the world's cotton crop. And cotton is 64 per cent of the entire crop from that region, occupying more than 35 per cent of its crop lands. Six states and a half —with as much agricultural misery packed into them as they can well hold, with cotton at 6 cents a pound!

Q.—In what industry is the check-off system for collecting union dues used?

A.—The mining industry is the best known example of the "check-off" system, but it is also used in a number of other trades.



"ONE!"

Billy Belding and Jane Haley were in Stalnard's jewelry store and had just made the selection of Jane's engagement ring. It was New Year's Eve and they were to start the New Year an affianced pair.

Jane turned from the showcase to her companion: "Why, what is the matter, Billy?"

"I've lost it!"

"Lost what?"

"I had five hundred dollars Christmas club savings in my inside overcoat pocket. It isn't there. It's gone, and that's that. Mr. Stalnard," said Billy dejectedly, "we'll have to let it go for the present."

Jane turned to the jeweler.

"You'll let us have it anyway, won't you? Billy can soon pay for it."

Mr. Stalnard was very nice. "Why, certainly, Mr. Belding. Pay as convenient."

"Thank you, Mr Stalnard, and I'm sorry, Jane," he said, "but my rule is not to go into debt for what I call current expenses."

Jane removed the ring and reluctantly laid it on the velvet pad. Billy took her arm and gently guided her toward the door.

"But, Billy, please!"

"No, dear, I just can't do it! Please wait a little."

They got into Billy's little car and drove away.

Earlier in the evening, Walker Haley had had Billy, as the prospective husband of his niece and ward, Jane, to his home as a dinner guest. Upon reaching the house, Billy had been assigned a room for his convenience.

Dinner ended, Jane reminded Billy of the passing time, and he hurried upstairs for his things.

When they returned, Uncle Walker, Aunt Anne, and Jack and Hazel, their son and daughter, arose to view the new purchase and offer felicitations. An observing one might have caught Uncle Walker giving Jane a sly wink, which she as slyly returned.

Billy was downcast, and Jane at least seemed so.

Aunt Anne exclaimed: "Why, Billy, what is wrong? Did Jane back out?"

"Not as bad as that, but almost. I have lost the money I intended to buy the ring with." He hesitated.

Jane took a seat and assumed a disappointed but resigned air.

Uncle Walker seated himself by Billy. "Do you and Jane think you can make a go of it on your salary—how much is it?"

"Sixty dollars a week, and we have it all figured out—haven't we, Jane?"

"Oh, Yes!"

"Could you get along and buy a little home, too, if you had seventy-five?"

Billy and Jane exchanged wondering glances.

"Yes, I think so. Don't you, Jane?"

"Oh, yes!" Jane was positive.

"Tomorrow, then," said Uncle Walker, "you come to Haley Brothers—if your firm will release you then—if not tomorrow, then as soon as you can get away.

"But—" Billy began.

"Wait a minute. Your cash salary will be seventy-five dollars a week, and a credit of twenty-five a week on five thousand dollars' worth of the common stock of Haley Brothers, which I shall set aside for you. That will make a hundred a week. Now go back to Stalnard's and get your ring." He handed Billy an envelope. "This was under the bed up in your room." He slipped another wink to Jane.

Billy recovered surprisingly promptly, but remarked that the store would be closed.

"Don't worry," Uncle Walker assured him. "Stalnard phoned me, as I had asked him to, and I arranged for him to stay till you returned. It was a put-up job on you, Billy," he explained. "I wanted to see what decision you would make in an emergency—and if you would stick by it. Jane tried to shake you, but you thought you were right and remained firm. Haley Brothers want young fellows like you. Now you two skedaddle—and 'ring in the new!'"

Road Building in U. S. Breaks All Records

Washington.—All records in road building in the United States were broken in the fiscal year ending June 30 and many more thousands of persons than ever before were on highway pay rolls, Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau of public roads, said in his annual report.

More than 11,000 miles of roads were constructed, or rebuilt, compared with 8,682 in the preceding fiscal year, and $133,340,910 in federal aid money was paid to the states for highway work, against the largest previous total of $95,749,998, in 1925. I naddition to the money paid out, $157,952,903 in federal aid funds was obligated to new projects, as compared with the earlier record of $102,498,084 in 1929-30.

ENGRAVING BUREAU USES FURLOUGHS TO SHARE WORK

Washington.—Laying off surplus employes instead of dismissing them is the policy of the U. S. bureau of printing and engraving, according to the annual report of Alvin W. Hall, director of the bureau.

The adoption of the new small-sized currency required the services of additional employes. When the new small notes were completed there was a surplus of workers. The surplus was increased by the reduction in orders for certain other classes of work. The result was what economists call an "overmanned condition."

"This surplus in personnel," Mr. Hall says, "is absorbed by a rotating furlough schedule, through the observance of which all employes in an overmanned unit take off a fixed number of days each month without pay. The reduction in personnel is accomplished by voluntary separations from the service."

The practical trade unionist always demands the union label, shop card or button.

BIRTHRIGHT PAYS

a new economic order. We must have machinery in our governmental institutions that will properly and adequately take care of any crisis of this kind.

All our teachers know that children of low-wage families are the first to quit school, and every juvenile judge knows that the ratio of crime largely results from the underprivileged parents who didn't have money to give them a chance.

If the wage cut campaign now being conducted in America is permitted to sweep the country it will naturally result in lower standards, poorer health and very limited schooling. The answer to the present crisis is that not only comfort but safety rest on economic stability.

United States government figures show that in 1929 the profit of thirty-six men was twenty-two million dollars greater than the earned wage income of four hundred and twenty-eight thousand textile workers. The net profits of five hundred and four men in 1929 would have bought the entire wheat and cotton crops of the United States in 1930 that required two million and five hundred thousand farmers to raise. More than thirteen thousand banks have closed their doors in the past thirteen months, carrying approximately a billion dollars in deposits, and few, if any, of those guilty of mismanagement of these funds have ever been brought to an accounting. America is feeding the mice and rats with hoarded grain rather than interfere with the millers' profits. Three thousand bushels of foodstuffs were dumped in the sea at Baltimore because of the low prices, while millions of American workers were starving. Brazil burned and dumped in the sea 34,000 bags of coffee rather than give it to the unemployed. If all the conditions as reviewed in these facts and many that could be attributed thereto are not the result of inflation and under-consumption, then I fail to understand the situation from a practical standpoint. Isn't it apparent that a condition as shown in the figures quoted is one that requires the combined attention of every man and woman who works for a living in America. It is your responsibility to aid your state in remedying the present economic crisis, and the contribution you may make now in that direction is solidarity in the organization and solidarity on the political and industrial field. Our government at Washington has been lax in its effort to remedy this present situation. They have been prone to leave it to charity, and upon you and the great mass of the men and women rest the responsibility of saying to our law-makers at Washington that you must call into conference the leaders of industry and the representatives of labor to discuss ways and means whereby this government may assume the responsibility.

It is all right to talk about relieving Europe of its war debt, but why not talk about relieving the millions of people in this country of their suffering at this time. Charity begins at home and our government's first duty is look after its own citizens.

I am sure, my friends, that you appreciate the tremendous obstacles that have been pictured to you tonight in several addresses, and I know that you will leave this hall with the determination to do everything in your power for you and your fellowman.

Keep the thought well in mind that activity, particularly in your local unions, will bring you better results. Dismiss from your thoughts that any movement can help you to solve the economic problems other than your labor organization.

I want you to know that President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and his associates on the executive council and the officers of the various international unions are doing everything in their power to aid our government in the restoration of the purchasing power of our people. Although there are many plans that have not received the consideration by our government that they are entitled to receive, we are encouraged by the fact that many industries have adopted the policy of the five-day week and the shorter workday. These men are convinced that if the government would step into the situation and approve the idea of the five-day week and the shorter workday to the industries of America that through the influence brought by our government we would be able to bring about a condition that would give much relief. Prosperity is entirely based on restoring of the purchasing power and to restore that purchasing power men must work at a saving wage, and under our lopsided economic condition of mass production it necessitates the five-day week and not more than seven hours a day to return millions of these men to work so that progress may come.

In conclusion I want to say it has been a real pleasure for me to be here and associate myself with old friends and make new ones, and to assure you that my every effort to build up a stronger labor movement in our great state will be just the same in the future as it has in the past.

I want to thank all those who have been so kind to me on this occasion.

I wish you one and all a happy New Year.

O'CONNOR PLEADS

The older members present here tonight know and appreciate the value of organization. They have given much time and sacrifice in order to establish humane working conditions and adequate pay. Let us hope that the gains made by the men and women in industry as a result of their efforts will not be lost. The need for organization is more urgent today than ever, and I would appeal to you to remain loyal and steadfast to the principles of the American labor movement, which has done so much for you and your families. You are all familiar with the legislative activities of the American labor movement in the interest and protection of women in industry and the freedom of children from the sweat shops and mills and factories. By legislative enactment thousands of children have been taken from the mills and placed in God's sunshine and in the school room, where they have developed both mentally and physically. This itself is a splendid contribution and it alone justified the existence of the American labor movement. * * *

As we meet tonight at the close of 1931 let us resolve that we will give our wholehearted support to the cause of organized labor, and that our contributions will not be limited to the extent of the payment of annual dues, but that we will attend every meeting of our local lodge and central body and co-operate to the fullest extent with the officers in order that this agency shall continue to function in the interest of humanity.

"America must have a new economic order," he said. "We must have machinery in our governmental institutions that will properly and adequately take care of any crisis of this kind. If the wage-cutting campaign now being conducted in the United States is permitted to sweep the country it will naturally lower standards, and make for poorer health and limited opportunity for education. The answer to the present crisis is that not only comfort but safety rest on economic stability."

Citing figures to show the enormous incomes received by a few wealthy individuals, Mr. Birthright declared that history showed that when such a condition became prevalent the inevitable end was ruin for the nations which allowed it. Thousands of tons of foodstuffs have been destroyed to protect profits, he said, while men walk the streets hungry and their families starve. America is feeding the mice and rats with hoarded grain rather than interfere with the miller's profits, he continued—all the result of inflation and under-consumption.

"It is your responsibility to aid your state in this crisis, and the contribution you make now in that direction is solidarity on the political and industrial field.

"Our government at Washington has been lax in its efforts to remedy this situation. * * * It is all right to talk about relieving Europe of its war debt, but what about relieving the millions of people in this country of their sufferings at this time."

Advising solidarity as labor's best contribution to the return of prosperity, Mr. Birthright enjoined upon his hearers to keep the thought well in mind that activity in their local unions and Central Body is absolutely necessary.

"Dismiss from your mind," he said, "the thought that any movement can help you to solve these problems other than your labor organization."

Mr. Birthright saw encouragement in the fact that many large industries are adopting the five-day week and the shorter workday. "Prosperity," he declared, "is entirely dependent upon the restoration of purchasing power, and to achieve that end men must be employed at a saving wage."

tax bill was passed. This measure exempted $2,500 of the income of a married person and in addition allows $300 for each dependent. Also it exempts the same amount of the wage of a single person who is the head of a family. It provides an exemption of $1,500 from the wages of a single person. It levies a tax of 1 per cent on incomes above $2,500. This measure will have to pass the constitutional test of the supreme court of this state. There were numerous other proposals. Among them one to tax the kilowatt hour of the power companies of this state, a measure to tax the chain stores and one to further extend the corporation excise tax. All these were defeated.

"The corporate interests of this state were well represented at Nashville by lobbies composed of lawyers representing the Aluminum Companies of America, the du Pont Rayon company and the railroads and bus interests.

"In the end the legislature went against least resistance and increased the gasoline tax 1 cent on the gallon to pay for a bond issue of $5,000,000. Also an additional tax was placed on each automobile owner to pay for an identification tag.

"Gov. Horton and his highway department are still in charge of Tennessee."

To all the readers of this column: When you have summed up all good wishes expressed by your friends in their greetings to you at this Christmas season, just remember that our wish is that every one of their wishes will come true.

It even named John's favorite brand of cigarettes. Herman says the helluvit is that the cigarettes were his (Herman's) and the write-up never even mentioned his name.

Pinchot Shows Few Fast Gaining Bulk of Wealth

Dividends and Capital Get "Staggering Disproportion" of Profits, Bringing Economic Unbalance, Governor Says.

Washington, Dec. 27.—Marshaling figures to show a startling concentration of wealth in the hands of the few in recent years, Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, told the District of Columbia League of Women Voters that a "staggering disproportion" of profits have been going to dividends and capital, while the worker did not get even a reasonable share.

"This is no wild guess," Gov. Pinchot continued. "This is fact with figures to support it. Dr. Julius Klein, assistant secretary of commerce, tells us that in the decade ending in 1929, real wages increased only 13 per cent, while the returns to all industry increased 72 per cent. Where did this 72 per cent come from but out of the spent wages of the millions and millions of working men? In the same period, Dr. Klein tells us, the dividends on industrial and rail stocks increased by 285 per cent—twenty-two times as fast as wages. Is it any wonder that the crash of depression came?"

"Building Toward Disaster."

Figures for the years since 1920 tell all too vividly the story of a nation building toward disaster by unbalancing its economic equilibrium, Gov. Pinchot declared. He added:

"On March 20 of this year, the national industrial conference board published in its bulletin figures representing the total income of the nation for several years back. In 1920 we made over seventy-four billion dollars. In 1928 we made eighty-one billion dollars. In eight years we had increased our income by a little less than one-tenth.

"But the treasury department's latest annual statistics of income reveal some particularly interesting things to compare with that one-tenth. In 1920 there were 3,649 people who had incomes of over $100,000. In 1928 that number had jumped to 15,977. It had doubled and then doubled again and was still going up.

Incomes of Few Soared.

"In 1920 those people made a total of over 727 million dollars. But in 1928, those who had the hundred thousand dollar incomes and up received about four and a half billion dollars, more than six times as much money. And all this, remember, while the incomes of all our people increased one lone tenth of its previous figure.

"Then how about the men who receive a million a year? In 1920 there were thirty-three of them, and they got $77,000,000. In 1928 there were 511 of them, fifteen times as many, and they got over a billion dollars, or fourteen times as much. The national income had meanwhile increased by one-tenth.

"Certainly Got Their Share."

"Finally, look at our fellow-citizens who get a paltry five million a year. In 1920 there were four of them and they collected not quite thirty million dollars. But by 1928 they had added twenty-two new members to their exclusive circle, and the twenty-six of them were forced to get along with an income of a little over 250 million dollars between them.

"In other words, in the eight-year period between 1920 and 1928, while the total national income increased less than 10 per cent, the number of men with incomes of over a million dollars, for instance, increased over 1,400 per cent, or 140 times as fast. And the amount of money these men made in one year increased 1,300 per cent, or 130 times as fast as the total amount of money made by everybody in the whole of the United States. They certainly got their share."

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

They said that the unalleled human need of the present ur and the urgency of adequate ief not only for relief but for conctive economic reorganization had ged the three organizations to the exceptional procedure of ing and issuing a joint statement tures of the relief, reduction and ention of unemployment.

The very ance of church forces in immate relief measures makes inly imperative their moral to challenge the social inns which have made relief essary. We must recognize the community relief plans present proposed, or even plementary federal appropriawhich it seems to us will be ed to meet the problem of employment, are in effect nothbut a temporary dole—a palve, not a solution. Such relief fact grossly inadequate to ent tragic demoralization of ividual and family life.

mployment is the only cure unemployment. Yet the bald remains that regardless of wever improvement may occur general business conditions we entering the third winter of unemployment without seeput into actual operation any manlike or constructive gram to provide work for any small minority of the idle.

We believe that immediate and ate appropriations should made available by national as as local governments for needed and useful public as road construction, deopment of parks, elimination grade crossings, flood control ects reforestation, and the ring of slum areas in our s. If such a governmental ram be undertaken now we face the months that lie ad with prospects of work for arge number of the unemployed consequently increased purasing power which will stimuall business. The economic dom of this proposal has been sed by leading economists. note with satisfaction the ency to institute a shorter day and week without re- in wages in the effort to the problem of technological employment.

ciety's responsibility for the servation of human values in terial life makes the principle of social insurance, particularly insurance against unemployment and want in old age, an indispensable part of sound social policy and the most self-respecting form of relief. We protest against the misleading use of the word "dole" to describe systems of unemployment insurance.

We affirm our belief in the necessity of a more equitable distribution of wealth and income which would increase purchasing power and tend to balance production and consumption. We, therefore, particularly deplore indiscriminate wage cuts at this time as socially unjust and tending to intensify bitterness and industrial unrest, and still further to lower the purchasing power of the masses.

We hold that it is now time that the engineering principle of planning which has been so successfully introduced into individual factories should be extended to the control of entire industries and of industry in general. The suggestions made by Mr. Gerard Swope are a welcome indication of the awareness of some of our industrial leaders of the necessity for some kind of economic planning. Participation of labor through representatives of their own choosing and an equitable distribution of wealth and income should be incorporated in any form of national planning and control.

The principle of co-operative planning must be extended also to world economic relations, including balances of production, consumption and exchange, access to raw materials, questions of tariffs, movement of gold, intergovernmental war debts, and the economic waste of armaments.

Unemployment is so devastating in its physical, mental and moral consequences that the present conditions constitute to our mind a national and international emergency which calls for courageous social action and the adoption of heroic measures adequate to the gravity of the situation.

CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES BY POPULAR ELECTIONS

Washington.—A proposed amendment to the United States constitution to provide for its amendment by the convention system, instead of by state legislatures as at present, was offered in the senate by Senator Bingham, of Connecticut.

Under Senator Bingham's proposal the members of state conventions to consider the federal amendments would be chosen at special elections and consist of not less than the total number of the state's representation in both branches of the United States congress.

Senator Norris, chairman of the senate judiciary committee, said the committee would consider the resolution in January.

As the collection plate passed without a jingle: "I'll give the new minister credit for delivering a splendid sermon," said Sandy McBagpipe.

Joint Committee On Legislation In Formal Report

Recent Session of State Solons Reviewed by Federation and Railroad Brotherhood Representatives.

Report of the joint legislative committee of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and the railroad brotherhoods, received by The Labor World this week, reviews the recent session of the state legislature, including substantially the same "high spots" as were covered by David Hanly, the federation's chairman, in an article published in our last issue.

The joint report is signed by H. V. Reid, chairman, representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; David Hanly, vice-chairman, representing the Tennessee Federation of Labor; W. A. Chrisman, representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engneers; W. E. Jacobs, for the Order of Railroad Conductors; Perry E. Daly, for the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and W. E. Cheek, secretary, representing the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

"We wish to commend our various memberships throughout the state," the committee says, "for the interest manifested by them in writing and wiring their representatives expressing opposition to House Bill No. 38." (This was the bill taxing incomes of working people, advocated by Horton, which was snowed under.) "It is our hope," the committee continues, "that our people will continue their interest in legislative matters. If this is done we can confidently expect that many bills of a remedial nature can be passed for the benefit of the common people of the state."

American Labor Appeals To Federal Government for Aid In Fight Against Starvation

McGrady Tells Senate Committee "Greatest Fear of Our People in This the Richest Country in the World, Is Unemployment and the Specter of Starvation Drawing Nearer and Nearer"—Immediate Aid Imperative.

Washington, Jan. 6.—The American Federation of Labor threw the full force of its influence in favor of direct federal appropriations for unemployment relief in the hearings held by the senate subcommittee of the committee on manufactures on the relief bills sponsored by Senators Robert M. La Follette and Edward P. Costigan asking liberal appropriations to relieve the unemployment situation.

Edward F. McGrady, legislative representative of the federation, told the subcommittee that "the greatest fear of our people in this, the richest country in the world, is unemployment and the specter of starvation drawing nearer and nearer."

Senator La Follette's bill asks an appropriation of $250,000,000 for immediate unemployment relief. Senator Costigan's bill asks $125,000,000 for relief up to the first of July, and $250,000,000 for relief from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933.

Federal Aid Imperative.

"In view of the fact," Mr. McGrady said, "that many of our states, cities and isolated districts frankly admit that they are unable to meet the demands that are being made on them for relief of the needy, the question resolves itself down to this:

"Is our federal government going to allow untold numbers of our American citizenship to suffer, if indeed they do not die, from cold and hunger in the coming months, which will undoubtedly be the worst period of hardship this nation has ever witnessed? Or will the federal government protect the health and lives of our men, women and children by liberally assisting the states, cities and isolated districts which are unable to help themselves?

A. F. of L. Demands Federal Relief.

"It is the belief of the American Federation of Labor," Mr. McGrady continued, "that the national lawmakers should not shirk this responsibility. Indeed, it is a great opportunity for the federal government to renew the faith of the people in their government, a faith that has been badly shattered in the last three years.

"The American Federation of Labor has always felt that the problem of caring for the unemployed and the destitute is first a local problem to be solved by the community, but when it is impossible for the community to do so, the county and state should lend their assistance.

"If the states and communities admit that it is absolutely impossible for them to aid in this relief, then the only agency that can be looked to is the federal government, and we are in favor of liberal appropriations in order that human lives may be saved and hunger and misery and want alleviated.

Specter of Starvation.

"The greatest fear of our people in this, the richest country in the world, is unemployment and the specter of starvation drawing nearer all the time.

"The American Federation of Labor is in a position to know, perhaps better than any other group, just what the conditions are. We have 28,229 local unions in 48 states, and from these 28,000 points we receive monthly reports on the state of unemployment.

Unions Give $52,000,000.

"The American Federation of Labor has prided itself on its efforts to care for its own, and in the last two years we have contributed approximately $52,000,000 to our needy. I will pick a few unions at random.

"The International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' union has contributed $2,300,000 in twelve months; the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, $5,000,000 in two years; the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, $2,841,948 in twelve months; the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' Union of America, $700,000 in twelve months; the International Union of Operating Engineers, $150,000 in twelve months; the United Association of Plumbers and Steamfitters, $1,150,000 in eighteen months; the United Mine Workers, $4,000,000 in three years; the International Typographical union, $4,500,000 in eighteen months, the typographical unions in New York and Chicago contributing $1,350,000; and the International Association of Machinists, $8,310,620 in two years."

7,500,000 Unemployed.

Turning to the volume of unemployment, Mr. McGrady said the American Federation of Labor estimates that there are at least 7,500,000 unemployed, with 6,000,000 more working from one to three days a week.

"This is a conservative estimate and represents the minimum unemployment," he said. "It compares with an average of 2,400,000 out of work in 1929, or an increase since then of over 5,000,000. Of this number there is a large percentage who have been out of work for a very long period, and whose resources are entirely exhausted.

Plight of the Miners.

"I want to particularly call your attention to the conditions of the miners in Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee, Ohio, Kentucky and Pennsylvania. More than 200,000 of them have had no work for a year or more. In five anthracite counties in Pennsylvania we informed the officials that $5,000,000 would be needed to feed and clothe the people. In all the mining sections of Pennsylvania they need not less than $15,000,000 to carry them through the winter."

Twenty Billion Wage Loss.

Mr. McGrady declared that American Federation of Labor statistics show that wage-earners' income in 1931 was $11,000,000,000 below their income for 1929, and that their loss in earnings during 1930 and 1931 compared with 1929 totals from eighteen to twenty billion dollars.

Wages Below Decent Standard.

He said the "average wages paid today are hardly more than half enough to support a family in health and decency, consequently the workers who have held their jobs cannot give much more help to the unemployed."

"If employers are not going to pay their workers decent wages," he warned, "then we insist that a large share of their profits should be taken away from them by taxation and given to impoverished workers through relief agencies."

"A survey by the United States children's bureau," he went on, "shows that relief payments in the first half of 1931 in 88 cities were greater than were paid by 100 cities for the full year in 1930, and nearly four times the amount spent for family relief in 1929.

Children Suffer from Malnutrition.

"The United States public health service informed us a few months ago that more than 6,000,000 of our little school children are suffering from malnutrition, making them easy victims of many serious diseases, and authentic testimony shows that hospitals are reporting an alarming rise in the types of physical trouble due to undernourishment. We cannot now estimate the tragic consequences in the future which will result from such developments.

A. F. of L. Asks Relief.

"Unemployment and its consequent poverty," Mr. McGrady concluded, "is reaching into the lives of men and women in all walks of life. The story of these workers is a story of despair that causes every one of us to wonder about the future safety of our institutions unless a solution is found for the problem.

"Not only in our industrial centers, but particularly in our isolated communities where there are no community chests, the cry of despairing fathers and mothers and undernourished and sick children is rising in greater volume.

"The American Federation of Labor prays that the congress of the United States will see to it that the federal government will lend its aid in the very trying months to come."

Lon Ault Improved By Hospital Stay

Lon Ault, well-known member of Carpenters' Local 74, returned home this week after a stay of seven weeks in a government hospital at Memphis. Mr. Ault, who went to the Bluff City institution for treatment for stomach trouble, said Thursday he is much improved in health, and hopes he will not have to return for further treatment.

PENNSYLVANIA MINERS PAY JOBLESS RELIEF

Shamokin, Pa.—Checks for $15,000 were sent out by Martin F. Brennan, president of District 9, United Mine Workers, to local unions throughout the area between Pottsville and Shamokin for the relief of miners who have been idle. The funds were collected through a monthly assessment placed on every man who worked more than five days a month the last three months.

GOVERNMENT WHEAT TO RELIEVE THE NEEDY

Washington.—The senate committee on agriculture urged the senate to enact legislation to give to charity 40,000,000 bushels of the 189,000,000 bushels of wheat now held by the federal farm board. Senators Capper, of Kansas, and Wheeler, of Montana, sponsored the donation.

President Hoover has opposed any direct appropriation from the federal treasury for feeding or clothing the needy on the ground that it would amount to a dole. He has not expressed himself on the wheat donation proposition.

The resolution prescribes that the wheat shall be distributed by the Red Cross or any other charitable organization designated by the president.

STREET WIDENING PROJECTS POSTPONED

County Court's Progressive Step Halted by Lack of City Funds.

Efforts to have the city commission provide for street-widening work which has been recognized as highly desirable and, in some cases, very necessary, came to naught Tuesday when a committee of Central Chattanooga business men, pleading for several projects in that section of the city, were told that for various reasons such improvements were impossible at this time.

Unfavorable conditions of the bond market, loss of revenues, delinquency of abutting property payments in connection with former projects of this character, and a desire to keep the city within its budgets were given as some of the reasons for the city fathers declining to approve the plans at this time.

The proposed street widening work, which had been urged by various citizens and organizations as particularly desirable at this time as a relief to unemployment, had been approved by the county court, and it was hoped that the city executives would see their way clear to provide the means whereby many days' work for local men might prevent suffering and take scores from the care of charitable organizations and the "bread lines."

Chattanooga Trades and Labor council had strongly indorsed and urged the street widening projects, along with other public works, and considerable disappointment was evident among local trades unionists when the commission announced its position in the matter. The city officials, however, agreed that the widening projects were worthy and promised action on the matter at the earliest possible time.

Tentative agreement was made Tuesday to pay off a deficit of the social service bureau amounting to $10,000, which it is proposed to divide equally between the city and county governments. It is also announced that more free coal has been ordered from the state mines, on which the city pays the freight, and which will be distributed among the needy. Opening of soup kitchens at the various fire halls is also being discussed.

TURNBLAZER INDICTED FOR WRITING A LETTER COMMENDING MINERS

Jobless Must Be Given Relief By Federal Government

Senator Costigan Holds Uncle Sam Must Act, and Battles for Appropriation by Congress.

New York, Jan. 7.—Widespread needless suffering, with possible violence, may be looked for this winter unless Uncle Sam joins with local communities in administering relief.

Senator E. P. Costigan, progressive democrat of Colorado, made that statement here before a large gathering of social workers. He added that the magnitude of unemployment is not recognized and that accepted figures are "too conservative."

He declared that an extensive study made by him and others disclosed that in many cities of 25,000 or more inhabitants the proportion of the population without jobs is ten times above normal.

Costigan came here to pay a tribute to Florence Kelley, general secretary of the National Consumers' league, at its annual luncheon. He took advantage of the occasion to discuss a "grave national emergency."

Says Congress Must Aid.

He predicted that congress will be compelled by public pressure to extend relief and announced he would press his bill providing for a federal appropriation of money needed to deal with the situation.

"The industrial breakdown," he said, "imposes heavy obligations on our public officials to avert starvation and to contribute to the restoration of employment and business confidence."

Work, said Senator Costigan, is the remedy for the situation, but when it cannot be found direct help must be given.

"Don't let us be frightened by words," he continued. "The dole is only a new name for relief from public as distinguished from private funds. It should be remembered that public funds have long cared for the greater part of relief."

Jobless Paid 25 Cents An Hour in Woodyard

Washington.—Twenty-five cents an hour for sawing wood will be paid the itinerant unemployed in Washington by the District of Columbia Committee on Unemployment. Although the committee is a municipal government institution, its funds come from benefit shows and other forms of charity.

The municipal woodyard was set up under the direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia as a sort of penal servitude establishment to drive itinerant jobless out of the city. The definition of "itinerant" is held to include all jobless who have lived in Washington less than one year. Sawing wood is regarded by the authorities as being the hardest kind of work, and they figure that three or four hours of it at 25 cents an hour will drive the wood cutters to some other more, or less, hospitable community.

For jobless workers not classified as itinerant the committee undertakes to provide a certain amount of work at 45 cents an hour in parks and playgrounds, provided the jobless bring letters from two responsible citizens stating that they have lived in the District for more than one year and that they are in need of work.

The work is performed under the direction of the federal office of public buildings and public parks, which is under the control of congress. It is said that the penny-pinchers in the federal government look with favor on the scheme because it will decrease the amount of necessary appropriations for the upkeep of the parks and playgrounds and thus assist the administration in balancing its budget.

JOBLESS WOMEN PROBLEM FOR CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Ottawa, Can.—An Ontario women's association has asked the government to find work for unemployed women. This is a problem that has yet to be solved.

The country has an army of white-collar unemployed. There is also an army of unemployed artisans. Government work for the jobless is almost exclusively of the pick-and-shovel type, a kind of work the white-collar man is not fitted for. Nor is there any place for jobless women in the government works program.

SYRACUSE MAYOR CUTS CITY EMPLOYES' PAY

Syracuse, N. Y.—Mayor Roland B. Marvin, who recently banned all women with husbands from city jobs, decreed a reduction of 10 per cent in the salaries of city employes earning over $1,200 a year. Marvin attributes the city's present deficit of $3,000,000 to funds advanced to the unemployed. The wage cut will "save" Syracuse about $70,000.

SUBMITS ALLEGED GRAND JURY RECORD

Knoxville News - Sentinel Prints Interesting Story With Reference to Indictment of President District 19.

Chattanooga trades unionists were astonished to learn recently that William Turnblazer, of Jellico, president of District 19, United Mine Workers of America, had been included among those against whom indictments for murder conspiracy have been returned at Harlan. Mr. Turnblazer, while possessing an intense zeal for the cause of organized labor, and a deep feeling of sympathy for his fellow man, particularly those who are battling against starvation wages and un-American working conditions, is known throughout this territory as conservative in thought and action, and an unfailing advocate of law and order under any and all conditions.

Much light is thrown on the indictment of the miners' chief, however, by an article in a recent issue of the Knoxville News-Sentinel, Scripps-Howard newspaper which has been publishing many facts on the Kentucky situation ignored by other publications.

The article referred to was sent The Labor World this week by a miner in the strife-torn fields, and is as follows:

William Turnblazer, of Jellico, Tenn., president of District 19, United Mine Workers of America, was indicted for murder conspiracy at Harlan two weeks ago on the testimony of two prosecution lawyers, Fred M. Jones and J. B. Snyder.

Their sole evidence consisted of a letter Turnblazer wrote to W. B. Jones, secretary of the Evarts local, in which he told them, in substance, that it is better to die fighting than starving.

This became known when Turnblazer, who has made bond for $15,000, furnished the News-Sentinel with what he said was a complete record of the testimony presented to the grand jury.

Turnblazer is among forty or more miners and sympathizers who have been indicted at different times in connection with the killing at Evarts last May 5 of three deputy sheriffs. W. B. Jones, the first to be tried, was convicted and sentenced to prison for life. A motion for a new trial has been taken under advisement. William Hightower, president of the local, is now on trial at Mt. Sterling.

The record of the evidence presented to the grand jury in the Turnblazer case follows:

Q—What is your name?

A—Fred M. Jones.

Q—What do you want to tell, Fred?

A—Here is what I want to tell you about Bill Turnblazer. We have got a copy of the official letter he wrote. Here is a copy of it copied by the official court stenographer down at Mt. Sterling. (Letter is read to grand jury from records at Mt. Sterling) which is as follows:

W. B. Jones,
Dear Sir and Brother:
I am enclosing a letter from the chief of police of Jefferson City, Tenn., which I have advised him to get in touch with you and in the event you do not hear from him, I suggest you write him and after reading the letter to your local union or issuing it to the president I wish you would return it to my files.

I wrote him a very nice letter and thanked him for his kind offer and pointed out to him the wonderful fight you are making against the coal operators in Harlan county.

May I also say in this connection that I have been in many coal fields in this country but I have never seen a finer spirit among men than that displayed by the men at Black Mountain and Clover Fork. I point out that it was just such fighting that gave birth to our organization 41 years ago as you men are making. Men may as well die fighting against starvation and inhuman treatment and bad working conditions if you work and starve at the same time and receive nothing for their labor.

Tell the men to carry on and I only wish that I had some of the men with the fighting spirit here in Tennessee that you have at Black Mountain. We have a number of discharged cases, and are putting up the best fight we know how. Received a letter from President Hoover in regard to my telegram in which he advised that Red Cross national chairman was sending down an agent to make investigations. Just don't know what this will mean but we will live in hope that some assistance will be given our people.

With the hope that victory will crown our efforts.

I am yours fraternally,
(Signed) WILLIAM TURNBLAZER.

PROTECTING THE CHILDREN.

The creation of a nation-wide service of information and consultation on local relief and the prevention of delinquency and dependency are necessary for the protection of children, declared Grace Abbott, chief of the U. S. children's bureau, in her annual report.

In emphasizing the need of additional resources for the relief of distress among children, Miss Abbott cited information gained by the children's bureau in its investigation of depressed areas in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Kentucky and other states.

In all of these sections the bureau's investigators found that "unemployment or underemployment has resulted in no wages or inadequate wages. As a result, neglect and undernourishment of children have been the rule" the past year in the mining districts of seven or eight states.

In summing up the results of these surveys, Miss Abbott said:

"Investigation in these mining and small industrial towns in which the whole community life is dependent on the mines or industry which have virtually suspended operation, showed that local public and private resources are quite inadequate in these areas to meet the needs of the children of the unemployed or underemployed men.

"In many of these towns there is little hope of revival of business which will give employment to the numbers who have lived off the industry in the past.

"Demoralization, removal of the workers to other towns, and re-education for other work will be necessary for many.

"Such a program presents special difficulties at the present time.

"In the meantime the children must be fed. These communities are no more capable of carrying the relief load by either local public taxation or local private gifts than is a poor district in a city."

In connection with the demand of railroad executives for heavy wage cuts of railroad employes, Miss Abbott's revelation of wages paid to section laborers is instructive. She said:

"One of the important studies made by the bureau which will be published shortly concerns children of fathers who were employed at maintenance of way work on the railroads.

"The field work for this study was done during a period of general prosperity, but an analysis of the findings showed that none of the men who had worked only as a section laborer earned as much as is considered a necessary minimum for a family of four or five.

"In fact not one earned as much as $1,250 as a section laborer during the year of study.

"Many of the laborers earned far less than $1,250; 29 earned less than $500; 129 earned $500 but less than $750; 212 earned $750 but less than $1,000, and only 101 earned as much as $1,000."

25,000,000 JOBLESS.

Geneva, Switzerland.—The international labor office made an estimate of at least 25,000,000 unemployed workers throughout the world. On the basis of four to a family, this means 100,000,000 people are directly suffering from bread-winners' lack of work.

INDIGESTION

"My work is confining, and often I eat hurriedly, causing me to have indigestion. Gas will form and I will smother and have pains in my chest.

"I had to be careful what I ate, but after someone had recommended Black-Draught and I found a small pinch after meals was so helpful, I soon was eating anything I wanted.

"Now when I feel the least smothering or uncomfortable bloating, I take a pinch of Black-Draught and get relief."

Public Works for Unemployment Relief.

Senator Robert M. La Follette's bill to create an Administration of Public Works and finance it with a federal bond issue of $5,500,000,000 will probably be considered by the senate during January.

Construction Work Necessary to Meet Emergency.

The measure is designed to facilitate public construction during the present emergency and thus provide work and purchasing power for millions of the jobless.

In explaining the necessity for his proposed large federal appropriation for the relief of unemployment, Senator La Follette said:

"We are facing a grave national emergency. This is the third winter of unemployment. At least 7,000,000 men and women are out of work. At least 5,000,000 more are working on part time.

"Prolonged continuance of present economic trends threatens the solvency of large numbers of the surviving banking institutions, insurance companies, savings banks and railroads, as well as the industrial corporations. Drastic measures are necessary to prevent national paralysis.

"The measures proposed by the administration are merely attempts to keep us from slipping deeper into the depression and offer no hope of raising commodity and security prices, which must be achieved if we are to bring about quick recovery.

"The public works expansion proposed by my bill embodies the only emergency program which can be adopted without a long political controversy. It is urgent, therefore, that it should receive the immediate consideration of congress.

Employment for 4,500,000.

"The best estimates indicate that expenditure of $5,500,000,000 for construction would give jobs to 4,500,000 of the unemployed directly. At least twice the number employed directly would be given work indirectly, in the industries supplying materials and in the production of consumers' goods for those whose purchasing power is restored."

$18,000,000,000 Wages and Salary Loss.

Pointing out that the wage and salary loss during the depression reaches the stupendous sum of $18,000,000,000, Senator La Follette claims this large loss in purchasing power has driven many business concerns into bankruptcy, and that the basic thing to turn the tide is to restore some of these billions of buying power. This, he claims, will be the automatic result of the enactment of his bill.

Restore Purchasing Power of Masses.

"The workers employed directly and indirectly as a result of the public works program," he said, "will be enabled to buy shoes, clothing, food and other consumers' goods which they have been able to buy only in limited amounts, or not at all. Restored purchasing power and rising commodity prices will enable consumers once more to purchase automobiles, radios, furniture, and other products.

"Farmers will benefit both through the restoration of demand for food and other products, and through the rise in agricultural commodity prices, and like all other debtors they will benefit from a decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar resulting from rising commodity prices."

$650,000,000 to Expand Federal Public Works.

The bill divides the emergency $5,500,000,000 fund into four parts.

Not more than $650,000,000 is to be used to expand construction by federal agencies, including federal public buildings, forest roads and trails, irrigation and reclamation works, river and harbor and flood control works.

$1,000,000,000 for State Aid.

The bill sets aside $1,000,000,000 for additional grants to aid state public works construction, such as highway and bridge construction, the elimination of railroad grade crossings and of important highway grade crossings.

$3,750,000,000 for Loans to State and Local Authorities.

The greatest part of the emergency fund—up to $3,750,000,000—is made available for loans to state and local authorities to enlarge their public construction work.

These authorities carry on about 90 per cent. of the public construction in the United States. The loans would enable them to expand the program for state, county and municipal highway and street construction, water supply and sewage works, parks and playgrounds, school building construction, and provide the means to enlarge the scope of needed public works in many other directions.

$100,000,000 Loans for Housing Corporations.

The fourth part of the fund is to be used to initiate types of construction which it is hoped will be taken up by private enterprise and continued beyond the period of the emergency. The bill therefore sets aside not over $100,000,000 for loans to limited dividend corporations organized to construct housing for the low income group.

Loans under the bill will be made for not over ten years at an interest rate slightly higher than that paid by the federal government, but not higher than 5 per cent.

It is provided that emergency construction and the sale of bonds shall terminate as soon as industrial construction, measured by the index computed by the federal reserve board, reaches the average of 1923 to 1925.

4½ Per Cent. $50 Bonds.

The $5,500,000,000 issue of bonds to finance Senator La Follette's plan would be issued in $50 denominations and floated by popular subscription. The bonds mature in ten years and carry an interest rate of not to exceed 4½ per cent. Their retirement is provided for by a special fund into which would be paid the proceeds of an additional surtax, probably 2 per cent., on the net income of persons receiving annual net income of $5,000 and over. Persons with incomes from $5,000 to $10,000, who are not now subject to surtaxes, would be permitted to deduct $2,000 from their taxable income if married and $1,000 if unmarried.

Costigan's Jobless Relief Bill.

The bill introduced by Senator Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado, appropriating $375,000,000 to be allocated to the states to assist them in relieving the "hardship and suffering caused by unemployment" is a companion measure to Senator Robert M. La Follette's bill appropriating $250,000,000 for immediate relief.

Both bills provide for the allocation of the federal funds to the various states under rules which reserve to the federal government thorough supervision to see that the federal funds are properly and efficiently expended to relieve distress.

$125,000,000 for Immediate Relief.

Senator Costigan's bill appropriates a total of $375,000,000 for unemployment relief. Of this amount, $125,000,000 becomes available for relief work up to June 30, 1932, and the remaining $250,000,000 for relief work from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933.

Forty per cent. of the appropriation will be apportioned among the states on the basis of population. The remaining 60 per cent., minus administrative expenses, may be allotted to the states from time to time on the declaration by qualified state agencies that available funds are below the estimated needs for emergency relief.

Federal Board for Unemployment Relief.

The bill creates a federal board for unemployment relief to administer the fund. The board consists of the chief of the children's bureau, the director of the extension work in the department of agriculture, and the chief of the vocational rehabilitation service of the federal board for vocational education.

Rules Governing Allotment of Relief Funds.

To qualify for allotments from the federal fund the states are required to accept the provisions of the act by legislation or executive authority and create or designate state agencies to cooperate with the children's bureau.

States desiring to receive allotments must submit certain data to the federal board, including estimates required for home relief and work relief. Applications for allotments must be approved by the board.

The children's bureau may institute investigations to verify the accuracy of the state reports.

Local initiative and responsibility are stressed as necessary for the adequate administration of the state allotments.

"Home Relief" Districts to Distribute Funds.

The bill emphasizes the desirability of distributing the state allotments in the form of "home relief" and "work relief," and suggests "home relief districts" as a proper unit to supervise the distribution.

Home relief districts are defined as the usual local government units through which public relief is ordinarily administered.

"Home Relief" and "Work Relief" Defined.

"Home relief" includes providing shelter, fuel, food, clothing, medical attention, and other necessaries to the needy. Veterans receiving pensions, and the recipients of old-age pensions and mothers' pensions are excluded.

"Work relief" means "wages or other compensation for work" furnished according to need to provide maintenance for the unemployed and their families.

Provision is also made for the distribution of large amounts of flour made from wheat held by the grain stabilization corporation.

The Ethics of the "Closed Shop"

By T. R. Cuthbert

Opponents of trades unionism usually start their tirades against our existence thus: "I believe in your principles, except . . ." and then cite some imagined "wrong" we have committed. One gentleman recently pulled a new one on me. He admitted that we were organized from necessity; we protected ourselves collectively where we would fail as individuals. He admits we have driven the industrial beasts back into the jungle, to a great extent. Yet, he fervently denounces the "unprincipled" and "unAmerican" policy of telling the nonunion worker "that he can not work in union factories"!

"Imagine," he cries, "prohibiting an Amer-r-r-ican citizen from working." (Pause for deep sobs for said citizen). It may be true, he continues, and it is more than likely true, that the nonunion gentry is not quite so competent; the more reason, he urges, that, being the weaker, the nonunionist should be allowed to enter our organized shops, enjoy our protection and benefits—and stay nonunion.

In refutation (not in defense) the nonunionist is NOT denied the privilege of working with us. All he needs to do is to take up his rightful share of his obligation and join the union. We welcome him. We place no unjust demands or bars on him.

And why should he not join the union?

Does anyone admire the parasite? Consider the sacrifices by a group of men who have banded together for mutual protection. They fought for and gained cleaner workrooms; they wrested a fairer wage from the hard-hearted, greedy employer; they secured the right to spend some of their lives with their families instead of in prolonged labor. Why, then, should the nonunion worker insist on the privilege of enjoying these betterments without contributing to its security? He has no moral right to work in a union shop unless he earns that right.

Consider the "open shop" idea from a practical standpoint. Union successes are gained by solidarity. Individuals are helpless in their single capacity. Protesting individuals are discharged as rapidly as they raise their heads; at last these discharges become examples to the rest of the unorganized herd. Finally the herd gets a bit of intelligence. They organize. When a complaint is made, it is done en mass. The unjust boss is then forced to deal with them as human beings banded together for a common good. After the herd, through bitter experience, has adopted collective action, is it likely to jeopardize its safety by allowing an individualist system to permeate its ranks once more? Certainly not! Such loose tactics head toward a certain punishment from the employer when enough unorganized workmen have infiltrated our workrooms.

The law of "the greatest good for the greatest number," is one of the mainstays of our U. S. Constitution. When a group of southern states decided to become individuals and secede from our union, they were forced by arms to stay in. No one now denies the wisdom of this action.

Can you imagine a lawyer practicing unless he joins the lawyers' union? If he does, he goes to prison. In all professions there is a banding together into associations; the individual that attempts to practice alone is doomed to failure. It is sensible and logical. The parasite is unethical, uneconomical and unmoral.

Just as a good, moral, kind, just and Christ-like person MUST join the Christian union to enter into heaven and enjoy the benefits thereof, in the same measure should an earthly being declare himself in order to enjoy earthly benefits.

Is Capitalism Worth Saving?

Hamilton Fish, member of congress from New York, and Norman Thomas, socialist propagandist, have been debating the question of whether we ought to pitch in and save the capitalist system.

It is one of forty-odd foolish subjects for debate.

The term "capitalist system" came to us from the socialist vocabulary. It means many things to many men. Perhaps its most generally accepted meaning is a system under which there is private ownership of capital, including wealth of all kinds.

Such debates settle nothing and produce very little enlightenment.

Generally their main purpose is to center attention on the debaters and their notions.

"Shall we try to save the capitalist system?" Or, "Is it worth saving?"

In the first place there is no such thing, strictly speaking, as a capitalist system.

Our system, if we have one, is a mixture of many things. In the United States we have everything from feudalism to public ownership.

And we have no static system of any kind. No system that stands still is the same today as yesterday.

"The system," whatever it is, changes from day to day and from year to year. It moves and grows. It develops and it changes.

The postoffice system once was privately operated. It once was a combination of runner, stage coach and pony express. It has changed and it is changing. So is everything else.

* * * *

Nobody needs bother much about saving the capitalist system, or any other system.

What we must save is the opportunity of the people to express themselves effectively, to join in voluntary action, to have the final voice in making decisions, in short to rule themselves.

What we need is to keep the road to the future wide open. That road is the thing to save.

What we want to bother about is democracy, not the system sometimes called the capitalist system.

In Italy there is the fascist system and the road to change is closed.

In Russia there is the soviet system and the road to change is blocked.

Whatever system a people elect to have is right, at the time and for that people. The important thing, for all peoples, is the right to elect change—to move forward.

We do not want to preserve in America the faults out of which we have derived unemployment, but we do want the right to preserve the right things out of which we have gained what we believe to be good.

Labor points out the right course. Preserve and improve democracy and with the machinery of democracy the people will shape their course toward the light.

Keep the road open and there will be progress, orderly and continuous. Close the road and then you have to look out for explosions.

New Film Shows How Machines Take Jobs of Women Workers

Washington, Jan. 7.—Economic planning as an important factor in keeping technological changes in industry from adding to unemployment, is advocated in a new motion picture just released by the women's bureau, United States department of labor.

The film, entitled "Behind the Scenes in the Machine Age," shows how modern machines are taking the place of human hands and turning out more goods in the making of many everyday things, such as silk hose, books, cigars, automobile cushions, sterile bandages, and so on.

In a series of factory scenes, with the regular women employes busy at their jobs, a contrast is given between hand and machine processes for producing the same article. Definite facts and figures tell the story of how machines increase output and decrease the number of workers.

For example, 12 girls formerly packed 17,000 boxes of cereal a day; a machine with five girls now turns out the same amount. In gathering pages for books 20 girls used to do by hand what six girls with the help of a machine produce today. In cigar making a machine with four operators takes the place of 15 hand workers.

Animated cartoons form an effective feature of the film and reveal various conditions in industry making for human waste, with its widespread effects. Such causes of waste as hunting for jobs, occupational misfits, long hours, low wages, poor working conditions, unemployment, industrial injuries and diseases are pointed out as weak links in the industrial chain.

The efficacy of such measures as a short workday, a living wage, well-ventilated workrooms, good lighting and seating, sanitary drinking and washing facilities, and a safety-first equipment and program in maintaining the health and efficiency of women workers is interestingly portrayed.

Buffalo Unemployment Gains Fourfold Over 1929 Figure

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 7.—Preliminary results of the third annual study of unemployment in nine areas in Buffalo, N. Y., were announced by Industrial Commissioner Frances Perkins. Since studies of a like nature covering the same area were made in November, 1929, and in November, 1930, comparisons may be made in regard to employment conditions at those dates and at the present.

The enumeration was made during the first week in November in each of the three years. In November, 1931, data were obtained for 15,329 usually employed persons of both sexes. Of that number 4,047, or 26.4 per cent., were unemployed for various reasons, of whom 3,486, or 22.8 per cent. of those enumerated, were able and willing to work, but unable to secure jobs. The number of persons on part time was 3,220 ,or 21 per cent. of those enumerated, while those employed full time totaled 8,062, or 52.6 per cent. of al lpersons included in the study.

Comparing the results for the three studies of unemployment it was found that of the males who were able and willing to work, those who could not secure jobs constituted 62 per thousand in November, 1929; 172 per thousand in November, 1930; 242 per thousand in November, 1931. The proportion of males able and willing to work but unable to find jobs was nearly four times as great in 1931 as in 1929 and about one and one-third times as great in 1931 as in 1930.

Those males who were employed part time at the time of each of the studies were 71 per thousand in 1929, 186 per thousand in 1930, 232 per thousand in 1931.

The proportion of males able and willing to work but able to find only part time employment was about three times as great in 1931 as in 1929 and about one and one-fourth time sas great in 1931 as in 1930.

New U. S. Bulletin Says Vocational Training Helps Workers Hold Jobs

Washington, Jan. 7.—The desirability of extension training for adults already employed so as to make them more efficient in their jobs, keep them posted on new developments in their occupations, and thus protect them more securely from unemployment resulting from industrial chanes, is emphasized by the federal board for vocational education in its publication, "Vocational Training and Unemployment," just published.

Employed workers who desire additional training to improve their job efficiency, it is pointed out, may be taken care of in part time and evening vocational classes. In the industrial fields, however, the board is at some pains to point out, extension training for adult workers is, under the vocational education act, limited to instruction supplemental to the daily occupations of such workers. For example, carpenters may attend an evening school for instruction in the use of the steel square as a mathematical instrument of their trade. On the other hand, persons employed as delivery and errand boys, taxi drivers, golf caddies, elevator operators and soda fountain clerks may not be admitted to an evening vocational class aided by federal funds for instruction in carpentry, drafting, bricklaying or plastering.

Emergency training to suit present unemployment conditions is possible, according to the federal board's report. Vocational schools for emergency training, the board points out, should be open and in operation preferably from 8 o'clock in the morning until 10:30 or 11 at night and should remain in operation even during vacation periods. Training should be flexible enough to permit a student to enter and leave any time and to get instruction limited to the training requirements of specific jobs.

No training program should be undertaken, the board feels, without recourse to the assistance and information which those in industry—employers and workers—can give. Exact, authentic information as to the availability of jobs, the shortage if any of qualified workers, job requirements for training, and the training facilities available or those which should be provided, can best be determined through the representatives of industry. Incidentally, there is slight chance where the counsel of industrial groups is sought, of making the mistake of training individuals for jobs in which there is no possibility of placement in the community, the board believes.

New England Firms in Tendency "To Ease Out" Veteran Workers

Boston, Mass., Jan. 7.—There has been a marked tendency during the past year, among some of the manufacturing firms of New England, toward the "easing out" of veteran employes. This applies to both the wage-earners and those on salaries, but particularly to the wage-earners.

Some of the men have been on the pay rolls for from thirty to forty-five years and these have been the first to go, under the prevailing retrenchment program that applies to all industrial concerns.

Not always have the men been notified that they are permanently through. It is often "a layoff."

One moulder of forty years' service has been laid off for six months with little likelihood of being restored to the pay roll this year at least.

MINIMUM FOOD URGED.

The Minneapolis Central Labor union has urged the Minneapolis board of public welfare to adopt a minimum of $15 a week for groceries for families of five dependent upon the city for relief. R. D. Cramer, representing the central body, told the welfare board that it was misleading for the board and similar bodies to tell state and national governments that everyone was being taken care of when those seeking relief were receiving only a scanty food allowance.

GOTHAM FIREMEN PRESS FIGHT FOR EIGHT-HOUR WORKING DAY

New York City.—The firemen of New York City will not declare a moratorium on their efforts to gain an eight-hour working day even though the year is all but over, according to statements issued by Vincent J. Kane, president of the Uniformed Firemen's association. The bill for an eight-hour working day as originally introduced into the municipal assembly provides that the bill be effective the first of the year. In the event there is not favorable action before 1931 expires the bill will be introduced again and the campaign will be continued next year.

Signatures to the eight-hour day petition have now gone beyond the two millionth mark and before the end of the year 2,500,000 are expected to be on the petition.

PAY CUTS ASSAILED AS CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY

Chicago.—"Further reductions of wages are further crimes against humanity," declared Donald R. Richberg, general counsel for the railway labor organizations that have been asked to accept a 10 per cent cut in pay.

There is "no law under which a railway worker can be compelled to donate part of his wages to charity," Richberg said.

Assertion that workers must accept a wage reduction or have it forced upon them were described by Richberg as "emtpy threats, the bluff and bluster of those who have failed to govern industry wisely, and who now show signs of being unable to govern themselves."

The final action of the employe must be voluntary, Richberg added.

Railroad Travel Increasing.

Despite the fact that the railroads are howling hard times and steadily decreasing freight and passenger traffic, and are negotiating with the brotherhoods for a reduction in wages, two railroads operating through Chattanooga have announced the inauguration of additional trains to Florida to take care of the increased southbound seasonal travel. The Southern has announced the Royal Palm Special, to run in addition to the Royal Palm, from Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Cincinnati to points in Florida.

The regular Florida service offered by the Dixie Flyer on the N., C. & St. L. has been augmented by the addition of the Dixie Limited, with improved schedules for both trains.

No doubt other railroads are adding additional passenger service.

If the roads are successful in inducing the brotherhoods to take reductions this increased passenger traffic should keep "depression" dividends on railroad stocks on a par with "prosperity" dividends, especially since many of the railroads have announced cuts in the wages of unorganized employes. The N., C. & St. L. has announced a 10 per cent cut in the salaries of subordinate officials, which affects sixteen Chattanooga men whose combined annual salaries total $39,400. President James B. Hill, of the N., C. & St. L., states his road's loss during the past year would be approximately $500,000.

Does he mean that the profits of the road are a half million dollars less than they were last year, or does he mean the operating expenses were a half million dollars more than the actual receipts? Figure out for yourself what he means.

Radio Strike Averted.

Radio fans did not have to tune out important Chicago stations New Year's morning because of an inferior quality of non-union music, as was feared they would have to when the Chicago Federation of Musicians ordered some 400 radio musicians to go out on strike on New Year's Eve. The stations did not wish to incur the ill will of the fans by putting an inferior quality of music on the air so they speedily came to an agreement with the musicians, shortening the hours of work and increasing the maximum number of men in orchestras, maintaining the same pay schedules. News dispatches make no mention about other demands of the union, so it is not known if the union succeeded in replacing radio technicians at the control boards with musicians. However, the strike was averted and 400 musicians will remain at work with the possibility that many more will be employed because of the increase in the maximum number of men in orchestras.

More Safety Needed on Bus Lines.

Bus lines seem to be suffering the heaviest in accidents which cause loss of life than any other branch of transportation. Hardly a day passes but what we see newspaper reports of accidents to buses in which people lose their lives.

Operators of bus lines should pattern after their older competitors, the railroads, in working toward the elimination of accidents.

Railroads long ago realized that costly accidents must be held down to the lowest possible minimum, and accordingly took the necessary steps to prevent them. They have strict safety rules which must be obeyed by their employes. Every man employed in the operation of their trains, no matter how minor a part he plays, is trained to keep the idea of safety uppermost in his mind. The section worker, one of the furthest away from actual operation of the trains, is trained to realize that carelessness on his part in his work on the roadbed and the tracks may result in a serious wreck. The watchmen at grade crossings realize that their carelessness may result in the loss of life.

The engineer, on whom rests the confidence of hundreds of people back in the coaches, must pass rigid safety examinations which would stump the bus driver, if he wants to hold his job. The idea of safety is the predominant factor in the training of railroad men.

Every wreck is investigated from every angle, and steps taken to prevent the occurrence of another such wreck.

The bus companies would do well to work along the same lines.

There are thousands of safety-trained railroad men out of employment now. The predominant thought in the minds of these men when at work is safety.

Probably the most progressive step the bus companies could take would be to employ these idle railroad men in the operation of their buses. It would be unnecessary to put them through an expensive period of safety training, for they have already been trained.

The buses, being common carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers and freight, should be governed by state and federal laws just as strict as those which apply to the railroads. They should be under the control of the interstate commerce commission, or under the direct control of state boards with the I. C. C. having supervisory authority over the state boards.

The buses seem to be here to stay. Alright, let them stay—but make them safer to ride in. Put competent, safety-trained men in charge of them. Give these jobs a rate or pay which will induce the safety-trained unemployed railroad men to take them and do away with the high-school-boy bus driver who never saw the inside of a bus until he started driving one.

The buses are making such inroads on the railroads that hundreds of railroaders are being thrown out of work, so it is nothing but right, from a labor point of view, that the bus companies should employ these men.

The bus companies won't lose by employing these safety-trained railroaders at a higher rate of pay than they are paying their present crop of bus drivers who seem to be inexperienced in safety. They will have fewer accidents and fewer lawsuits resulting from accidents.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter II
JESUS AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES
PART IV: THE PHARISEES

In concluding these articles on Jesus and the Pharisees, which are but introductory to a study of the social ideals of Jesus, let me say that my idea in treating at such length

WM. L. MOSS

Jesus' contact with the Pharisees has been for the purpose of bringing out the marked differences between the Master and those who called themselves His enemies. The wide gulf between the social ideals of Jesus and the Pharisees is apparent to even the least discerning—it is made plain on every page of the four gospels. Pharisaism sanctioned the practice of retaliation—the pitting of man against man—a sanction which encouraged the vindictive temper of a highly religious and oppressed people.

Jesus taught that for a man to even harbor in his mind the thoughts of hatred was the first step in the act of murder—for in this as in all else the thought was father to the act.

The Pharisees taught that blow must be returned for blow.

Jesus taught His followers to turn the other cheek for a second blow rather than pay back the first in kind.

The Pharisees taught easy divorce, and we of today have in large part returned to this Pharisaic view, but Jesus declared marriage an indissoluble bond that had heaven's sanction and therefore that which heaven had knit together no man was to tear asunder.

The radical defect with the Pharisaical system was that it placed religious and moral matters on a purely legal basis. The letter of the law was all that one had to observe—the spirit of the law was scornfully trampled under foot or altogether forgotten.

Jesus taught the whole law must be observed—the letter as well as the spirit. That is why when Jesus speaks of our righteousness as something which must exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees He means a righteousness not of law but of love and partaking of the infinitude of God Himself. It is a righteousness that is social as well as religious in that it exalts the Father, and in exalting Him will cultivate a wholesome respect in our minds for the Father's other children here on earth.

In making our religion a social as well as ecclesiastical tribute to the Father we approach a little closer to the Divine Pattern—the Divine Perfection, if you please—that was revealed in Christ Jesus. If we try to love socially our fellowmen as we try to love God in a religious way we will discover that our power of love, like all other powers, expands with use! He that loveth is born of God, and he who loves most will come closest—though that closest is at best far off—to the fulfillment of the Christ's ideal, fully realized in Him alone: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your heavenly Father is perfect." And Jesus taught that the father loves every one of His children without exception!

Appomattox

Written for The Labor World
By GEORGE F. SAMUELS

APPOMATTOX serves not only to mark the close of the Civil war, but for the economic student it is also the event of that period by which we may divide the psychological state of mind of those in the industrial world, whether they be employers or employes. It was immediately after Lee's surrender at Appomattox and coincident with the return within a most incredibly short time of the mercantile life of the nation to its pre-war activities that everybody in the United States seemed to become engulfed in an intense materialism.

Describing this post-war spirit of materialism that took hold of the people of this country following the Civil war, Samuel P. Orth aptly observes that "to foreigners the United States was then simply a scrambling mass of selfish units . . . All the manifold currents of life seemed swallowed up in the commercial maelstrom." Every small shop owner, big plant executive, white-collared clerk, government employe, day laborer and skilled craftsman was for himself—with the devil working long stretches of overtime trying to harvest the hindmost!

During this remarkable postwar period—the first outcropping of our national disease of industrial insanity—there came into use a new word in the phraseology of commerce. The little word "plant" sprang into common use, designating the mill or factory which from a small beginning had grown with succeeding years into a colossal affair. Still another word was born out of that postwar industrial drama then being enacted in this country. Throughout the land the short-line railways were either being bought outright or stolen by other and more powerful roads, and when a big railroad had acquired several of these smaller lines they were all merged into one corporation, the word "system" coming into general use in referring to such amalgamations.

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Who said: "I regard it as the imperative duty of all members of organized labor to give their moral and financial support to the labor press of the country?"

A.—Samuel Gompers.

Q.—How did organized labor state its stand as regards representation on public bodies?

A.—The American Federation of Labor said: "Labor has a right to representation on all agencies that control or determine public policies or matters of general concern."

Q.—Has organized labor indorsed the effort of the firemen of New York City to secure the eight-hour day?

A.—Yes. The Vancouver convention of the A. F. of L. instructed the officers to co-operate with the International Association of Fire Fighters in winning legislation providing the eight-hour day for the New York firemen.

What Next!

A new fluid engine, different in principle of operation from any in existence, has been invented in England, and it is claimed it will revolutionize many forms of locomotion. The medium used in the new engine is liquid instead of gas. It is asserted that it will give to small engines burning coal the same high efficiency as large turbines, with a great reduction in the cost of power, and that there is, moreover, an entire absence of risk from explosion, while the working engine itself, as apart from the generating element, is always quite cold.

Self-opening doors, to be operated by an invisible ray of light, will be installed in a new restaurant to be opened in New York City. These doors lead to the serving room and are for the convenience of waitresses. When the waitress approaches within a few feet of the door she intercepts a light-beam the size of a half-dollar. Merely the act of intercepting this beam releases a mechanism which automatically flings the doors wide open.

Restless, could not sleep

"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would have to lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.

My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

ALONG MELODY LANE

By JOHNNY MAHONEY

Among the Christmas presents exchanged between members of the local we see where Lloyd Dutcher gave George Ryerson a whole carton of "fags."

Miss Nell Brenizer's Cameolians were augmented by more real talent this past week. Pauline McCurdy and Leonard Exum, both well known over radio here, had prominent parts, while Jimmie Third was held over a week to give his spoon numbers. Miss Eva Scott, beautiful, talented and young, almost made Tommy Tomlinson drop his fiddle.

The local welcomes Dillon Greene, who performs on the trombone. Dillon took the oath of obligation along with Bill Still at the last meeting.

Ralph Miller, of the Sunshine Boys, is the owner of a brand new pipe. From the way Buck Weaver has been looking at it lately, we rather doubt if Mr. Miller will have it much longer.

We are pleased to welcome Stanley Harold back to Chattanooga again. Stanley is a real violinist and is now Dr. Harold to the general public. Whenever you get a bone loose anywhere, just call for Stanley.

President Summers took a big chance last meeting when he appointed a new examination committee composed of Jimmy Cox, Tom O'Neal and Des Keese. What chance has a musician now!

Last week's meeting was a total failure without Dick Stamper. Some thought it best to postpone the meeting entirely, but Buck Weaver agreed to take Dick's place until next month.

Frank Worthy reports his best derby hat stolen and offers a $5 reward for its return. George Rodgers said he would give $5 to anyone who would wear it in publc.

Uncle John Washburn reports that only two of the second-handed fiddle strings that he offered for sale Christmas week have been taken. You know, John, they make Bill play mighty soft at the radio station.

FAMOUS MAGICIAN TO APPEAR AT MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM

Birch, young magician picked by the great Thurston as his logical successor as the world's greatest exponent of magic, will appear at the Memorial auditorium Friday and Saturday nights, with a special matinee Saturday.

Heralded as "an inspirational entertainment of startling effects, amazingly different, with laughs galore," the "mystery man" comes highly recommended by the daily press in cities where he has performed his mystifying feats. Some of his "stunts" are declared to be baffling to the most critical, including the following features:

He "Slices a young lady into four separate parts; shoots a live canary into a light bulb; walks away from his shadow; drives steel spikes through neck and wrists of volunteer assistant; floats a young lady in space; makes a pony disappear before the eyes of his audience, and fifty other startling illusions."

A large supporting company, with a carload of elaborate scenery and lighting effects, are said to be part of the entertainment's equipment. Scale of prices has been set at an extremely low figure, and it is believed the Chattanooga public will appreciate the opportunity of enjoying a real entertainment of this nature.

MORE ABOUT TURNBLAZER

Q—Did Jones get this letter?
A—This letter was received by Jones from Turnblazer and was brought out in court that he read it two or three times to the men in his speeches up there.
Snyder followed Jones. His examination follows:
Q—What do you want to tell, Mr. Snyder?
A—I don't know. I suppose it is about the same thing that Fred was in here on.
Q—About this letter from Turnblazer?
A—Yes.
Q—This is a certified copy, isn't it?
A—Yes.
Q—Well, if that is all you may go.

5,000 NEW YORK HOTEL EMPLOYES LOSE THEIR JOBS

New York.—About 5,000 former hotel workers here have been thrown back on the labor market and will in all probability be found among the jobless, according to a study made by the New York state department of labor. In normal times the hotels in New York City employ around 60,000 persons, of which about half are women. Now there are nearly 10 per cent less persons on the pay rolls.

PRISON OR FORCED LABOR GOODS BARRED AS IMPORTS

Washington.—Regulations prohibiting importation of goods produced with forced indentured labor or convict labor were issued by the treasury department, as provided under the tariff act of 1930. The decree became effective Jan. 1.

The tariff law holds that forced labor is labor obtained under duress. The prohibition does not apply to foreign goods not produced in the United States and necessary to meet our consumptive demands.

RAILROAD WITHDRAWS 10% WAGE CUT DECREE

Chicago.—The officials of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad withdrew their 10 per cent wage cut decree affecting 5,000 members of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes, which resulted in a strike ballot being taken.

The wage cut was made effective Oct. 6. The old scale will be restored.

The settlement was accomplished at a conference between a committee of railroad union men headed by Frederick H. Fljozdal, president of the employes' organization, and Fred W. Sargent, president of the railroad.

RAIL UNIONS SET JAN. 14 TO MEET RAIL PRESIDENTS

Cleveland, O.—The Railroad Executives' association, comprising twenty-one brotherhoods and unions, set Jan. 14 as the date for meeting in Chicago with a committee of nine railroad presidents to discuss the unions' proposals for unemployment relief and the railroad executives' demand for a 15 per cent wage cut.

P. O. Department Destroying Jobs

Flaherty Claims Substitute Clerks Are Victimized by New Speed-up Policy.

Washington, Jan. 7.—"At a time when the whole world is in economic difficulties because of lack of jobs, First Assistant Postmaster General Coleman aggravates the situation within the postal service by trying to institute further economies to make jobs scarcer," declares Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, in an editorial in the Union Postal Clerk criticizing an order of Coleman's to spread the work day to eight hours within ten, which deprives the substitute of work opportunities.

"By rearranging the hours and speeding up still faster a work machine already geared to a rapid pace," Flaherty continues, "Mr. Coleman has brought distress and want into many homes. He has shoved backward into late night hours many veteran clerks who are justly entitled to better treatment, and he has taken away from many substitutes an opportunity to earn a living. All of this in the sacred name of economy!"

Violates Job Plan of President's Committee.

To bring official condemnation to the job-destroying policy of Coleman, the editorial quotes the following paragraphs from the remedies for unemployment recommended by the committee on employment plans and suggestions of the president's organization on unemployment relief:

"It is the considered opinion of this committee that we have arrived at a phase of our industrial progress where it is necessary to adopt a new attitude toward work itself. The responsibility to provide work for every willing, able citizen must carry with it the responsibility for seeing that available work is distributed with attention to the best interests of the nation."

Editor Flaherty concludes with the charge that Mr. Coleman is not applying the policy of work distribution recommended by the president's organization. He says:

"It would appear that Mr. Coleman's idea of having the regular employes neglect their usual routine tasks—or hurriedly perform them—in order to be available for substitutes' work during the rush hours, is in sharp conflict with the judgment of the president's committee.

"How in common sense can the president expect the general public or private employers to take his unemployment remedies seriously when his postal administrators are flaunting them so flagrantly? More things than charity might well begin at home. It is disappointing that the government's largest civil establishment, the postal service, should set such a bad example."

BALTIMORE P. O. CLERKS PROTEST DISMISSAL ORDERS

Baltimore, Md.—A committee representing the substitute clerks of the Baltimore postoffice protested to President Hoover against the order of the assistant postmaster of Baltimore in discontinuing the services of a number of substitute clerks. The order was issued, the assistant postmaster said, in conformity with instructions from the postoffice department at Washington "to discontinue clerical and labor auxiliary throughout the service wherever it is possible to do so."

"Most of us are married men," the protest said, "with families to support. Some of us are buying homes. For all of us this means the loss of property or savings that we may have, a burden of debt from which we will not escape for years to come. Some of us, unable to borrow, may have to appeal for aid to charitable institutions or take our places in a bread line. We think you will agree that this is a shameful way for a government to treat its employes."

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

ILL MAKE NEW APPEAL TO CITY FOR PUBLIC WORK

ntral Body Hears Pleas for Aid.

ELEGATES CONTEND PROGRAM IMPERATIVE

press Disappointment at Attitude of Commission on Street Widening Proposals.

Keen disappointment at the attitude of the city commission with reference to street-widening projects was voiced Monday night by delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and a renewed effort will be made to have the board to use all means within its power to provide employment for local workers.

Recalling that city authorities had taken the stand that dwindling revenues and a desire to keep within the budgets made such public work at the present time impossible, although the desirability for initiating such work never was frankly recognized, delegates from various local unions contended that prevention of starvation is more important than a balanced budget, and that the city might well afford to go "into the red" in such a dire emergency to stabilize to an extent local employment conditions.

It was recalled that national leaders have attested the soundness of public works in general based upon a sane and reasonable program—are absolutely imperative at this time, and one delegate pointed to the urgent appeal of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the National Catholic Welfare Conference and the Central Conference of American Rabbis, published in The Labor World last week, to government, state and municipal authorities, to initiate such programs to avoid mass starvation in the months to come.

The ill-fated street-widening project, it was held, would have gone a long way toward relieving the immediate stress, and the opinion was unanimous that new and urgent representations should be made to the city government to rescind the action taken last week, and use every effort to have the work begun as soon as possible.

A special committee was named to take the matter up with the commission.

SUGGESTS GREAT LABOR DAY FETE

Suggestion that the Chattanooga labor movement begin early and plan the greatest and most elaborate celebration of Labor Day in the city's history found general favor at the regular meeting of Central Body Monday night, and plans were made to sound out the sentiment of the rank and file on a program which would be different from any yet offered by the local workers.

It is planned to first secure the co-operation of all crafts, and to follow this by appointment of a committee of one or more from each and every local union to carry out the provisions of the project. Suggestions as to the nature of the celebration are yet in the formative stage, and opinions are invited from any craft or individual.

The main point at the present time, it was explained, is to "sell" the idea of a monster observance on the first Monday in September.

"Jack" Stacy Passes

Friends of E. S. Stacy, well-known member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, regret to learn of the death, on Jan. 3, of the trades union's brother, M. J. "Jack" Stacy, at his home on the Ringgold road. Mr. Stacy was 49 years of age and had been in ill health for a long time. Following funeral services at Wann's, the remains were taken to the old home, Dalton, for interment.

Resolutions of sympathy have been prepared for introduction at the regular meeting of Local 43 Friday night, and The Labor World joins the members and other friends in extending heartfelt condolences to the bereaved relatives.

Report Assails Prosecution in Mooney's Trial

Wickersham Commission Experts Score California's Handling of Case and Charge Flagrant Law Violation.

Washington, Jan. 13.—Methods employed by the prosecution in the Mooney-Billings case are scathingly criticized in a hitherto unpublished report prepared by experts of the Wickersham commission and submitted to the senate in response to a resolution requesting it introduced by Senators Walsh, of Montana; Cutting, of New Mexico, and Costigan, of Colorado.

The report strongly backs up charges that Thomas J. Mooney and Warren K. Billings were the victims of perjured evidence at their trials for alleged complicity in the bombing of the San Francisco Preparedness day parade of 1916. Police and prosecution at the trials flagrantly violated the California law, the report says.

The report was sent to the senate by the department of justice. It was never accepted by the Wickersham commission, which contended it had no right to review a state case. The document was prepared by Zachariah Chafee, Jr., Walter H. Pollock and Carl S. Stern, research and investigation experts of the commission.

Police Prejudice Charged.

After a detailed account of the arrest and conviction of Mooney and Billings, the report concluded as follows:

"There never was any scientific attempt made by the police or the prosecution to discover the perpetrators of the crime.

"The investigation was in reality turned over to a private detective, who used his position to cause the arrest of the defendants.

"The police investigation was reduced to a hunt for evidence to convict the arrested defendants.

"There were flagrant violations of the statutory law of California by both the police and the prosecution in the manner in which the defendants were arrested and held incommunicado, and in the subsequent searches of their homes to procure evidence against them.

"Fake" Identifications Made.

"After the arrest of the defendants, witnesses were brought to the jails to 'identify' them and their 'identifications' were accepted by the police and the prosecution, despite the fact that these witnesses were never required to pick the defendants out of a line-up or to demonstrate their accuracy by any other test.

"Immediately after the arrests of the defendants there commenced a deliberate attempt to arouse public prejudice against them, by a series of almost daily interviews given to the press by prosecuting officials.

"Witnesses were produced at the trials with information in the hands of the prosecution that seriously challenged the credibility of the witnesses, but this informattion was deliberately concealed.

Witnesses "Coached."

"Witnesses were permitted to testify at the trials despite such knowledge in possession of the prosecution of prior contradictory stories told by these witnesses, as to make their mere production a vouching for perjured testimony.

"Witnesses were coached in their testimony to a degree that approximated subornation of perjury. There is a strong inference that some of this coaching was done by prosecuting officials and other evidence points to knowledge by the prosecuting officials that such coaching was being practiced on other witnesses.

Jury Argument Unfair.

"The prejudice against the defendants, stimulated by newspaper publicity, was further appealed to at the trials by unfair and intemperate arguments to the jury in the opening and closing statements of the prosecuting attorneys.

"After the trials, the disclosures casting doubt on the justice of the convictions were minimized, and every attempt made to defeat the liberation of the defendants by a campaign of misrepresentation and propaganda carried on by the officials who had prosecuted them."

RAILROAD WORKERS TO MEET WITH RAIL HEADS JAN. 14

Cleveland, Jan. 13.—Jan. 14 has been set by the Railway Labor Executives' association as the date for meeting with a committee of railroad presidents in Chicago to discuss the labor organizations' proposal for unemployment relief and the railroads' demands for wage cuts. At a meeting in December of 1,500 general chairmen of the railroad labor unions, the railroad executives were invited to appoint a committee to meet with a committee of the workers. The invitation was accepted at a meeting of railroad presidents in New York.

Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes

William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, issued the following statement at Washington Wednesday on learning of the resignation of Mr. Justice Holmes as a Member of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The great masses of the people composed of working men and women are filled with a deep sense of loss over the resignation of Mr. Justice Holmes as a Member of the Supreme Court of the United States. He is greatly beloved by these groups. He occupies a very large place in their hearts and affections. During all his years of service to the country as a Member of the Supreme Court he never wavered in his devotion to those humane principles which he espoused as a young lawyer and later as a great Judge. He made the Constitution of the United States an actual force for good and a safeguard of the rights and liberties of the citizens of the United States. He refused to accept the doctrine that the Constitution was inflexible and impossible of application to changing modern industrial and social life. He saw in the Constitution an instrumentality thoroughly adapted to human needs and changing conditions of life.

The men and women of Labor will always hold him in high esteem and with reverential regard. We wish for him many years of enjoyment of the rest which he has so valiantly earned. We hope that Divine Providence will be kind and that his life will be spared for many years to come.

In bidding farewell to this great public servant, this great jurist, this noble humanitarian, we express the earnest hope that a man of his type, character and vision will be selected to serve as his successor.

Red Cross Fails To Aid Miners, Union Head Says

Relief Organization Lets People Starve to Death If Plight Is Not Due to Disaster, John L. Lewis Asserts.

Appearing before the La Follette committee investigating unemployment, President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America, advocated federal help for the unemployed and criticized the Red Cross for failure to aid jobless miners.

"I do not know that the Red Cross has put a single dollar in the mouths of a hungry miner or his family in all of America," Lewis said. "I say that with regret, because in days gone by the miners have given the Red Cross millions of dollars.

"The only thing that apparently inspires the Red Cross to extend assistance is a conflagration, flood, pestilence and war. It doesn't make any difference to them how many people die of starvation, how many children suffer from malnutrition or how many women are weakened, if the suffering fails to come from these four causes."

Pinchot Foresees Trouble.

Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, another witness, predicted trouble in his state if the federal government did not come to the relief of the unemployed.

Pinchot declared the emergency cannot be met without federal aid and added that "it ought not to be met without federal aid because it is the way of making the rich meet the emergency as it ought to be met."

The governor said the dole is called a dole when national money is used, but is not called a dole when state or local funds are used for the same purpose.

"Cry to Scare Child."

"The word 'dole' has been used as a cry to scare the child," he told the committee.

Pinchot was asked if he regarded the situation an emergency calling for national legislation.

"Emphatically, I do," he replied.

To Draft Bill Meeting Objections of Court

Illinois Labor Head Holds Opinion Voiding Prevailing Wage Law Is Faulty But Will Prepare Another Measure.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—The Illinois state supreme court, in its opinion declaring the Illinois prevailing wage law void, based its decision on the declaration that the act "is not only uncertain and indefinite in its provisions, but that it is also incomplete and delegates legislative powers by allowing administrative officers to supply many of its substantial features."

"Accepted rules of construction applied to certain sections will not avail to disclose the legislative intent and courts are powerless to supply the omissions of the act," said the court. "No person, by reading the act, will know with a reasonable degree of certainty what rights it confers and what duties and obligations it imposes."

President R. G. Soderstrom and Secretary-Treasurer Victor A. Olander, of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, said to International Labor News Service that it is their opinion the reasoning of the court is faulty, but that the executive board of the federation will prepare another bill designed to overcome the objections raised.

SEES AMERICA DRIFTING INTO SOCIALISM

Newspaper Man Sounds Warning Note.

DECLARES ECONOMISTS SENSING NEW DANGER

O'Guin Holds System Which Fails to Provide Opportunity to Work Breeds Communism.

By W. W. O'GUIN

Economists throughout the country are at least beginning to realize that something is wrong with the American economic system. They are beginning to see that a land overflowing with all sorts of things necessary to life, and at the same time flooded with millions of starving people unable to get work, is all out of joint.

A few days ago an international news service sent out two stories, being statements by two leading American economists, on the situation we now face.

Dr. Irving Fisher, professor of economics of Yale university, was quoted as warning capital "to clean the dirt of depression" from its foundations, or be devoured by some form of socialism.

Dr. Fisher described the depression as a "private profit disease" and said "capitalism is a system of private profits." During his talk Dr. Fisher said, "I am not so cock-sure of capitalism as in my youth. What I am sure of is that if capitalism finds itself unable to clean the dirt of depression out of its very foundations, called profits, some form of socialism will devour capitalism."

On the same day Dr. Ernest M. Patterson, president of the American Academy of Political and Social Science and professor of economics of the University of Pennsylvania, said that America is drifting into socialism and communism.

To prove his position Dr. Patterson pointed to the recent acquiring of utilities by branches of the government. He referred to the municipally-owned waterworks, gas plants, light plants and traction lines to show that the people are drifting away from the private-profit system and are beginning to feel that they might save that profit to themselves, in many cases. He also referred to the present chaotic conditions as being conducive to a furtherance of socialistic doctrines and ideals.

There are few native-born Americans who want to see communism get a foothold in America, and the American Federation of Labor and certain organizations of capital are fighting it, but unless something is done to prevent recurrences of such conditions as this country has faced for three years, all the powers on earth cannot stop the drift in that direction.

To me, communism is the opposite of all things patriotic, religious and moral. I tremble to think that the time may come when it may control "my own, my native land." Capital in America has been in control of financial affairs so long that it has never really studied the relationship of capital, labor and the public. It has thought only in terms of its private bank account, and the general welfare has given it no concern.

In years past, the first step taken by capital, when pinched, was to cut wages. Capital has already learned that this is poor business, but it is yet far from a solution of its difficulties. Capital and labor must learn to co-operate and each realize that it is dependent upon the other and when one suffers both suffer alike.

When capital cuts wages wage-earners cut consumption, thereby decreasing the demand for capital's output. Wage-cutting, instead of a remedy for business troubles, tends to aggravate the ills.

A system by which hundreds of millionaires are made annually, and billionaires in the course of years, while thousands of others, who toil just as hard, must go hungry for lack of work, is all out of tune, and cannot endure in a democratic government, always.

I can see only one thing the government can do about this condition and that is to revise the graduated scale of income taxes, taking virtually all the income, when it is enormous, and turn the money back into circulation by carrying on an internal development program.

I realize that this is more or less socialistic, but not so much so as the millions that have been wasted by the federal farm board to help the farmers. That system is also socialistic, and paternalistic also.

In a great country like this there should be some way to keep every honest man at work, if he wants to work. Any system that fails of this will breed communism.

Congress Inquiry Of Camp Peonage Charges Is Urged

Mississippi Federation of Labor Asks A. F. of L. to Press for Investigation — Legislative Program Is Drawn Up.

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 13.—Congress would be requested, through the American Federation of Labor, to investigate by one of its own committees charges of organized labor that "conditions bordering on slavery and peonage" exist in levee camps along the Mississippi river, in a resolution adopted here by the executive committee of the Mississippi Federation of Labor. The executive committee, at the same meeting, formulated its program to be pressed before the Mississippi legislature and named its chairman, Holt E. J. Ross, of Laurel, representative of the American Federation of Labor and former president of the state federation, who initiated the charges against labor conditions on the levee fronts.

The program calls for: 1. Creation of a state department of labor, to include the duties now performed by the state factory inspector under the state board of health. 2. Enactment of an eight-hour work day for women employed in industry. 3. Creation of a state employment commission, aside from the state labor department, for state-wide employment activities. 4. Prohibiting employment of anyone not a resident qualified voter on all public works of the state and its lesser political subdivisions. This would eliminate practically all negro labor on public works, inasmuch as few negroes are qualified voters. 5. Raise the minimum age limit of children who can be employed in industry. At present girls 14 years old can be employed, labor representatives said. The minimum age to be determined is yet to be agreed upon. 6. Creation of a state board of electrical examiners. 7. Passage of an act regulating the safety of patrons of movie theaters, principally at fixing the number of operators for each projecting room.

The executive committee also indorsed a workmen's compensation act, but Ross announced that it would not be introduced during the early days of the first session.

New Electrical Firm

The Cofer Electric company is the newest addition to Chattanooga's business houses, having been opened last week at 117 West Second street. The proprietor, C. E. Cofer, has been in the electrical "game" for twenty years. Coming to this city from Rome, Ga., some eight years ago, he immediately identified himself with the local union, and his record of service to the organization includes several terms as financial secretary and business agent.

The Labor World wishes every success for the new firm.

Wisconsin Labor Asks Pardon for Alfred Hoffman

Scoring Pennsylvania Courts, Big Trade Union Bodies Ask Gov. Pinchot to Free Hosiery Workers' Organizer.

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 13.—Three big labor organizations, the Wisconsin Federation of Labor, the Milwaukee Federated Trades council and Branch 16, American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, have petitioned Gov. Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, to use his pardon perogative and free Alfred Hoffman, union hosiery workers' organizer, from jail, where he is serving a two-year sentence on "conspiracy" charges arising out of the hosiery workers' strike in Stroudsburg, Pa., last year.

A resolution, presented to the Milwaukee Trades council and its ninety-five affiliated unions by delegates from Branch No. 16 and unanimously adopted, scored the failure of Monroe county, Pennsylvania, authorities to even indict anyone for the murder of Alberta Bachman, girl striker, in the same conflict out of which grew the "conspiracy" charges against Hoffman. This failure to call anyone to account when the life of a young girl was ruthlessly destroyed "clearly proves (the resolution addressed to Gov. Pinchot states) that the authorities of Stroudsburg and Monroe county are controlled by labor exploiting manufacturers."

The decision of the superior court of Pennsylvania to uphold the conviction of Hoffman, by an interpretation of law which held him responsible for an alleged act but freed even from indictment the persons with whom he was alleged to have conspired, "proves, it seems apparent, a servitude of the courts of Pennsylvania to the capitalist class," the resolution concludes:

"Frame-Up" Is Charged.

A similar resolution was adopted by Branch No. 16, of which Hoffman is a member, and an appeal sent to Gov. Pinchot urging him to pardon him immediaately.

Declaring the case against Hoffman to be a "dastardly frame-up," the general executive board of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, in its mid-year annual meeting here, went on record to "join in the condemnation of both the partiality of the prosecuting department of Monroe county, Pennsylvania, and the judicial usurpation practiced in this case."

The officers of the federation sent an appeal to Gov. Pinchot and took steps to inform the entire labor movement of Wisconsin of the injustice to a brother unionist in this case and to lend every possible aid to organized labor and other justice-loving individuals in Pennsylvania in their present campaign to "eliminate practices which tend to deprive individual representatives and labor organizations of unquestioned rights in their defense against the effort to destroy the effectiveness of the workers' organizations."

Over 500 Labor Laws Enacted During 1931

Compensation Acts Strengthened, "Yellow Dog" Contracts Outlawed and Old Age Pension Measures Adopted.

New York City, Jan. 13.—More than 500 laws for the benefit of the wage-earners were enacted in 1931, according to a summary by the American Association for Labor Legislation.

Five more states adopted old age pension laws, bringing the total of those abolishing the poorhouse to seventeen. In addition, four other states took steps looking to old age pension laws, two advancing constitutional amendments to permit such legislation and two others appointing commissions to study the subject. Six states strengthened or supplemented existing laws during the year.

Following passage of the Wagner act for advance planning of public works eight states created commissions to investigate this subject. Six states made provisions for additional state employment offices. Six states provided for more strict regulation of fee-charging employment agencies. Many states passed laws providing direct assistance to the unemployed and expansion of public works.

Wisconsin adopted a labor code which provides for freedom of collective bargaining, bans yellow dog contracts and strictly limits labor injunctions. Arizona, Colorado, Ohio and Oregon similarly banned yellow dog contracts, and Pennsylvania restricted labor injunctions.

Numerous states made their workmen's compensation acts more liberal. New Mexico created a state labor department for the first time, and Georgia and North Carolina reorganized their labor departments to provide more efficient administration.

LABOR LAWS COMPILED.

A valuable compilation of the labor and industrial laws of the Province of Quebec, Canada, consolidated to date, has been published by Gus Francq and dedicated to C. J. Arcand, provincial minister of labor. Francq is publisher of the bi-lingual "Labor World" of Montreal. Arcand, the new minister of labor, is a prominent trade unionist of Montreal.

FEDERATION ASKED TO AID MINE WORKERS

Local Labor Seeks Help of A. F. of L.

VICTIMS CRUSHED BETWEEN 2 FORCES

Tactics of Mine Operators and Communists Confuse American Workers and Create Chaos.

Chattanooga workers have taken the initiative in appealing to the American Federation of Labor to throw all the weight of its influence into the situation in Harlan and Bell counties, Kentucky, for the two-fold purpose of lending aid and succor to the victimized mine workers and their families and maintaining public confidence in the legitimate American labor movement in the stricken territory.

At a recent session of Central Body, Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers of America, made a detailed explanation of the situation in southeastern Kentucky, pointing out, among other things, that nation-wide publicity given to activities of un-American and communistic organizations which have entered the field has given an impression to some extent that the legitimate labor movement is responsible for deplorable conditions there. On the contrary, he declared, various "red" organizations have so confused the miners as to be enabled to lead them into the mire of despair, and are making capital out of the terrible plight of their victims.

Central Body instructed its executive board to appeal to the parent body of organized labor to interest itself actively in the situation and come to the relief of the oppressed workers, and the committee has sent the following resolution to President Green and the executive council of the federation:

Whereas, reports from Harlan and Bell counties, Kentucky, indicate that mine workers in that district are, with their families, the victims of one of the most vicious attacks ever made against the peace and comfort of American workers' lives and homes; apparently crushed between autocratic, money-mad employers and their allies, the politicians, on the one hand, and combined forces of red radicals on the other, these workers are being deprived of their inalienable privilege of earning their daily bread under American conditions; to all appearances a virtual reign of terror is being fostered by mine owners and certain civil authorities; various investigating commissions have developed the truth of many such charges, and have brought to light much of the terrible situation in all its hideousness; and,

Whereas, nation-wide publicity has been given events in these fields, and certain elements, representing communism and I. W. W. organizations, have interested themselves to the extent of capitalizing and commercializing the misery and want of the unfortunate coal miners and their families, using every method to place these organizations, subversive of all principles upon which the American government is founded, in the spotlight as saviors and friends of the mine workers, and to a large extent apparently misleading these workers as to the true purposes and objectives—communism and revolution; and,

Whereas, we know of, and believe in, the 100 per cent pure Americanism and loyalty to our established institutions which is a first principle of the mine workers of Kentucky and Tennessee, and therefore can appreciate the false light in which they are placed, as well as the unfortunate situation in which they have been forced through no fault of their own; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Chattanooga Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, representing in this territory the American Federation of Labor, earnestly appeals to President William Green and the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to interest themselves directly in this deplorable situation, and to render every possible assistance to the end that confidence be restored in the lawful and patriotic principles of our great movement, and that it be reinstated as the only legitimate and effective agency through which the mine workers and their families may be enabled to return to the peaceful pursuits of life, liberty and happiness as guaranteed by the constitution of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished President Green and the National and District offices of the United Mine Workers of America.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' GOSPEL ANALYZED:
Part I

I came that they might have life.
JOHN X:10.

WM. L. MOSS

The Jesus of the creeds and of churchianity have all but obscured the real Jesus and a majority of all shades of religious opinion—both Protestant and Catholic-minded have come to unconsciously give first place to a metaphysical, ecclesiastical, unreasoning, unpitying except in an almost unintelligible way, anemic, "corner-stone of Christianity" type of Jesus, that, to tell the hard truth, never existed for a single day on earth in the flesh or the spirit. Without for a moment pointing the finger of criticism at any one branch of the Christian religion, I do not hesitate to record here the original words, written by my own hand, that "organized religion has failed for centuries to teach the lowly Man of Galilee even as His contemporaries scoffed about Him, "went about doing good" and who stooped to serve, was quick to rebuke the proud, entered with unaffected, unpretended and loving sympathy into the joys and the sorrows of those about Him. To the background has been relegated the Teacher who said, with all of God's children in mind, "For their sakes I sanctify myself," and whose soul-absorbing work was not the reorganization of human society—no, I do not dare say that—but whose every moral fiber in His body was bended to the accomplishment of one chief purpose, the disclosure to the human soul of its relation to God and through God its relation to all other human souls.

I say that this Jesus has been all but lost in the teaching of Christianity as it has been taught in the past and is taught today. We have had held up before us a "Church Christ," a "Christianity Christ," not the Christ whom His saw day after day.

How, then, if this is true and the one special organization founded in His name has itself failed to emphasize the social Jesus, can we recover the Jesus that actually walked here among men?

To begin with, we are faced with a double difficulty. His teaching as recorded in the gospels is fragmentary, and as for the manner in which they are set down in these same gospels, we know the order in which they are recorded for us is not the chronological order in which they transpired. With these indisputable facts confronting us, if we would discover Jesus' social gospel we have to look to the content of His teaching in its entirety rather than to its chronological order.

"Union-made, but does not bear a label" is a stock phrase which we should ignore. Demand the UNION LABEL.

It costs no more in effort or money to secure UNION GOODS and SERVICE, if you demand and insist on them.

BILIOUS

"I have used Black-Draught . . . and have not found anything that could take its place. I take Black-Draught for biliousness. When I get bilious, I have a nervous headache and a nervous, trembling feeling that unfits me for my work. After I take a few doses of Black-Draught, I get all right. When I begin to get bilious, I feel tired and run-down, and then the headache and trembling. But Black-Draught relieves all this."—H. C. Hendrix, Homerville, Ga.

Need for Public Works

Imperative demand for public works to prevent actual starvation of millions is voiced by national economists and leaders in all lines of endeavor who have made earnest study of the present unprecedented situation.

Neglect of states, counties and municipalities in meeting the crisis was discussed at a recent conference at Philadelphia, where authorities in the field of public works deplored the lag in construction projects on the part of state and city governments, and pointed out the need for long-range planning.

"The small volume of public works now under way to stabilize employment," declared Otto T. Mallery, "is due to the fact that very few cities or states have adopted advance planning or long range budgeting of capital expenditures.

"The federal government has done better," continued Mr. Mallery, "because it has started long range planning. The estimated federal expenditure for all kinds of public works, including roads and river and harbor improvements, is about $725,000,000, or three times that of the boom year 1928. The aggregate public works of the cities and states have apparently fallen more than enough to offset the increases by the federal government. Only by adopting advance planning can a city avoid finding itself helpless, like so many today, when its citizens most need work."

Donald H. Sawyer, director of the federal employment stabilization board, characterized the board as a large laboratory to analyze public requirements in building construction; to make them more readily usuable as a relief measure in times of depression; to advise the president from time to time on the trend of American business and particularly of construction, and to bring about the six-year planning of all of the government construction agencies. "The power of the government is momentous," he declared, "and it is hoped that what the government has been able to do in statistics and planning will find a local response."

The use of public works in Philadelphia as a device for unemployment stabilization was discussed by William H. Loucks, of the University of Pennsylvania. "If the public works projects of this particular city, totaling at the present time about $40,000,000 per year," said Professor Loucks, "were so planned as to reserve for years of business depression as many projects as possible, approximately 10 per cent. of those ordinarily unemployed during such times could be given employment on municipal construction enterprises."

Arthur D. Gayer, of the national bureau of economic research, declared as essential detailed forethought and advance planning to overcome administrative, technical and financial difficulties; and the necessity of enabling municipalities to expand their construction activities in times of depression with federal aid, if necessary by means of a large bond issue. R. C. Marshall, Jr., of the administrative board of the American engineering council, who presided, declared that construction is the second largest industry of the country and is adaptable to use in crises where great unemployment exists.

In the opinion of three welfare leaders who recently appeared before a senate committee, direct federal aid should be given to the unemployed. These three men have been co-operating with President Hoover to handle the situation through local charity channels, and they are thoroughly acquainted with the gigantic problem before them.

All three agreed there is a desperate shortage of funds to meet the unprecedented relief demands of the jobless. Their views were given in testimony before the senate manufacturers' subcommittee, considering appropriation of federal funds.

An outright recommendation for federal appropriations came from Linton B. Swift, executive secretary of the Family Welfare Association of America, who said some states could not meet their relief burdens.

Allen T. Burns, executive director of the Association of Community Chests and Councils, who has been working in close cooperation with President Hoover and his relief advisers, testified that aid for the unemployed must come from the federal government, if it is not available elsewhere. Present funds, he said, "are altogether inadequate."

The third member of the trio, Frank Bane, director of the American Association of Public Welfare Officials, said federal assistance "of some type" would be beneficial.

Burns told the committee there "is no prospect of sufficient funds to meet relief needs and unless local governments provide twice as much as last year the distress burden cannot be met by local communities."

With such intense concentration upon unemployment conditions throughout the country, it does seem possible that the law of averages will assert itself in the near future and bring out a practical solution of the unemployment problem from among the tangle of ideas suggested.

ELEVEN BILLIONS LOST.

Edward F. McGrady, the capable and militant A. F. of L. legislative committeeman, said last week in a congressional hearing that the wage loss of a year of unemployment has been eleven billion dollars.

The sum staggers the imagination. That is eleven billion dollars that could not be spent for commodities. Eleven billions taken out of the nation's purchasing power.

And wage-earners, never too well off, have had to scrape along on eleven billion dollars less than so-called normal.

This is wreckage, ruination and abomination. It is the supreme insanity of a so-called sane people.

PUBLIC WORKS.

It is discovered that hitherto public building programs have boomed in boom times and sagged in sag times. The federal stabilization board makes this discovery, which is in line with observation.

The moral is that public building should be controlled and should be done at such time as to serve to cushion private employment—to take up the slack. The use of public construction as an instrument for the regulation of economic progress is a relatively new idea, but one that has made for great progress.

Having now the facts in full there should be no further delay. Knowing the right thing to do, those who are in position to put such a program into effect should not hesitate to act.

RAIL LABOR'S POSITION.

In its great Chicago conference railroad labor placed itself in a remarkably advantageous strategic position and thus won the better half of its battle.

The air was kept clear of "loud talk," but issues were never for a moment lost to view. There was strategy and generalship and all of those things that are generally in mind under the heading of "common sense."

The result is that the railroads, instead of slashing about right and left with wage reductions, are bound to negotiate to a finish!

In stopping what clearly was a wage-reduction movement for their members, the railroad unions have stopped the same thing for thousands and perhaps millions of other workers.

Back of the Chicago strategy is a sound platform summed up in four main planks and elaborated in subordinate subsections—a fine document of labor philosophy and policy.

The railroad unions have exemplified American labor at its best in economic fair dealing and sound judgment.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Can an injunction issued by a court require the party enjoined to take some specified action?

A.—Yes, but usually, as in a labor injunction, the order requires the party enjoined to refrain from some specified action.

Q.—Are there any department stores on the five-day week, all the year around?

A.—Pomeroy's, Inc., a Pennsylvania department store organization with stores in Harrisburg, Pottsville, Wilkes-Barre and Reading, recently announced the adoption of the five-day week with no change in weekly pay.

Q.—Have any trade unions made studies of the sanitary and safety conditions in their industries?

A.—Unions in a number of industries, including the printing and garment trades, have co-operated in the making of such studies. These surveys have usually included physical examinations of workers to determine what, if any, physical effects have resulted from the working conditions.

What Next!

A new aluminum rail hopper car has just been built for the Aluminum Company of America which is said to save 21,200 pounds in weight and to have lower maintenance costs than steel cars, due to the non-corrosive qualities of aluminum. The car, of 70-ton capacity, is on the pattern of a steel car, but its body and underframe are of aluminum alloy.

Pay Cuts Prolong Hard Times, Labor Commissioner Declares

By COL. CHARLES R. BLUNT
Commissioner of Labor of New Jersey

The question of the advisability of reducing the salaries of public employes—national, state, county and municipal—should be considered in two ways: As a broad economic question and as a question of public policy.

Early in the present extended period of depression I took a stand against wage cuts. It is my firm belief that while the average sum in the pay envelopes of wage-earners is on the decline the end of the depression will not be in sight.

For wage costs enter into prices; and only hand-to-mouth buying for bare current needs will be the order of the day, from the smallest retail purchases to the largest wholesale and industrial orders, until those responsible for the family pocketbooks and factory budgets are convinced that prices are at rock-bottom and will henceforth advance, however slowly. Therefore, every employer who puts a wage-cut into effect is helping to lengthen the depression as well as reducing aggregate purchasing power, which also affects business conditions.

Impetus will be given to general wage-cutting if governmental units start reducing salaries. This would certainly extend the period during which public funds must be used for relief of the unemployed. It is very probable that the money saved by salary reductions would not equal the extra amounts that would be required by the extension of the period of depression resulting from general wage-cutting.

Furthermore, it should be recognized that the rank and file of public employes did not receive pay increases during the boom years after the war at all comparable with the increases given to the workers in commerce and industry. A large percentage are still under the maximums that have been set for years and many still at the minimums. For instance, there are scores of clerks and stenographers who are receiving $80 a month who are so capable that, had they entered private employment, they would now be earning much more. Many are donating a definite percentage of their salaries to relief agencies.

The reduction of salaries of the rank and file of public employes—clerks, teachers, police, firemen, etc.—not only is a short-sighted and unsound economic policy that would encourage general wage-cutting and therefore delay the stabilization of prices so essential to business recovery, but an unfair one that would adversely affect the morale of the personnel.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Aldermen of Worcester, Mass., rebuked wage cutters by voting decisively to reject a proposal for reducing the pay of city employes. Advocates of wage cutting were told some plain truths by the aldermen, who pointed out that lowering of wages means lowering public morale, which it is essential to keep high at this time. As a result, the wage slashers mustered only two votes and the kibosh was put on them for the time being at least. Other cities, please copy.

Just before the Christmas holidays, the newspapers reported the death of a woman in Cambridge, Mass., from radio poisoning incurred nine years ago painting watch dials in a Chicago factory. For nine long years, the victim fought against the horrible poisoning, but it finally overcame her.

Effects of industrial disease, like the effects of war, are often late in manifesting themselves, but they are nonetheless terrible because of the delay. Some day, society will become wise and civilized enough to end both war and industrial disease, two unnecessary scourges of the human race.

Gov. Pinchot is now remarking that, since Senator Reed declared months ago that federal aid would not be needed, as "Pennsylvania would take care of her own," and now Reed's personally controlled state legislature has failed to make good that promise, it seems to be up to Mr. Reed—or Mr. Mellon—or someone—to come across.

Chalk up at least one good mark for 1931. Scott Turner, director of the United States bureau of mines, announced as the year was ending that the coal mining industry of the United States had completed twelve months with a better safety record than ever before, so far as the relation between production and accidents is concerned.

Mr. Turner reported that production in 1931 was some 296,000 tons of coal for each life lost. Ten years ago it was but 254,000 tons and twenty years ago it was only 187,000 tons per death.

This progress in safety was due to accident-prevention work as well as technical improvements in the industry that enabled the average miner to produce more coal per day than was possible when more primitive working methods were used, Turner said. Just how much credit for this progress should go to accident-prevention efforts and how much to technical improvement was not stated.

The death and injury rate in American mining is still disgracefully high but progress in safety was apparently made in the year just ended.

A glance back over the political history of the last ten years gives rise to wonder if, after all, Abraham Lincoln was entirely right when he said: "You can fool some of the people all of the time and all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time."

Hendrik Willem Van Loon says Lincoln was wrong and intimates he was merely flattering the voters. Van Loon believes in Lincoln's greatness and immortality, but he thinks "Abe" knew better.

Van Loon believes it should have been worded: "You can fool some of the people some of the time and some of the people all of the time, and furthermore, if you are clever and unscrupulous enough you can fool all of the people all of the time."

There are politicians and industrial barons who agree with the author. They are clever and unscrupulous enough to fool all or enough of the people to hold on to their racket and continue to ride—and that seems to clinch the argument.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

At the close of the Civil war a wave of fantastic mysticism swept the ranks of labor organizations. Many of the old unions had been reorganized, numemous local amalgamations had taken place and everywhere the individuals of the labor movement were being brought in closer contact with each other. This newly-created solidarity among laboring men took the form of "midnight initiations" and outlandish ritualism, and labor union secret societies, whose officers were known by high-sounding and royal titles and whose meetings were fortified with mysterious passwords and conducted along lines of extreme ritualism, sprang up overnight like mushrooms in a dark and damp forest. Meaningless but fantastically-worded degrees were "bestowed" on the "faithful," causing unionism at this stage in its development in America resemble Freemasonry gone mad with ritualism. But this ritualistic phenomena developed as the result of a distinct state of mind of the laboring men of the time, but what this state of mind was we will return to later on in this series.

The labor union secret societies created at this time adorned themselves with long and fantastic names, among such might be enumerated "The Noble Order of the Knights of Labor," "The Supreme Mechanical Order of the Sun," "The Knights of St. Crispin," and so on.

Since this secret society movement was the phenomena which immediately preceded the "federation" movement among labor unions (the last and final trend labor organizations were to take) and since it was such a widespread movement as well as having an important bearing on the history of unionism in this country and, finally, since so little of an authoritative nature is known of the movement by this present-day generation it has been thought best for the next two or three weeks to devote the space given in these columns to this series to an explanation of the organization, purpose and characteristics of the most important of these societies. Accordingly, and with the purpose in mind merely to acquaint this latter day generation of unionists with a fairly full and complete history of the labor movement as well as information covering the different phenomena that arose out of it in this country, there will be presented in this department beginning next week authentic accounts of the rise, rule and disbandment (disintegration in some cases) of the most famous of these union secret societies.

Minn. Labor Federation Starts Radio Program

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Minnesota State Federation of Labor will inaugurate a broadcasting program on Jan. 16 to acquaint the people of the northwest with the principles, ideals and problems of organized labor.

The broadcast will continue weekly for thirteen weeks. The Columbia Broadcasting company donates the time. The State Federation of Labor will furnish the speakers and defray the expenses.

George W. Lawson, secretary of the federation, believes the radio lectures will be of great advantage to the trade union movement in the northwestern states.

WHEN SUNSHINE HITS YOU

When a bit of sunshine hits ye,
After passing of a cloud,
When a fit of laughter gits ye,
And yer spine is feeling proud—
Don't forget to up and fling it
At a soul that's feelin' blue,
For the minit that ye sling it,
It's a boomerang to you.

GOV. HUNT ASKS CITIZENS TO EMPLOY ARIZONA'S IDLE

Phoenix, Ariz.—Gov. George W. P. Hunt urged citizens of Arizona to inaugurate and push forward all kinds of building improvements to relieve the unemployment situation. He emphasized the low cost of building materials as an element to encourage the work.

"By carrying on such improvements at this time," Gov. Hunt said, "you will not only secure these necessary improvements at a smaller outlay, but by employing idle labor you will help to promote business through other channels, and will serve as an agent in helping to improve the financial condition throughout the state."

"A general program," Gov. Hunt's appeal concluded, "is being carried on in order to feed those who are hungry, and to best utilize our resources. However, our citizens are not looking for charity, but rather for an opportunity to earn an honest living."

LA GUARDIA TO OFFER FIVE-DAY WEEK BILLS

New York City, Jan. 13.—Representative Fiorello H. La Guardia, in a radio address here, announced that he and other progressives in congress would introduce bills they felt would end the business depression and its consequent unemployment.

One of the bills would call for a five-day week on all building construction under government contracts, close all banks affiliated with the federal reserve system, the postoffices and customs houses of the country on Saturdays and place all railroad employes on a five-day basis.

"The government must also step in immediately and by direct appropriation supplement the aid now being given by state and municipal sources, as well as private charity," continued Mr. La Guardia. "In this instance the powers of congress are limited, but congress has wide powers in protecting the public health and jurisdiction over interstate and foreign commerce. No one can deny that the lack of proper and sufficient nourishment, and the need of proper clothing during the severe months of the winter, will have a tendency to impair the public health."

THEATRICAL LABOR CO-OPERATES IN FIGHT ON TICKET TAX PLAN

New York, Jan. 13.—The theatrical trade unions and other organized groups in the theater plan vigorous opposition to the 10 per cent admission tax proposed by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon. At a meeting here, organization of a national organization to fight the proposed tax was unanimously indorsed.

Telegrams by Frank Gillmore, president of the Actors' Equity association; William C. Elliott, of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes; James J. Brennan, president of Theatrical Protective Union No. 1, and Arthur Hopkins, president of the League of New York Theaters, summoned New York managers and producers to the meeting.

Support in the fight was promised by the American Federation of Musicians, the Dramatists' Guild of America, and the United Scenic Artists.

The resolution for establishment of a nation-wide organization was as follows:

"Resolved, That in order to oppose effectively an admission tax for the legitimate theater, a nation-wide organization be established to be known as the League of American Theaters, consisting of managers and producers throughout the country, which should co-operate with all the other national groups of the theater, like the Actors' Equity association, the Dramatists' Guild and the theatrical labor organizations; and,

"Resolved further, That contact be immediately established with individuals and organized groups of the theater outside of New York City to focus all the forces in opposition to the proposed admissions tax legislation."

There is at present a tax of 10 per cent applying to theater tickets of more than $3. Mellon proposes to make the tax apply to any admission price of more than 10 cents.

Hosiery Union to Press Drive For Federal Anti-Injunction Act

Philadelphia, Jan. 13.—A movement will be immediately inaugurated by the national officers of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers to mobilize the energies of the rank and file of the union throughout the country in an effort to secure enactment of a federal anti-injunction bill in the present session of congress.

"There is real danger that the injunction issue may be sidetracked or overshadowed by the concentration of efforts on the great world economic questions which are forcing themselves to the forefront in Washington at this time," states Emil Rieve, president of the hosiery workers' organization, in a communication to all subordinate officers of the federation.

"The bill to curb the abuse of the injunction power of the courts need not interfere with or delay enactment of other urgent legislative measures," Rieve points out. "The senate in the debate on the confirmation of Judge Parker demonstrated that a majority of its members are opposed to usurpation of authority by the courts in seeking to use judicial power to break strikes and impede the organization of labor. The lower house, now controlled by the democrats, should pass the bill, introduced by Congressman La Guardia, without delay as the democratic party—and in fact the republican party also—has been committed for years to the modification of the injunction process.

"What is needed is constant and energetic pressure brought to bear upon members of congress by local labor organizations throughout the country. The progressive congressmen need to be reminded of the necessity for action just as well as the standpatters. I would urge that our federation assume a particular responsibility in this matter. The American Federation of Labor and the larger internationals will, of course, lead this fight in Washington, but because of the fact that the hosiery workers have probably suffered most severely as a result of this injunction evil in recent years, it should be up to us to concentrate our efforts as far as possible on this particular issue."

Julius Rosenwald Was Active Foe of Organized Workers

Chicago Magnate Backed Notorious Landis Award Committee and Was Relentless Opponent of High Wage Theory.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—Daily newspapers devoted many columns of space in praise of the philanthropies of Julius Rosenwald when he died here recently. Working people will best remember Mr. Rosenwald as a relentless opponent of the high wage theory and an active foe of organized labor.

One of the high lights in his career was as a witness before a committee of the Illinois state senate which investigated the underlying causes of prostitution in Chicago and other Illinois cities in 1915. It was charged and substantially proved that the low wages paid to girls employed in department stores and mail order houses tended to force them to prostitution to maintain life. Mr. Rosenwald, as the head of Sears, Roebuck & Co., was a reluctant witness before the committee, called to answer testimony of some of his female employes.

At a later date Mr. Rosenwald was one of the most active members and a heavy financial backer of the notorious Landis award committee, which spent five years and several million dollars in a vain effort to wreck the building trades unions of Chicago.

Three years ago Mr. Rosenwald, as chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck & Co., caused a $30,000,000 printing contract of his gigantic corporation to be awarded to the notorious nonunion R. R. Donnelley & Sons company, one of the bitterest enemies of organized labor in the middle west. T. E. Donnelley, president of the Donnelley company, was chairman of the Landis award committee throughout its malorodous career.

LABOR DEMANDS RECALL.

Charging that Mayor James L. Key has disregarded the rights and interests of the masses of the people and that he is attempting to lower the standard of living for the workers by advocating wage reductions, the Atlanta, Ga., Federation of Labor is demanding the mayor's recall. The central body, by unanimous vote, favored the ousting of Mayor Key and instructed its executive committee to begin a campaign to secure the necessary 5,000 names of registered voters on a recall petition.

Printing Unions Move To Bar Prison Contract

Texas Council Sues to Enjoin State from Having Work Done by Prisoners in Huntsville Penitentiary.

Austin, Tex., Jan. 12.—Suit has been filed in Travis county district court to enjoin the board of control and Texas state prison officials from entering into contracts with the prison printing plant at Huntsville for state printing. Plaintiffs are H. B. McGann, of Harris county; William B. Arnold, of Bexar county; W. N. Strong, John F. Callan, William Milligan, John L. Hauswald and others, as officers, agents and members of the Texas Allied Printing Trades council.

It was alleged that the defendants had entered into certain contracts with the Item Printing company, of Huntsville, to furnish printing for various Texas state institutions, and that it was contemplated the work should be done by prisoners confined behind the walls of the penitentiary. It was claimed that a printing business had been established within the walls for the purpose of doing the work.

Plaintiffs alleged that the state constitution stipulates that all printing except such as may be done at the deaf and dumb asylum, shall be furnished and done under contract. Complaint was made that there is not printed on each article printed under terms of the contract words that it constitutes "prison made merchandise" or "prison made goods," as is required by state law.

BUILDING INDUSTRY IS CHIEF CONSUMER OF FINISHED STEEL

Washington, Jan. 13.—The construction industry took first rank in 1931 among the consumers of finished steel, repeating its performance of 1930. The second largest consumer was the railroad industry, while the automobile industry ranked third. The standing of these three consumers has remained unchanged for two years. In 1929, however, the railroads took first place, with the automotive industry second and construction third.

OLD AGE SECURITY URGED.

Arraigning this country's "neglect of its indigent aged" as "national disgrace," the American Association for Old Age Security, with headquarters in New York City, demands the extension of old age pensions in all states in the leading article of the January issue of its monthly, the Old Age Security Herald. The Old Age Security Herald cited the success of the pension law in New York state, where high state officials are quoted as praising the effects of the legislation, which has resulted in assistance to nearly 50,000 aged men and women in need.

Pressmen's Union Heads Re-Elected

GEORGE L. BERRY

Pressmen's Home, Tenn., Jan. 13.—Headquarters of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America announces re-election of George L. Berry as president and other officers for four-year terms.

On final returns, all officers were renominated, which constitutes election without opposition, the announcement said.

Vice-presidents re-elected are William H. McHugh, Kansas City; Shuford. B. Marks, Chicago; P. J. O'Donnell, Detroit, Mich., and George R. Brunet, Montreal, Canada.

Joseph C. Orr, Pressmen's Home, was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Home and school trustees included Norbert Berger, Buffalo, N. Y.; Otto Huber, Denver; James H. Brooks, Portland, Ore.; E. Curtis White, Indianapolis; J. Herbert de la Rosa, San Francisco; R. A. Dickson, Washington, D. C.

BREAK WITH REDS.

Executive board of the Norwegian Union of Land and Timber Workers decided at its last meeting to break off all relations with the Russian Land and Timber Workers' union, because the latter is constantly trying to interfere in the internal affairs of the Norwegian union and to incite the members against the responsible authorities of the union. This puts an end to the last of the reciprocity agreements concluded between Norwegian and Russian trade unions.—Press Reports, International Federation of Trade Unions.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

RITICISM OF SENIOR SENATOR NOT UNANIMOUS

ocal Labor Approves Stand of McKellar.

OSITION ON SHOALS REGARDED AS RIGHT

Working Men Ask Why Not Blame Opponents of Operation By and For People.

Following wire was sent Senator McKellar Thursday morning:

Hon. K. D. McKellar,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

Chattanooga labor is vitally interested in the early passage of legislation for the development of Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee River. We commend your support of Norris bill and congratulate you on maintaining your position against opposition.

MATT GERLACH, Secretary,
Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council.

That condemnation of Senator Kenneth McKellar for his refusal to be swayed from his position on the disposition of Muscle Shoals by pressure of a group of prominent local citizens is by no means unanimous has been indicated during the past two or three days by comments from various sources.

Disposition to charge the Tennessee senator with the failure of settlement of this great problem was deplored by members of organized labor, who hold that the workers are possibly more vitally interested in quick action on the development of the massive project than is the average manufacturer, banker, or officeholder, and they desire to see the interests of the whole people protected rather than have the government present the huge project to the "power" interests for private exploitation.

A group of local citizens visited Washington this week to urge immediate action by congress on proposed legislation to develop the works, supporting a plan recommended by the president's commission which provided leasing of the shoals to private parties. Senator McKellar, it was reported, stated that he was in accord with the delegation as to an appropriation for the construction of low dams between Hale's Bar and the Shoals, but that he had not changed his attitude in support of the Norris bill which provides for government operation of the Shoals.

Senator McKellar was accordingly "roasted" by a special correspondent of the Times, and by Kenner Reynolds, local manufacturer, who is a member of the president's Shoals commission which recommended the lease to private interests, and is being charged with the failure of Shoals legislation.

Local trades unionists are asking why those representatives who have consistently opposed the Norris bill for operation of Muscle Shoals by and for the people should not be criticized for their part in the failure to obtain an agreement in the matter. Further, it is held that Senator McKellar should receive the acclaim of his constituents for showing the intestinal stamina to withstand the pressure of power-industrial and political interests and maintain his convictions in the face of bitter criticism.

Individuals among the local workers advocated a special session of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council to discuss the matter, but it was held that the position of the executive board of the parent body, as expressed in the letter to Mr. McKellar, would suffice at least until the regular session of Central Body Monday night, when the matter will again be threshed out.

In addition, local unions have voiced commendation to the senator for his stand, and it is stated that a paper expressing appreciation of local workers is being circulated locally, and already several hundred signatures have been attached.

Central bodies and local unions throughout the state will be urged to take similar action, if Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council approves the attitude of certain delegates who have expressed themselves during the past few days.

FIVE-DAY WEEK, SIX-HOUR DAY SURE TO COME

Would Restore Normal Markets, Says O'Guin.

WORKERS VICTIMS OF MACHINE AGE

"Profit-Making" Machinery Better Term Than "Labor-Saving."

By W. W. O'GUIN

Of late much has been written and spoken of the evils and the benefits of what is known as "labor-saving" machinery.

I have thought for a long time that this class of machinery has been improperly named. It would better have been called "expense-saving" or "profit-making" machinery.

In my humble opinion so-called labor-saving machinery would have been, and can still be, made a blessing, but as it has been used it has been responsible for much of the excess labor we now have as a charge upon the charity of the country.

Heretofore when an industry installed a piece of machinery which would do the work of six men, the management dismissed five men and used one to operate the machine, putting the difference in cost all into his own pocket without any consideration for the laborer.

If this piece of machinery had been used to help reduce the cost of production and at the same time shortened the hours of labor without a reduction in weekly wages, the machine would have been a blessing to both industry and labor.

The trouble has been with machinery that industry has appropriated all its benefits and labor has received all its evils. A fifty-fifty proposition in its use would have made things quite different and all parties would have been better off.

As it has been used, the country is oversupplied, we are told, and millions of men who would be purchasers of this surplus are unemployed and cannot purchase. In this matter labor has suffered poverty, and industry has lost financially all because industry did not take into consideration the right of the laboring man to share in the benefits of the labor-saving machines.

With the vast amount of labor-saving machinery now in use it is quite obvious that industry must shorten the hours of labor and the week also. I believe that the country is now ready for the adoption of the five-day week of six hours per day.

When this change is made and when labor receives the same pay for six hours that formerly was paid for eight hours, some progress will have been made toward solving the problem of overproduction, and in stimulating a market for the product of industry.

Labor represents, perhaps, the greatest consumer of essentials in this country. The working man as a rule is a liberal spender, but when his wages are so low that he has little to spend, or when production outruns demand and mills are closed, then this great consuming mass is forced off the market and industry must pay for its folly in keeping labor broke.

I once held to the theory that labor was a commodity to be bought at prices fluctuated by the supply and demand. Long ago I was forced to alter my views. The more I have studied the question of labor and capital the more I am convinced that profitable and prosperous industry is dependent upon prosperous labor.

The proper relationship between labor and capital has been a problem for ages, and while much progress has been made, during which labor has ceased to be a slave and has forced many reforms of a humane and a monetary nature, the correct solution of the problem has not yet been found.

When both factions lay aside their selfish interests in the dispute and seek a solution based solely upon the basis of what is to the common interest, a long step will have been taken in bringing about that Utopian relationship between them.

It is gratifying to note that this idea is growing in the ranks of both labor and capital and the spirit of co-operation is displacing the spirit of domination which once actuated both parties to the dispute.

Under the guiding hand of such men as have headed the American Federation of Labor for many years and some of the leading industrial captains of the country the great chasm that has divided capital and labor is gradually being bridged by the bridge of co-operation pillared upon the recognition of the fact that each is dependent upon the other.

Following the lead of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad in equipping two of its crack trains with devices to keep the air at even temperature and the degree of moisture fixed, five new American passenger vessels will install air-conditioning devices. The Mariposa of the Matson Line will be the first to use the new equipment.

WAR-TIME PLAN USED IN NEW DRIVE TO BREAK DEPRESSION

American Legion, Organized Labor and Business Leaders Join Hands in United Effort to Create Million Jobs and Bring Early Economic Recovery to Nation—Promise Fight to a Finish.

New York.—To find work for 1,000,000 unemployed workers and thus provide a powerful stimulus to business and industry, is the goal of a great nation-wide campaign begun here by the American Legion, in co-operation with organized labor, the Association of National Advertisers and hundreds of influential business organizations throughout the United States.

Other co-operating organizations include the American Newspaper Publishers' association, labor and foreign language press, the two big radio systems and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the National Catholic Welfare conference and the central conference of American Rabbis.

Labor's end of the campaign, looked upon as a big national effort for economic recovery, will be in charge of Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, who has been delegated by the federation as chairman of the division of labor in the drive. Henry L. Stevens, Jr., national commander of the legion, will have charge of the campaign.

In announcing the inauguration of the campaign, from headquarters in the Hotel Biltmore, Mr. Stevens pointed out that the emergency confronting the nation is akin to war and that the men who fought in the nation's defense in 1917 and 1918 would be marshaled now to help the nation rise from the depression.

Job Drive First Step.

The first step, Mr. Stevens said, would be a campaign to find jobs for 1,000,000 wage-earners to restore public confidence and purchasing power.

"Many great corporations can well afford to increase the number of their employes by 10 per cent out of surplus," Mr. Stevens declared. "Others, with diminished surpluses, can make a 10 per cent increase in the number of men actually employed by a spread of work."

Mr. Woll declared the A. F. of L., with its forty-eight state organizations, hundreds of city central bodies and nearly 30,000 local unions, would back the campaign to the limit.

Fight to Finish.

"Our nation has enough brains, there is enough capital and there is enough consumer-need to end depression forever," Mr. Woll declared. "The objects of the campaign are in full accord with the program of labor. We go into this campaign as a war to the finish. There will be no backing up. As we went into the World war to insure freedom forever, we go into this war against unemployment to make that freedom live in every American home.

"The magnificent co-operation of the great organized movements of the nation shows the deep interest there is on every hand. We have today the greatest moral, spiritual and economic unity we have known since 1917. With such a unity we cannot fail. Speaking for organized labor, I say we shall do our full part, laboring with a deep patriotic and humanitarian purpose."

Nation-Wide Organization.

As part of its national employment drive the Legion is organizing six regional committees. Through the forty-eight state commanders 10,800 local committees are being organized in every city and town in the United States. These local committees are inviting to membership leading bankers, manufacturers and retailers, as well as local newspaper publishers, representatives of labor, presidents of civic organizations and other community leaders. These committees will compose the "selling force" to canvass industry and homes for jobs.

National headquarters are being set up in New York to carry the campaign to the people. War-time organization is being followed.

United Action Urged.

"The country has been told and now fully realizes that this is an emergency as great as war," said Mr. Stevens. "The time has come for all the forward-looking forces of this country to join in united action to meet this emergency. During the great war no one expected the government of the United States, or the business of the United States, or the bankers of the United States to win the war. We won because we realized that it was a job for the whole people of this country and that every man and woman in the United States had to do his part. We organized for victory and we achieved it.

"We are confronted with a situation today which presents exactly the same problems. If we can organize the people of this country each to do his part, we can win the war against unemployment and depression and make the beginning toward business recovery. The United States is still the richest country in the world. We have over $28,000,000,000 in the savings banks and countless billions hidden under the mattress.

Business Must Lead Way.

"However, American business and American finance must understand that the people of this country expect courage and leadership from the great institutions able to furnish them. Business must lead the way back to prosperity by making the first sacrifice necessary."

Hoover Names Wilkerson For Court of Appeals

Injunction Judge, Pal of Daugherty, Appointed to Federal Bench—Confirmation Will Be Opposed.

Washington, Jan. 20.—President Hoover appointed Judge James H. Wilkerson, of the federal district court in Chicago, as a judge of the Seventh U. S. circuit court of appeals.

In the railroad shopmen's strike of 1922, Judge Wilkerson issued one of the most drastic injunctions against the rail unions that ever came from a federal judge. It was obtained from Wilkerson by Harry Daugherty, then attorney-general of the United States, who a few months ago had recommended Wilkerson for the judgeship.

The injunction deprived the shopmen of their elementary rights as American citizens and threw all the influence of the government on the side of the railroad owners.

On September 18, 1922, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor issued a statement condemning the injunction and urged mass meetings to protest against it and to lay the basis for a proposed impeachment of the attorney-general.

The council's statement said in part:

"The injunction issued against the shopmen by Judge Wilkerson on application of Atty.-Gen. Daugherty is a most flagrant violation of the constitution of the United States, and of the laws enacted by our congress.

"No one apparently is free from its sweeping provisions. It prohibits the freedom of speech, the freedom of press, and the right of the people peaceably to assemble to discuss their grievances.

"Even a minister of the gospel in Indiana was proceeded against for violating the injunction because he prayed for the success of the shopmen. The editor of a labor paper in Memphis was placed under arrest for printing an editorial criticizing the injunction."

In urging mass meetings against the Daugherty-Wilkerson attack on the fundamental principles of the American bill of rights, the council said it was "imperative for the people of our beloved country to raise their voices in earnest and emphatic protest against government by injunction, especially when the injunction overrides the laws and constitution of our republic."

The fight against the confirmation of Wilkerson's nomination will be conducted before the senate judiciary committee, whose chairman is Senator George Norris, of Nebraska.

By a remarkable coincidence, the senate judiciary committee is considering anti-injunction legislation by which it is believed the judicial monstrosities like the one which Wilkerson issued in 1922 will be prohibited by federal law.

GREEN CALLS UNION CHIEFS TO CONFERENCE

International Heads to Meet February 9.

LABOR BILLS WILL BE TOPIC OF POW-WOW

Will Urge Upon Congress Great Necessity for Remedial Legislation.

Washington, Jan. 20.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, invited the presidents of the affiliated national and international unions to meet with the A. F. of L. Executive Council in Washington on Feb. 9 to consider federal injunction legislation and other federal labor measures, as well as the unemployment situation.

"This conference is being called," President Green's invitation said, "for the purpose of giving consideration and support to injunction relief legislation and other legislative measures being considered by the congress of the United States in which labor is vitally and directly interested.

Unemployment Situation Serious.

"Furthermore, the unemployment situation has become so serious and so acute as to require and command consideration and attention by the representatives of all organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

"The time is opportune and most timely for organized labor to make a definite pronouncement upon this subject in a dramatic way so that if possible the public conscience can be more fully aroused to the seriousness of the situation and constructive and practical remedies recommended by the American Federation of Labor may be accepted and applied.

Organized Labor's Large Influence.

Oldest Member Of Local Typos Goes to Reward

Edwin R. Ames, 91, Succumbs to Illness at Avondale Home. Resident of Chattanooga Since 1879.

Chattanooga Typographical union lost its oldest member Monday when E. R. Ames, 91, pioneer citizen of Chattanooga and a continuous member of the International Typographical union for more than a half-century, surrendered to an illness which had beset him practically since the passing of his helpmeet three years ago.

Mr. Ames came to Chattanooga in 1879, and served as foreman of both the local dailies, as well as printer, proofreader and telegraph editor of the News. He learned his trade at Lebanon, Ky., beginning his apprenticeship at the age of 14, and later went to Louisville, where he was employed as printer, proofreader and foreman. He had retired several years ago from active service, being placed on the pension rolls of No. 89 and had since lived a quiet life at his home, 1608 Arlington avenue. His ninety-first milestone was passed on last Saturday.

Deceased is survived by three sons, all members of the typographical union—Ed, of St. Petersburg, Fla.; Lon, of Louisville, and Charles, of Cincinnati, the latter for years having been editor of a labor paper in the Queen City territory.

Funeral services were held Wednesday from O'Donohue's, conducted by the Rev. G. E. Blanchard, interment following at Forest Hills. Pallbearers were as follows: Honorary, T. A. Rogers, Sam E. Behm, E. L. Barringer, Phil Mandre, G. D. Groner, John O'Brien, M. M. Morris, M. C. Timmons, D. N. Power and B. H. McLaughen; active, Frank Early, Claude Robertson, Minor Davis, F. T. Carter, J. T. Tuell, W. L. Gardner and J. M. Peyer.

The Labor World joins hundreds of friends in extending sincere condolences to the bereaved relatives of Brother Ames.

Reaper Summons J. T. Gannaway

Sympathy of the local trade union movement is extended the relatives of J. T. Gannaway, father of a well-known local family, who passed away Jan. 11 at his home, 410 Beck avenue, at the age of 72.

Mr. Gannaway was the father of seven children, all of whom, with their mother, survive. They are W. C., member of the typographical union; Miss Vesta, pressfeeder at the Chattanooga Printing and Engraving company; C. L. and V. W., operators of the Paragon cafe and cafeteria; Miss Viola and Mrs. Ed Clark, all of Chattanooga.

The Labor World joins with a host of local friends in expressing sincerest sympathy to the surviving relatives.

LABOR PRESSES FOR PASSAGE OF VITAL MEASURES

Prevailing Wage, Injunction Have Spotlight.

LATTER BILL SURE TO BE REPORTED

Amendment Sought to Penalize Violation of Law by Government Contractors.

Washington, Jan. 20.—Labor legislation is to the fore in congress as the American Federation of Labor presses for the passage of the anti-injunction bill and the amending of the prevailing rate of wages act to include a penalty clause.

The anti-injunction bill, held up on one pretext or another for years, will be reported out to the senate, virtually assuring senate action on the measure at this session. The senate judiciary committee has just agreed to take a vote January 25 on reporting the bill. The committee received requests for further heading from a number of anti-labor organizations, but in view of the exhaustive hearings held in the past, it was decided to hold no more hearings. Briefs from opponents and friends of the bill will be received by the committee before the vote to report it out is taken.

In the last congress the committee divided, seven to seven, on the bill, and it reached the senate calendar without committee recommendation. This year senator Steiwer, leader of the opposition, is no longer a member of the judiciary committee. Four new members who fill vacancies are expected to vote in favor of reporting the measure.

Bill Re-Introduced.

The bill, re-introduced by Senator Norris, chairman of the committee, is in substantially the same form in which it was urged last year for passage by Norris, Blaine, Walsh, of Montana, Borah, Caraway, Ashurst and Dill.

The bill does not affect the right of state courts to issue injunctions.

In federal courts, the act forbids issuance of injunctions in labor disputes to restrain workers from refusing to work, joining a labor organization, paying unemployment benefits, assembling peaceably, advertising the fact of the dispute or doing other things not forbidden by law.

The bill also outlaws the hated "yellow dog" contracts by declaring them "contrary to the public policy."

"Teeth" for Wage Bill.

Hearings on bills designed to broaden the prevailing rate of wages bill to include a penalty for violation of the act's provisions have been occupying the attention of the house labor committee. Five bills to amend the act have been introduced. Labor has not thrown its support to any particular bill, being interested only in seeing that "teeth" are put in the act.

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, appeared twice before the committee in support of the addition of a penalty clause to the present bill, known as the Bacon-Davis act. Passed last spring, the act requires contractors on government work to pay the wage prevailing for each class of labor in the community where the job is under way.

Would Broaden Act.

In addition to advocating a provision for penalizing contractors who violate the law, President Green told the committee labor favors broadening of the act to include all government work. It now applies only to government building projects. The Vancouver convention of the A. F. of L. directed the executive council to continue efforts to have the law extended to include road building and similar projects and, if possible, all work carried on in whole or part by the United States government.

Following President Green's testimony appearance before the committee, representatives of the Building Trades Department, A. F. of L. and other interested labor organizations, urged amendment of the law to include a penalty clause and to broaden its scope.

Mrs. Ed Carroll Goes Under Knife

Mrs. Ed Carroll, wife of the well-known member and vice-president of Local 175, Electrical Workers, submitted to an operation for appendicitis at a local hospital Wednesday night. Mrs. Carroll had been ill for several days before the operation was decided upon. Latest reports were that she had withstood the ordeal well, and is progressing nicely from the effects.

WOULD EMPLOY LOCAL LABOR ON POSTOFFICE

U. S. Employment Manager Asks Preference.

SEEKS SUCH CLAUSE AS PART OF CONTRACT

L. Bert Lowe Points Out Policy Is Carried Out in Other Sections.

A most commendable step was taken this week by the local office of the United States employment service, under the direction of L. Bert Lowe, when Washington authorities were asked to specify in contracts for the proposed new postoffice that local labor exclusively be employed on the project.

Mr. Lowe calls attention to the fact that experience has shown out-of-town contractors use laborers gathered from various places, and points out that the Chattanooga office is amply able to furnish all classes of labor, "residents of Chattanooga, all worthy and needing work."

Inclusion of such clause in the contracts on the million-dollar project, it is held, would provide considerable relief locally when, and if, the actual work begins.

Mr. Lowe's letter, already published in the dailies, has been the cause of considerable favorable comment. It follows:

We have been advised by the R. H. Hunt company, architects, that plans for the new postoffice building at Chattanooga are now in the hands of the Hon. James A. Wetmore, acting supervising architect, U. S. treasury department, for final checking.

It is our belief that bids will be asked for within the next thirty days for the construction of this building. It is the desire of this office and of the people of Chattanooga that both the skilled and unskilled labor used in the construction be residents of Chattanooga. This policy is being carried out by all localities, especially at Memphis, where government work is now in progress.

Our experience with some out-of-town contractors lends the belief that out-of-town labor is used by out-of-town contractors, if some clause is not contained in the contract, forbidding such action. We very respectfully urge that you communicate to the Hon. John R. Alpine, supervising director, or with the Hon. James A. Wetmore, acting supervising architect, the wishes of this office and the citizens of Chattanooga in this matter, with the request that a clause may be inserted in the contract making it mandatory on the part of the contractors to employ local help whenever possible to do so.

The U. S. employment service at Chattanooga is able to furnish all types of labor, foremen and superintendents, all residents of Chattanooga, all worthy and needing work.

Worley Recovering From Bad Accident

Wendell Worley, member of the Electrical Workers, is recovering from the effects of a serious mishap which befell him a short time ago when he "took a dive" from a ladder while engaged in wiring a house. Mr. Worley is not yet able to resume his work, but, according to E. E. Crosby, he is "hopping and hoping."

Des Moines Labor Hits Grocery Wage for Idle

Des Moines, Ia.—A mass meeting held under the auspices of the Des Moines Trades and Labor assembly made an emphatic protest against the manner in which needy persons are paid for work done in city parks.

President James F. Moran said that by an understanding between the welfare bureau and the city council or parks commission unemployed persons were given two days' work in the parks and paid principally in groceries.

The welfare bureau, he stated, pays the men with orders for groceries and other necessities up to 50 cents an hour and the city parks department pays an additional 17½ cents per hour in cash. The net result is, he said, that those who are given work through the welfare bureau are paid $8 in trade, restricted to certain articles, and $2.40 in cash.

J. C. Lewis, president of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, was the main speaker.

"Our position in this matter," Lewis said, "is for full payment in cash, to spend as we see fit. I see in this move an attempt to force the wage scale down in Des Moines."

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part II

A new commandment I give unto you. That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. JOHN XIII 34

If the only way in which to discover the social gospel of Jesus is to look to the content of His teaching rather than to its chronological order (the latter method would of course be best if it were possible since it would unmistakably show the development of His mind in a succinct and most comprehensive manner) then we must ask ourselves, "Of what and to whom did Jesus teach?" This is a far more difficult task to undertake than might at first glance appear to be. In fact we have as much to undo in our minds as we have to accomplish in an educational way as we proceed to eliminate excrescences that have grown up around and attached themselves to the Person of Jesus through theological channels and as we go about removing the false superstructure that has been built up around the real Jesus and which today to no inconsequential degree serves to overshadow this very human, ever-pitying friend of men who made Himself as one with the toiling and destitute masses of men when He was on earth.

WM. L. MOSS

Let us begin our task without further delay.

The story of the life of Jesus of Nazareth as He actually lived it moved through a world of human relationship. It was not as some would have us believe a life that was lived as a detached messiahship, a walking and talking embodiment of a metaphysical Christology come to life ("sent down from heaven," in ecclesiastical and Sunday school parlance) that men—even His own chosen and intimate circle of followers—obstinately refused to understand! The real Jesus spoke plain, human, refreshing words in the language understanded of the people—a dialect called Aramaic, having its source in the northern districts of Palestine but intelligible to the masses of the whole country as well as the upper levels of society. Every day He lived He scattered deeds of blessing for the benefit of the poor, the sin-ladened, the weary, the blind, the humble and the trusting.

Jesus' real gospel, as He taught and lived it, did not savor at all of the church-created Christology we have been taught is its essence and toward which ever since men began to teach it the world has remained lukewarm because of its apparent atificiality and its evidences of a "system" evolved solely to support an institution existing in the name of Christ which different groups of men have unhesitatingly shaped and used as they saw fit and to suit their own tastes.

Equitable Hours of Labor

Certain static and inefficient owners and managers of our industrial establishments draw smug comfort from their contention that unemployment is an incurable disease inseparably connected with the production and distribution of wealth.

These industrial bourbons and their legislative and judicial satellites maintain that the "natural order" and "economic laws" govern economic affairs much the same as forces like gravitation operate in the physical world.

Mr. Albert Thomas, secretary-general of the International Labor Office, disagrees with this reactionary view. In a recent discussion of the slow progress made throughout the world in applying positive cures for unemployment, Mr. Thomas reiterated his conviction that the world army of nearly 25,000,000 jobless is caused by policies originated and controlled by human beings, and that human beings have the power to change those policies so as to provide work and good wages for every employable person.

"My enthusiasm has not waned," Mr. Thomas said, "even when, not so long ago, partisans of the liberal economic school endeavored to demonstrate that economic crises arise just as do temporary springs, and that the periodical revival of unemployment is something naturally and inseparably linked up with economic development.

"Many people advised me to choose wise passivity, since it is impossible to war against the natural order of the world. But this policy would be just as inadvisable as to lie in bed and suffer passively.

"Fortunately we have already got beyond these theories. The increase of unemployment on a large scale has stirred everybody from his inactivity. Economists who have for so long been content to lie dreamlessly in their beds have at last been aroused out of their theory of fatalism.

"Certainly we believe that we can change the natural order of things. Nature cannot expect the majority of people to remain in misery.

"Even religious organizations are favoring the view that human intelligence is capable of directing social and economic progress. The 1925 Stockholm conference of the English Orthodox and Protestant churches unanimously declared that the sufferings on account of unemployment are 'intolerable for the moral sense,' and that the causes of the disease must be found and exterminated."

In his view that social and economic conditions are created by society rather than by the "natural order" or "economic laws," Mr. Thomas reflects the position of organized labor and rational people generally.

The length of the work day and work week, for instance, is not determined by the "natural order" or "economic laws," but by the will and decree of the autocrats who own and control the establishments in which the workers are employed.

There are over 8,000,000 unemployed today because these autocrats, having the power to do so, compel their workers, by threat of dismissal, to work in many instances six days a week.

Organized labor demands that the hours of labor shall be reduced to the seven-hour day and the five-day week at once in order to put the present 8,000,000 jobless to work.

Organized labor insists that hereafter the hours of labor shall be reduced at stated intervals to whatever extent may be necessary to provide jobs for workers displaced by labor-saving machinery and efficiency methods.

As a national policy, applied to all departments of our industrial life, this would abolish unemployment and prevent its recurrence.

The employers have the power to establish the shorter work day and the five-day week. They know they have it. Labor knows they have it. The 8,000,000 unemployed know they have it. The people know they have it. It is folly for them and their apologists to attempt to pass the buck either to the "natural order" or to "economic laws."

Labor's Place in Industry

The January issues of the trade journals are largely devoted to reviewing conditions in the various industries during 1931.

It is an axiom that the millions of employes do most of the functionally useful work in the production and distribution of wealth. It would be reasonable to assume, therefore, that Labor would at least be referred to in these annual reviews. Most of them, however, absolutely ignore the existence of labor.

They devote page after page to the number of stockholders, dividends, earnings, commodity prices, profits, losses, and the value of shares of stock, which are the owners' titles to the plants in which labor produces the commodities. But rarely does one find anything about wages, hours or working conditions of the employes.

In the Iron Age, a trade publication devoted to the iron and steel industry, Mr. C. E. Wright has an article of this type entitled "Industry Experiences a Calamitous Year." It is a fair sample of the way in which those who own and control industry and their journalistic megaphones declare they do not regard the interests of the workers as an essential element to be considered in the industries of the nation.

There are hundreds of thousands of workers who perform the labor in the iron and steel industry. Their interests are largely bound up in wages, hours, stability of employment, and similar working conditions. One would think that Mr. Wright would at least mention the various labor deflations that have taken place during the year—deflations in both wages and earnings. But his 9-page article carries nothing on this subject.

He tells how many million tons the output of steel ingot, pig iron and furnished steel dropped in 1931, and analyzes the price decreases for steel products of all sorts. He discourses on the falling off in exports of iron and steel products, and jumps over into the automobile and railroad industries long enough to describe their importance as buyers of iron and steel products.

He tabulates the reduced earnings of the big iron and steel companies and recounts regretfully the reduction in dividend rates and total dividends.

But the thousands of workers in the industry who metamorphose raw iron into finished commodities are not mentioned. These employes were handed a 10 per cent wage cut last year and in addition were placed on part time work so that, according to the national industrial conference board, they are now earning on an average slightly over $20 a week. But even this drastic deflation in living standards for the employes does not draw a syllable from Mr. Wright.

This deliberate omission of the workers from reviews of our industries does not come about by mere chance. It is perfectly in line with the prevailing conception of our industrial autocrats and their apologists in journalism and economics.

They hold that our industries are organized and operated by the owners or their representatives for the exclusive benefit of the owners. The workers who transform raw material into commodity wealth, and thence into earnings and profits, are not considered of enough importance to even merit their mention in articles describing industry. They are just things which are used as long as their use can be turned into profits and discarded to the unemployed army and charity organizations when machinery is found which will do their work.

Unemployment Is Not Inevitable

For many years organized labor has hoped that employers generally would admit the moral justification of the principle of shorter hours of labor for those who produce our wealth, and its present economic necessity in view of the continued increase of labor's output under machine production with the millions of unemployed standing as a clearly visible demonstration of the result of long work hours.

Declarations of the American Wool and Cotton Reporter in favor of a longer work week for textile mill workers in Massachusetts does not enlarge labor's belief that its hope will be speedily realized.

Some years ago Massachusetts, through the influence of organized labor, enacted a 48-hour week law for women workers. It was expected that other states, especially in New England, would follow the example of Masschusetts. They did not. Massachusetts mill owners claim the shorter hours in that state place them in a competitive disadvantage with the mill owners in the long-hour states.

Recently the New Bedford Times declared that textile manufacturing in Massachusetts was being injured and shifted to other states because of the hours handicap, and urged a reduction in the tax rate as a practical assistance to the mill owners.

The American Wool and Cotton Reporter takes issue with the Times and declares the Massachusetts textile manufacturers could easily pay their high taxes and would gladly do so provided they were given the right to return to the good old times when the mill employes were compelled to work nine hours a day.

"We could stand these taxes, they would not be our worst competitor," the Reporter says, "if we could get back the equitable hours of labor. Down in Lewiston, Me., for instance, operating 54 hours a week with the right to run overtime if business warrants, the mills have spent millions in putting in new equipment. And the help have been busily employed, the mills have run well."

This reactionary position of the American Wool and Cotton Reporter is a sample of what labor has to fight throughout the country.

For the protection of her women workers, Massachusetts enacted the 48-hour week. Other states have longer legal work weeks, some of them sanctioning 60 hours.

Instead of endeavoring to have these backward states advance to the Massachusetts standard, the American Wool and Cotton Reporter uses its influence to lengthen the Massachusetts work week to the disgraceful standards of other states.

Using a longer work week for textile employes would be unwarranted in normal times.

It is reprehensible now with 8,000,000 jobless workers living on some form of charity.

Of course the motive of the mill owners in advocating the longer work week is the belief that they would make more profit from 54 hours of wealth producing activity of their employes than in 48 hours.

But we have reached a period when the social conscience is revolting against making profit the sole or even the major purpose in industry. Those who do the useful work must be considered.

The time for lengthening the hours of labor is definitely passed.

The time for shortening them has definitely come.

Employers everywhere should take note of this change.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

In a talk to Father Cox's "army" of 12,000 Pittsburgh unemployed which invaded Washington to ask federal aid for the jobless, Gov. Pinchot said something that deserves to be impressed upon the consciousness of every leader in American life.

"You have a right to a chance to work," Pinchot told the unemployed men. "Civilized government is a failure if men who are able and willing to work to support their families cannot get the chance."

Gov. Pinchot stated a big truth in few words. Civilized government is a failure if men who are able and willing to work cannot get the opportunity.

Retired employes of the New York Central railroad are finding that private pension systems are not all they are cracked up to be. Arbitrary reductions of 10 to 15 per cent in existing and future pensions have just been announced by the railroad management.

Private pension systems cannot be depended upon in times of great stress. In the past, such systems have been wiped out of existence, leaving retired employes penniless after a lifetime of contributing to a fund supposed to assure them an income in their old age. Only government retirement or pension systems can give any assurance to workers of an income after their days of toil are over.

Senator John T. Blaine, of Wisconsin, has introduced in the senate two bills to which believers in the civil rights guaranteed by the constitution can give full approval. One is a joint resolution calling on the president to issue a general proclamation of amnesty restoring full rights to the 1,500 men and women convicted under the espionage act during the World war. The other is a bill outlawing in criminal prosecutions in the federal courts evidence obtained by wire-tapping.

The 1,500 espionage act victims cited were mostly obscure working and trades people, farmers, pacifists, socialists and I. W. W. members—humble folks all. Because of something they said or wrote in opposition to the war they were convicted. In many states these one-time political prisoners are denied the right of voting, holding public office, or serving on juries.

Senators Costigan, of Colorado; Walsh, of Montana, and Cutting, of New Mexico, served the cause of justice by insisting that the report on the Mooney-Billings case prepared by experts of the Wickersham commission be submitted to the senate. If they had not pressed a resolution calling for the report, its contents would still be a mystery.

The report is a scathing criticism of California's handling of the Mooney-Billings case and gives added justification to the demand for the pardon of Mooney and Billings on the ground they were the victims of perjured evidence and grossly unfair methods employed by the prosecution at their trials for alleged complicity in the bombing of the San Francisco Preparedness day parade.

The report throws further light on a case which has long been a disgrace to California and to the administration of American justice. The three senators who forced publication of the report have performed outstanding public services in the past. Their latest action is another public service.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

As stated in last week's article a most unusual phase of the development of unionism now comes before us for our observation in our survey of the history of labor unions in the United States. The phase of unionism referred to was the phenomenal growth and complete collapse of several gigantic secret societies whose membership were open only to laboring people.

Probably the most typical of such secret organizations was the Order of the Knights of St. Crispin. While it is true the Knights of St. Crispin was an organization embracing only shoemakers as members, we must know something of its history if we are to have a comprehensive understanding of the entire labor movement in this country from its beginning. Also it is important for us to know about this particular secret order since it represents the myriad other and smaller similar organizations that sprang into existence during the period immediately following the close of the Civil war and of which the records have either been lost or destroyed.

The Noble Order of the Knights of St. Crispin was organized and existed solely among shoemakers of the post-Civil war period. The order was first conceived in the brain of Newell Daniels, a shoemaker working at that time in Milford, Mass. It was not until 1867, upon Daniels moving to Milwaukee, then as now a center of radicalism, that the Knights of St. Crispin actually came into existence. Starting with only seven associates, Daniels had by 1868 developed his organization into a machine of power and influence felt in no small measure in the political and social life of a large part of the east. Frank K. Foster, writing of the order in the year 1868, says, in his "The Labor Movement: the Problem of Today:" "It made and unmade politicians, established a monthly journal, started co-operative stores; fought, often successfully, against threatened reductions in wages . . .; it became the undoubted foremost trade organization of the world." These words are true, yet how many of us ever heard of the Knights of St. Crispin!

As strong as the order was in 1868, within five years its death struggles were becoming more and more apparent to observers and, by 1878, its former members freely and openly acknowledged it to be dead and a thing of the past. (Continued Next Week.)

AWFUL THOUGHT FOR THIS WEEK!

It All Depends.

Looking at it one way, any job is a good job to the man out of a job, provided he has lost his appetite and sartorial pride.—Toledo Blade.

Any job is a good job! The average wage-earner, in these piping times of peace (?) and plenty (Sic) hasn't eaten in so long he's lost his appetite long ago, and his sartorial pride has gone where the woodbine twineth, lo, these many moons ago! There are few exceptions to this rule!

However, there still remain a few of us whose pride is not so far gone that we are willing to surrender all hope of eventually returning to the status of free-born, white Americans, with living standards in accordance.

Union Workers Win Five-Day Working Week in Two Cities

San Francisco, Jan. 13.—Jan. 1 the five-day week was established in San Francisco and Almeda county by the building trades. This was assured late in December when the idea was indorsed by the General Contractors' association. That organization and the Industrial association thus became united in their recognition of the advantages for all parties, especially during the current economic confusion, of a five-day week. The contractors' association is composed of all large builders in the San Francisco bay section as well as a majority of the small contractors.

The movement had its beginning, in a serious manner, through an "impartial wage board" that held hearings last October in San Francisco and Oakland. Virtually every witness at the hearings, both employer and employe, urged the shorter week as a relief to unemployment. The "impartial wage board" was composed of Prof. W. E. Hotchkiss, dean of the school of business administration of Stanford university; Will J. French, state director of internal relations, and H. J. Burnnier, consulting engineer.

New Orleans, Jan. 13.—The Operating Plasterers and Cement Finishers' International Association of the United States and Canada, Local No. 93, this city, on Jan. 4 forced a five-day week without opposition from the bosses.

Short Mill Week Held Imperiled By "Unsocial Practices" of Few

New York City, Jan. 13.—If a few mills continue to operate at night there will be an end to the constructive co-operation now said to be prevailing in the textile industry, George A. Sloan, president of the Cotton-textile Institute, declared in a letter to Walter S. Gifford, head of the president's organization on unemployment relief.

Sloan told Gifford that a few mills, practicing "uneconomic and unsocial policies," have ignored recommendations to shorten the work week and eliminate night work for women and minors. He contended that the short work week has been widely adopted and that 84 per cent of the industry is not employing women and minors at night.

"You can well appreciate the feeling that such action arouses in some mill centers where the workers have meager employment or no work at all," he wrote.

"Moreover," he added, "this practice of excessive operation is leading to unrest and discouragement on the part of the more enlightened mill executives, who have been striving to promote the industry's welfare, to stabilize employment, and thus to minimize distress.

"If a few mills persist in practicing uneconomic and unsocial policies (thereby preventing the much desired spread of employment) this type of destructive leadership undoubtedly will be followed by others with the inevitable recurrence of the peaks of overproduction and the valleys of unemployment that have made cotton textile conditions in this respect so difficult in years gone by."

Compulsory Donations To Charity Groups

New York.—The policy that employers should force their employes to contribute to charity funds is finding advocates in employer periodicals.

In the American Machinist, an employer periodical devoted to the widest possible extension of labor-displacing machinery, Mr. H. L. Lackman says:

"An employer, having first satisfied himself that the funds are properly handled, should proceed to sell the scheme to his employes. If adequate contributions are not forthcoming, a definite percentage of earnings should be fixed as a maximum and insisted upon."

This means that employers, not content with the billions of profits they make every year out of the labor of their employes, propose to compel those employes to spend a portion of their wages in the support of certain institutions approved by the employers.

Such a policy does violence to American institutions. It is not a credit to employers. It is opposed by labor. All workers should be free to spend their income as they see fit without any compelling force from employers.

Green Requests Flood Control Peonage Probe

Washington.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, asked the labor committee of the house of representatives to make an investigation of the charges that there is near peonage and slavery in Mississippi flood control work.

The original charges, made by responsible representatives of the American Federation of Labor, after surveys of labor conditions made on the spot, were recently sent by Green to the war department and referred to Maj.-Gen. Lyle Brown, chief of army engineers, who held there was no evidence that private contractors were holding their workers in near peonage.

"We are not satisfied with that investigation," Green said. "No labor representative was called by the war department to support the charges with additional facts."

Green also read a resolution adopted by the Mississippi State Federation of Labor asserting that Maj.-Gen. Brown had shown prejudice in his investigation.

Anti-Injunction Bill In Senate Committee

Washington.—Chairman Norris, of the senate committee on the judiciary, announced that the committee would receive briefs up to Jan. 25 from the opponents of proposed legislation restricting the power of federal judges to issue injunctions in labor disputes.

Exhaustive hearings on the subject were held during the last congress. The committee does not think it necessary to repeat them at this session.

UNION LABEL PROTECTION.

Washington.—The senate passed the union label bill to authorize associations of employes in the District of Columbia to adopt a device to designate their products and penalize all imitations of the device.

American Federation of Labor officials informed the senate District of Columbia committee that the use of union labels on nonunion products is a common practice in Washington.

The bill provides penalties ranging from $100 to $500 or imprisonment from three months to one year. It is expected the house of representatives will pass it in the near future.

UNION PRINTER MAYORS.

The two leading cities of the province of Alberta, Canada, have printer mayors. In the capital, Edmonton, "Dan" Knott, who holds a card from International Typographical union, was recently elected and 150 members of the printing and allied crafts were in attendance at a banquet given in recognition of his election to the mayoralty.

The other printer-mayor is Andy Davison, of Calgary, Alberta's largest city. Mayor Davison, re-elected early in December, is a member of the typographical union of Calgary.—Editor and Publisher.

House Committee Blocks Government Wage Cuts

Washington.—The refusal of the house of representatives committee on expenditures in the executive departments to make a favorable report on a number of bills reducing the pay of government employes was an effective block to the activities of certain wage slashing members of congress.

When the various appropriation bills come before the house it will be possible for the wage-cutting legislators to offer pay cut amendments, known as "riders," which would bring the matter directly before the members.

Officials of the American Federation of Labor are watching the parliamentary situation carefully and will use every influence of organized labor to maintain the modest salaries and wages now paid to government workers.

It is stated that about 175 senators and representatives have written letters expressing their opposition to all wage and salary reductions.

Nearly 500 Plants Report November Cuts in Wages

Four hundred and ninety manufacturing plants, out of 16,170, reporting to the United States bureau of labor statistics in November, cut wages, the reductions averaging 10.7 per cent and 134,368 workers being affected, the bureau announces.

Three per cent of the plants surveyed reduced workers' pay, and 4.9 per cent of all employes in reporting factories were involved.

Not a single instance of an increase in pay was reported.

The industry with the greatest number of plants inaugurating reductions was the foundry and machine shop products, with 49, in which 7,717 workers were affected. The greatest number of workers given reductions was in the iron and steel industry, where cuts in twenty-six plants hit 46,371 persons.

Rail Unions Ask 6-Hour Day and Job Assurance

Chicago.—Representatives of the twenty-one railroad labor unions presented a four-point program stressing unemployment relief to the joint meeting with the railroad executives to consider the latter's demand for a 15 per cent wage cut. The program included:

Assurance of employment for the average force for one year and at least part-time employment for the stand-by force necessary for heavy traffic periods.

The six-hour day.

Federal compensation laws to indemnify against occupation accidents and diseases and to provide replacement insurance.

Regulation of competing forms of transportation.

REJECT PAY CUTS.

Workers in the iron and steel and mechanical workshops of Sweden have voted to reject the proposals offered by the mediation commission for wage-cuts averaging 3 per cent, according to a cable to the commerce department from Acting Commercial Attache H. C. McLean, Stockholm. Employers have announced that a reduction of about 12 per cent will be made in the iron and steel industry on January 17. Approximately 90,000 workers are affected by the wage decision.

PRESSMEN GET INCREASE.

In accordance with an existing contract, wages of members of New York Printing Pressmen's union have been advanced from $59 to $60 weekly. The increase affects about 3,200 pressmen in New York's 130 job printing plants.

According to F. A. Silcox, secretary of the Printers' league, an employers' organization which had sought to have the pressmen forego the raise in view of present business conditions, measures will be taken by print shop owners to reduce their forces and working hours to make up the wage increase.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

TTACK ON SENATOR ESENTED BY FRIENDS

legates to Central Body Recall Some High Lights f History in Opposition to Progressive Lawmaker y Civic Leaders.

TE BODY SUPPORTS ATTITUDE OF M'KELLAR

Nashville, Jan. 28.—Action of Chattanooga trades unionists in port of Senator McKellar's ral and manly stand on the rris bill for government oper-ion of Muscle Shoals has been matter for considerable com-nt in Nashville this week.

The position of the Chatta-ga movement is entirely in e with policy of the Tennes-e Federation of Labor, it was d at headquarters at the La-r Temple here. Officials of e Federation and the Rail otherhoods pointed out that at last meeting of the state committee resolutions in-sing the Norris bill were opted and forwarded to all mbers of the Tennessee dele-tion in the congress.

Federation officers also held day that the opposition to the nor senator which has broken t in such bitter fashion in the ookout City is hardly of a na-re to become unduly excited er, as it comes for the most t, according to the impression rt from the same groups and ps of citizens who have con-sistently held reactionary views ith respect to national legisla-on, and who have accordingly pposed, from the beginning, gressive policies of Mr. Mc-llar.

Possibly no controversy in re-nt months has occasioned as uch public interest as has the flare up" between members of Local Chamber of Commerce committee and Senator Kenneth McKellar following a visit to shington by the local citizens re: their failure to have the nator from Tennessee change position of years' standing on question of whether Muscle oals shall be presented to the ver interests or developed by d in the interest of the whole ple, to whom the vast project longs at the present time.

Senator McKellar told the com-ittee he favored appropriations certain developments of the nnessee, thus agreeing with e position of his visitors, but the question of disposition of Shoals he is and has been mitted to the Norris bill, ich provides for government eration of the project.

On their return to Chatta-ga, members of the commit-bitterly attacked Mr. McKel-r, and in public statements ed upon him the blame for ure of legislation for the de-opment of the Tennessee river d the Shoals. The senior sen-or replied by letters to former nator Brock and Mercer Reyn-ds, local manufacturer and mber of Commerce leader, in ich he indicated bitter resent-nt for the attacks on him per-nality, and expressed his feel-gs in language about as strong possible to "make the mails." resolution was later this week sed by the Chamber calling on Mr. McKellar for an apol-gy.

Danville Pay Cut Means Misery for Low Paid Toilers

Acute Suffering Seen as Result of Slash Made in Effort to Restore Mill Stock to Dividend-Paying Basis.

Danville, Va., Jan. 27.—Behind a smoke screen of meeting "competitive conditions" and providing "steady employment," officials of the Dan River Cotton mills are seeking to restore the corporation to its dividend-paying basis of former years by instituting a salary and wage cut ranging from 20 to 10 per cent. This new cut goes into effect January 25, and it is anticipated in several quarters here that the slash will precipitate trouble rather than promote the prosperity of the huge mills.

Mill officials anticipate that the cut will effect an annual saving of $300,000 to the stockholders. It will vary from 10 to 20 per cent in the cases of salaried employes, the percentage of reduction rising in proportion to the size of the salary. Wages will be cut 10 per cent.

The new schedule of pay will mean acute suffering for many families that have found it well-nigh impossible to exist on their present earnings. A careful and extensive survey of wages actually paid the workers made prior to a cut that precipitated the prolonged strike of a year ago indicated the average wage of mill workers here to be a little in excess of $13. Information obtained from a fairly representative number of workers tends to show that the average worker is receiving less today than at the time the survey was made.

Strong Protest Expected.

Just what will be the reaction of the local union of the United Textile Workers of America to the new pay schedule has not been determined. It is expected that its membership will enter a vigorous protest. O. E. Woodbury, representative of the American Federation of Labor, and C. W. Bolick, organizer for the United Textile Workers of America, are devoting most of their time to the local situation.

Announcement of the new wage cut is providing organizers for the National Textile Workers' union with just the inflammatory inspiration they need. They have redoubled their organization efforts in the mill villages and are openly urging the workers to strike for higher wages.

Assets Squandered, Charge.

New York.—"The Riverside and Dan River Cotton mills, in Danville, Va., squandered the assets of the company in an attempt to destroy the organization movement amongst workers," charges Francis J. Gorman, first vice-president of the United Textile Workers of America, in a statement given "The Textile Worker," organ of his organization.

He continues: "Before the union went into Danville, the waste and mismanagement on the inside of the mills was well known to the people of Danville and was a topic of common gossip. The company is now faced with a strike from the inside of their own ranks. The stockholders, at last, have taken advantage of the exposures made by the union and the situation is positive proof that the position of the union was sound and constructive."

JOBLESS INSURANCE LAW PROPOSED IN N. Y. SENATE

Albany, N. Y.—Senator Seabury Mastick introduced a bill in the senate providing for the creation of a permanent system of reserve funds to provide workers with a portion of their regular wages during periods when employers refuse to employ them.

Mr. Mastick said the bill would require employers to set aside in reserve funds a small fixed percentage of their pay rolls. From this fund jobless employes would receive a limited proportion of their regular wages not to exceed $10 a week for thirteen weeks in a year.

The administration of the plan would be placed in the hands of employment stabilization boards provided for each industry under the general supervision of the state department of labor.

HANLY SEES GUS DYER LABOR-HATERS' ENTRY IN GOVERNOR'S RACE

Declares Loquacious Professor Will Launch Campaign at Dinner Tonight—Describes Him as "Mouthpiece of Manufacturers' Association, Avowed Enemy of Working Man, Advocate of Power Interests and Reactionary of Worst Kind."

By DAVID HANLY
Legislative Chairman, Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Nashville, Jan. 27.—There will be a meeting at the Maxwell House in this city on Friday night, Jan. 29, promoted by Charles C. Gilbert, secretary of the Tennessee Manufacturers' association, ostensibly to form an association of Tennessee Colonels, but the real purpose of the meeting is to promote the candidacy of Gus Dyer for governor. He will be the candidate of the Manufacturers' association. Dyer will be the principal speaker of the occasion. He will tell what is wrong with Tennessee. This speech will be his opening gun in his campaign for governor. He will formally announce his candidacy shortly thereafter.

Gus W. Dyer is a professor of political economy at Vanderbilt. He is also editor of the Southern Agriculturist, a farm paper published in this city.

He is a mouthpiece of the manufacturers' association, an avowed enemy of the working man, an advocate of the power interests and a reactionary of the worst kind.

There is a movement of the friends of Hill McAlister to persuade him to become a candidate for governor. I have been informed by one of his close friends that he will be a candidate. Lewis Pope and Albert Williams, both of this city, are already candidates.

Tom Turner 'Lands' At Lookout Shop

Tom Turner, well-known member of Local 415, Barbers, who left the Times Barber shop when that place joined the non-unionists, is now located at the Lookout Barber shop, 728 Market street. In fact, Tom has been "performing" there for some days, and in connection with that, The Labor World owes him an apology for not making mention of the fact in a previous issue. But what with the worries of the depression, our senators calling one another bad names and all, the notation was overlooked, and this paper regrets the omission. However, if there any of Tom's many friends who had not learned of his location, they may consider this an invitation to go down and get some of that service for which he is famous.

Clyde Garrett, who also left the Times shop at the same time the card went out, is located at Cochran's, 912-A Market, and reports that business is as usual—whatever that means.

STOREY OPENS A NEW MARKET

Market St. Business Fifth Venture of Local Trades Unionist in Two Years.

Announcement of the opening of the Chattanooga Cash Market at 506 Market street is of particular interest to local trades unionists, from the fact that W. F. Storey, the owner, is a well-known and active member of Local 600, Meatcutters, and has been for a long period a delegate to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council.

Having been successful in operating four other markets, friends of Mr. Storey predict for him a similar experience in the new venture. Since Jan. 1, 1930, prior to which time he was in charge of a Hill Store market near Sixth and Market street, he has opened successively new places at 110 Chickamauga, Rossville, and at 3306, 2303 and 1404 Dodds avenue, and in each case has enjoyed a satisfactory and growing patronage.

Mr. Storey's long experience in both the buying and selling ends of the business has made it possible for him to successfully compete with other markets, and employment of none but first-class, skilled meatcutters has also had a part in his successes.

The new market is in the same building with the Crane Fish company. J. M. Lane will be in charge.

Some attractive opening specials are offered in a large display advertisement in this issue of The Labor World.

Googe Says Bread Is Big Issue With Southern Toilers

Prosperity Dependent on Shorter Hours With Adequate Pay, Acting Head of Organization Campaign Declares.

GEORGE L. GOOGE

Greensboro, N. C., Jan. 27.—"The big issue with organized labor in the south is going to be bread, butter and beans with a little fat back, although we prefer steak, on the side," said George L. Googe, of Savannah, Ga., acting chairman of the southern organization campaign of the American Federation of Labor, during an interview here in which he discussed plans for the work in the south during the coming months.

Googe spent a week looking over the situation in North Carolina. While in this city, he was invited to address the Greensboro Economic league, where he presented the viewpoint of labor in regard to the problem of unemployment.

Reduction of the productive hours of men at work so that each man needing and desiring work may have his share is advocated by organized labor for taking up the unemployment slack in the nation. Googe insisted that this reduction of the working hours, if it is to result in restored prosperity, must be accomplished by enough pay in the pay envelopes to provide the necessities and a few of the luxuries of life for the workers and those dependent upon them.

Low Wages Curtail Market.

Googe was inclined to feel that unemployment in America, although unemployment is world-wide, is largely a national problem. In explanation, he pointed out that wage-earners of America lost $11,000,000,000 in wages last year because of unemployment. That meant that the market for goods in this country was curtailed to that extent during 1931. The speaker believed that the non-payment of war debt payments due us by foreign nations sinks into insignificance beside the loss incurred by American wage-earners.

"I have not yet found a single city in the states covered by my office," stated Googe in discussing relief work, "that is financially able to take care of its unemployed properly."

He told of a city in which practically all of the employed have pledged two per cent of their incomes for relief work. That city has opened a food supply station, a clothing station, and has been carrying out a plan providing three days a week work at $1.50 a day for men out of work. But it has only secured funds sufficient to carry the work on during just half of the winter. He believed that few cities, counties, or states can or will appropriate one dime to meet the tremendous additional emergency this winter.

Sees Labor's Demand Supported.

"Local taxes," said the labor leader, "are derived principally from levies on real estate, while federal taxes come from taxes on incomes, inheritances, tariffs, big corporations, and a number of sources."

Organized labor of the south is uniting with the American Federation of Labor efforts to persuade congress to make a federal appropriation for unemployment relief. Googe suggested that the Economic league members advocate such an appropriation. He felt that labor's request will be backed by every local community honest enough and frank enough to admit that it cannot handle the situation alone.

Express Sympathy For a Brother

At the last meeting of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, resolutions of condolence with E. S. Stacy, a fellow-member, were adopted, Mr. Stacy having lost his brother, Jack, notation of which appeared in the last issue of The Labor World.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to his last reward Monroe J. (Jack) Stacy, the beloved brother of our brother, Elbert S. Stacy; and,

Whereas, this local sympathizes deeply with Brother Stacy in his loss of his brother, and feel deep regret for the loss to his family; be it

Local Conditions Worse Than Many Neighboring Cities

Federation President Pleads for Concerted Action.

FLAYS SELFISHNESS OF MORE FORTUNATE

Quotes Mayor Bass as Saying Ten Local Citizens Could Feed Every Hungry Family Without Sacrifice.

Bitterly denouncing "organized power" for its many and varied propoganda methods; sounding a solemn note of warning against the spread of unrest among even those who have always been regarded as conservative, and calling upon all groups of citizens to join in an unselfish movement to care for those who are vainly seeking the opportunity to earn their daily bread, Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and special representative of the parent body, the American Federation of Labor, delivered to his homefolks what was possibly the most dramatic and earnest address of many which he has made before Chattanooga trades unionists.

His reference to "power" came in comment regarding the controversy between Senator Kenneth McKellar and members of the local Chamber of Commerce over government operation vs. private exploitation of Muscle Shoals. He declared he had more than ever of late months been in position to observe the "ethics" of power propagandists, and cited activities in various political, industrial and publicity lines as constituting an encroachment upon democratic institutions.

Turning to the economic situation, Mr. Aymon declared that he has, with other observers, been more and more concerned over the unchecked increase of unemployment and the consequent spread of what would otherwise be regarded as communistic tendencies.

"I have observed economic conditions throughout this territory recently," he said, "and I believe that the situation in my home city right now is worse than in many other localities. Misery and want here is alarming; and the saddest and most deplorable feature of the whole condition is that the well-to-do citizens, or those who are the only ones in position to help, apparently do not, or will not, realize its seriousness and alarming tendencies.

"No later than today the mayor of Chattanooga said to a committee of which I was a member that he could name ten men in Chattanooga who could feed every hungry family in the city and not miss the money more than the ordinary citizen would miss a five-dollar bill.

"Yet many of our more fortunate citizens profess not to know that a great crisis is upon our people which threatens the very peace and tranquillity of city, state and nation.

"It is high time that those who are living in luxury began to look about them and see and understand that the situation is alarming, and do their duty as good American citizens by lending every effort to bring us out of the unprecedented crisis which now confronts us.

"I am informed that bankers and financial institutions are demanding exorbitant rates of interest on municipal and state bonds, thus helping to block public works programs which might otherwise be undertaken to relieve the situation. If our various governments fail to sell bonds, it is entirely probable that schools will be closed and

Old Age Pensions For All Railroad Workers Proposed

Local Rail Unions Back National Body Working for Government-Administered System of Retirement Payments.

Chicago, Jan. 27.—A bill to provide old-age or retirement pensions for all railroad employes in the United States is now being prepared in Chicago and will be introduced in congress in the near future. The bill will be sponsored by the Railroad Employers' National Pension association, Inc., with headquarters in this city.

It is proposed to establish a board of administration under control of the interstate commerce commission. Pensions of from $50 to $300 a month will be called for in the bill. It is proposed to fix the retirement age at 65 at the start, the age to be lowered as experience shows that this can be done with safety to the funds in hand.

It is proposed that approximately 60 per cent of the money necessary to create the national pension fund shall come from the carriers and 40 per cent from the employes. The government is called upon to provide the administrative machinery only, with equal representation from the employers, the employes and the public.

The national organization of railroad employes sponsoring this plan is comprised of representatives of local lodges and local unions of the various standard railroad labor organizations in more than one-half of the states in the Union. The movement is particularly strong on the Pacific coast, according to information received here. However, the heads of several of the big brotherhoods are in opposition to the movement.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA SETS UP SYSTEM OF LABOR COURTS

Prague, Czechoslovakia.—The new law setting up labor courts, with jurisdiction in disputes arising out of contracts for the hire of services or apprenticeship agreements based on private law contract, went into effect on January 1.

The powers of the courts will not extend to disputes for which special bodies have already been made competent by the legislation on works councils, mines councils, works committees, the Elbe shipping tribunal, or the legislation applying to house porters. Nor does their jurisdiction include disputes with state employes or the employes of state undertakings.

The plan consists of labor courts, the district court which acts as a court of appeal, and the supreme court which acts as a court of revision.

A duly constituted labor court consists of a chairman, who must be a professional judge, and two "assessors" appointed by the president of the supreme court from persons proposed by the central industrial associations of employers and workers. The district court consists of three professional judges and two "assessors" appointed by the president of the supreme court.

In the case of collective labor disputes between one or more employers or employers' organizations and one or more workers' organizations, the parties may submit their disputes to the labor courts for conciliation.

MACHINERY DESTROYS JOBS, JARRETT SAYS

Clarksburg, W. Va.—The owners and managers of West Virginia industries spent more than $76,000,000 for new machinery from 1925 to 1930, according to Mr. Howard S. Jarrett, West Virginia commissioner of labor.

As an illustration of the increased productive power of the modern wage earner under labor-displacing machinery, Mr. Jarrett said he recently watched forty women with forty machines perform the work formerly done by 500 persons. He said that if work cannot be made sufficient to provide the workers with the necessaries of life, "they must depend on unemployment insurance or as a last resort, the dole—in which they are not keep to become participants."

The state's last unemployment survey, Mr. Jarrett said, showed 42,000 unemployed exclusive of mine workers.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part III

Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's.
MAT. XXII:21

WM. L. MOSS

Jesus' teaching was, broadly speaking, of a two-fold nature. He spoke chiefly of God and spoke chiefly to the individual: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; this is the first commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these."—(Mk. 12:30, 31.) From the above we can readily understand Jesus had in mind only one major objective, the bringing about of the Kingdom of God, and proposed to make this Kingdom the common meeting ground of God and men. Furthermore, He kept His teaching singularly free of everything that might detract from this principal objective toward which he desired to turn all eyes.

I mean by this that while Jesus was teaching there surrounded Him on every hand political oppression in sore need of an anodyne which He alone was capable of supplying, social injustice needing the firm reforming hand of an idealist such as He was, and an appalling number of illiterate persons being led by arrogant religious leaders who turned the people's blindness to their own profit, yet Jesus never for the fraction of a moment wavered in His determination to work toward the goal of which He had spoken in His Sermon on the Mount in unmistakable language that others might the more easily follow Him and know where He was leading them: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness." (Mt. 6:33.)

To Jesus, the Kingdom was the earthly connecting link between the Father and His children. "Thy kingdom come" was, as Jesus made it, the logical earnest prayer of God's children that this connecting link or brotherhood on earth might be enlarged to embrace all men everywhere. The basis of this Kingdom which Jesus came to establish and for which He bade God's children pray is none other than God Himself, and it is to be a Kingdom neither political nor temporal, but one far above either of these. It is a Kingdom in which God is the Ruler, holding sway over the hearts and lives of the subjects of that Kingdom, individual men of every race and color.

INDIGESTION

"My work is confining, and often I eat hurriedly, causing me to have indigestion. Gas will form and I will smother and have pains in my chest.

"I had to be careful what I ate, but after someone had recommended Black-Draught and I found a small pinch after meals was so helpful, I soon was eating anything I wanted.

"Now when I feel the least smothering or uncomfortable bloating, I take a pinch of Black-Draught and get relief."

Congress Sets a Stage

Congress has enacted what is known as the emergency reconstruction bill. It is distinctly the president's measure—his device for getting us out of the jam.

Inasmuch as congress has had before it no alternative, congress had to pass the presidential measure, establishing an enormous credit organization which is supposed to loosen the wheels of industry.

We have, in reality, a group of measures, but they unite into one program. The only theory upon which this program can be approved by those who care about the accounting surely to be brought by the future is that we are in a desperate fix and it is better to pay a high price for a cure than not to be cured. This is a slim basis upon which to record approval and give sanction, but let it go at that.

It is assumed that every possible power will be mobilized to create something that looks like prosperity by midsummer. But the end of the story will be this: The great money kings will take out of the situation such a toll as even they, accustomed to fabulous takings, have never yet had in their acquisitive fingers. At the end of a long, long story of toll-taking at the expense of peoples in distress, this is the grand climax, the ultimate, the last Alpine height, glistening with an aurora of gold.

This is no partisan criticism of the legislation just enacted. It is not partisan legislation. Both parties have joined to create a bankers' holiday, out of which it is hoped the people will get at least some circus lemonade and perhaps a ham sandwich.

It will help, and there is no other promise of help. So we take it with thanks. But if we think at all, we must be staggered at the price to be paid in the end. Banking gentlemen will go on a lot of additional boards of directors before this new legislation has worked its way with our lives and our industry.

Meanwhile the fundamentals of our economic order, which have been almost wholly ignored, will go on, inexorably working their way with things. Unless there is an enormous and wholesale readjustment of wages and hours of labor, a dozen reconstruction bills will not work a cure. The business of wage-cutting will have to be reversed with a vengeance. Failing in that, the machines of America will pile up their unsalable piles, faster than before, and we shall be sailing blissfully and mostly in ignorance to another debacle—one of even grander proportions.

Before long the American people will have to decide whether this nation is for men, or whether it is for finance captains and the machines they own. The problem is to work out the future through democracy. Failing in that, we shall have something less beautiful.

These are things to think about while the new legislation worms its way toward action to create something that looks like prosperity, but that may be a masked prelude to greater drama and deeper tragedy.

If a meed of prosperity comes, take it and grow fat upon it, you whose doorway it touches, but DO NOT BE FOOLED!

Employers and Living Standards

The editor of the Washington Post says that "Europe is still practicing the exploitation of its labor with a view of selling large quantities of its products abroad, instead of building up its home markets by raising the standards of living." This is the same as saying that American employers, in contradistinction to their European brethren, are engaged in raising the living standards of American workers.

Living standards are largely determined by earnings. The editor of the Post evidently is oblivious of the fact that American employers during the past two years have reduced the living standards of millions of workers to the charity basis by refusing to employ them at any wage, and drastically lowered the living standards of millions of others by wage cuts and part time work.

Right now the executives of our railroad companies are working together to reduce the living standards of railroad workers by a ten per cent wage cut. And our employers as a whole absolutely refuse to reduce the hours of labor to the seven-hour day and the five-day week and thus automatically provide jobs for at least eight million unemployed persons and raise their living standards from the near-starvation basis to the standard fixed by reasonable wages.

As a rule it may be stated that when it comes to labor the employers of the United States, Europe, and every other country apply the identical policy of extorting from the workers as large an output as possible for the lowest wages that economic and social conditions will permit.

Low Wages and Prosperity

One of the arguments of wage reduction advocates is the claim that lower wages will stimulate business recovery and hasten the return of prosperity by enabling manufacturers to reduce their production costs and consequently the prices for the articles which their employes produce.

This contention received a heavy blow by the report of the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics on wages of farm laborers. The bureau said that wages on United States farms have dropped below the 1913 level. Lowest wages are paid in the South Central and South Atlantic states, at 72 to 74 cents a day with board and 96 cents to $1.02 a day without board. Highest wages are paid in the North Atlantic states, where the average rate is $1.70 per day with board and $2.37 without board.

Monthly rates, the bureau found, range from $14.43 with board in the South Atlantic states to $32.39 with board in the Far Western states; and without board, from $21.80 in the South Atlantic states to $31.45 in the Far Western states.

The bureau also found numerous instances, particularly in the North Central states, of laborers driven to the point of working for their food and lodging alone, which is the diet the farmers furnish to their horses.

If the wage reducers' contention that low wages and the following low production costs contribute to business revival and prosperity, the farmers should be in the foremost ranks of prosperity.

But the truth is that millions of them are on the verge of bankruptcy despite the fact that in addition to low wages they are assisted by the federal land banks to loan them hundreds of millions of government furnished money at reasonable rates and backed up by the federal farm board subsidized with $500,000,000 supplied by the government to stabilize the prices of farm products at reasonable figures.

Their contention is so desperate that congress has appropriated an additional $125,000,000 for the use of the federal land banks to assist them with new loans.

The situation in which the American farmers are placed should put a definite quietus on the activities of low-wage propagandists.

Low wages, with the consequent small buying power of the workers, are our greatest handicap to the revival of normal business activity and the return of prosperity.

It is regrettable that some of our leading business men have not the clearness of vision to see this elemental economic truth.

Labor's Remuneration

There is a tendency among certain writers on economics and industrial relations to assume that all the workers are entitled to is a "living wage."

This theory frequently expresses itself in the declaration that if those who own and control our industries cannot furnish work at wages large enough to provide the workers with the necessaries of life, then there must be some form of unemployment insurance or, as a last resort, relief in the form of public or private charity with charity standards of living based on scientifically prepared budgets designed to keep the workers alive and but little more.

This reactionary idea should be scrapped. Labor does most of the productive work in all departments of our economic life. With modern machinery, the workers not only produce earnings large enough to provide a "living wage" for themselves and a fair return to the owners on their legitimate investment, but also produce surplus earnings running into billions of dollars.

The theory of the "living wage" people is that this immense surplus belongs of right to those who own and control industry.

Labor does not subscribe to this theory. Labor's policy declares that a large and ever larger portion of this surplus shall go to the workers in wages, and that the amount shall not be determined in the least by what it costs the workers to live.

A living was what the slave owners gave their slave workers. Labor has passed beyond the slave status. Living-wage employers and economists are still dominated by the slave conception. They should modernize their viewpoint.

PRIDE AND HONOR!

Editor The Labor World:

Mister Editor, I believe that it is an accepted fact that the "ultimate consumer" will have to pay the tax. If so, isn't it about time for old John Public, Big Business and others to consider the following:?

If the ultimate consumer has got to absorb all the billions of losses this country has suffered, in this depression, and the ultimate consumer hasn't got a job, and has already spent all his money, isn't it about time for all this charity business to be thrown aside, and the idea of putting old Ultimate to work, so he can pay the bill, to be carefully considered? And, if you don't put him to work so he can pay and he starves to death, who the devil do you expect to make pay this loss? And, how long do you expect this depression to last, if you don't put him to work?

It looks foolish to me to try to prolong his agony and suffering by keeping him barely alive and forcing him to bow his proud head in shame and mortification as he goes to the public soup kitchens with a tin bucket to get a "dole" to keep his wife and kids from starving! Let him die and keep his pride and honor, for God's sake!

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Now that we have so little money to buy food, and the bosses are trying to pound wages back to pre-war levels, just how much does it cost to live, anyway?

The bureau of labor statistics tabulation for the month of December, 1931, basing the price index on weighted figures (which allow the proper proportion of each kind of food according to its common use) says that average food prices in December, 1930, were 37.2 per cent higher than in 1913, and in December, 1931, food prices were still 14.3 per cent higher than in 1913; and that for the year 1931 food prices were 21.3 per cent higher than in 1913.

Meanwhile, taking 1926 as the basic 100, the figures showing volume of employment and of pay rolls tell quite a different story. In textiles, the amount of employment in December, 1931, was 72.8, and the pay roll was 55.8, as compared with 1926. Total of wages there was 17 points lower than total employment.

In iron and steel, total employment was 58.8, or 41.2 points below 1926; while total wages was represented by 38.0, or 62 points below 1926. Pay roll dropped 21.8 points more than employment.

Leather and its products showed in December an employment index of 72.4, and a pay roll index of 48.6; stone, clay and glass products showed an employment index of 51.7, and a pay roll index of 36.9. Automobiles record was an employment index of 61.6, and a pay roll index of 46.7.

The total average of all industries reported was an employment index of 65.3 for December, and a pay roll index of 50.9, based on 1926 as 100. If these figures can be taken as representative of the conditions in manufacturing industries, half of the purchasing power of labor employed in industry in 1926 is gone. Could war be any worse?

The Labor World has had some hard things to say about bankers, but there are bankers and bankers. Not all of them stand for grabbing every cent in sight, regardless of the public welfare. There are some enlightened bankers, with ideas foreign to the general run of the tribe. For example, there is R. M. Farrar, described as a leading banker of Houston, Tex., who is quoted as advocating, among other things, a minimum wage of $5 per day for every adult worker, limiting of profits of all corporations to 8 per cent, Uncle Sam to be the only banker, in connection with the postoffice department and heavy taxing of American wealth used in building factories in foreign countries.

As the Houston Labor Messenger remarks in commenting on points made by Mr. Farrar, they are the expression of a courageous mind, who is not afraid to advance ideas for the welfare of the country.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What is the total unemployment in the world at the present time?

A.—The total is not known. The International Labor office at Geneva, Switzerland, estimates there will be 70 millions involved either directly or indirectly in unemployment this winter.

Q.—Will there be an important labor meeting held in Washington in February?

A.—Two important meetings will be held. The Executive Council, American Federation of Labor, meets Feb. 2. On Feb. 9 the council will meet with heads of national and international unions to consider labor's legislative program.

MEXICAN JOBLESS ASK RELIEF

Vera Cruz, Mexico.—About 4,000 jobless workers presented a memorial to the municipal council demanding relief in the form of food, rent moratorium, and fifty cents a day in cash.

Let the Telephone
Keep Your Circle Together

When friends have moved to other cities, children are away at school or you are many miles from the folks back home . . . remember you can bring them to you easily and quickly by telephone.

Next best to seeing friends and relatives is talking with them. Even when they are miles away you can telephone them at small cost.

Out-of-town telephoning costs less than most people imagine. For example, the station-to-station day rate to a point 125 miles away is about 75 cents. If you call during the night period, the rate is much lower.

"King Morgan!"

Great New York Bankers Wax Ever More Powerful as "Institutions in Distress"—Utilities, Motion Picture, Oil and Many Others Fall Into Their Laps.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

New York City, Jan. 28.—"King Morgan" will be crowned on the wreckage of this depression—with, of course, some lesser kings—but up on top there will be—

King Morgan!

Today the principalities are being piled up in the House of Morgan—the duchies and the baronial estates and even some sizeable erstwhile independent kingdoms.

"Institutions in distress," they are called.

They can't make the grade.

A man who needs a blood transfusion if he is to live can't make faces at the giver of the blood.

Morgan Gathers 'Em In.

Institutions must have credit or money. So, the industries go on, in a way, but titles change hands.

Today Morgan is gathering in utilities, motion pictures, oil—many things.

It is said that Sam Insull—the great Sam Insull of the middle west—sits on the empty throne of his proud principality. Morgan is the boss.

Morgan is "reorganizing" old owners and bosses out of power.

But it isn't only Morgan.

Small Oil Firms "Taken."

Oil could be raked into a goodly scandal today. From many sources the information comes. Gulf Oil, the big Mellon outfit, candidly sets forth in its official statement that it is conserving its funds to take over "distressed independents." They are in distress and they are being taken.

This depression has put shoals of them "on the spot" and they find it a hot seat.

Gulf has taken over many of them.

Doherty, with his big Cities Service, has taken over at least two.

Standard of New York and California find the field fair for similar operations.

Giant Merger Forecast.

Report even goes so far as to forecast an early merger of Dutch Shell interests in the United States with Standard and their joint operation under Canadian law as Imperial Oil.

A giant oil monopoly is in the making—because the independents can't hang on against low prices and general depression.

Old General Depression hits them in the face and they tumble backward into the waiting arms of Mr. Monopoly.

King Morgan—King Mellon—perhaps Prince Doherty and likewise a reigning house behind the portals of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

MORE ABOUT

SEN. M'KELLAR

Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night, both in the terms of a resolution adopted commending the senator for his championship of the rights of his constituency against the encroachments of mass financial and political power, and in the tenor of remarks which accompanied the introduction and passage of the resolution.

It was poined out that Senator McKellar had formerly opposed legislation providing for government operation of the Shoals, for the reason that he felt the interests of the people of Tennessee were not protected, but when this objection was eliminated and the Norris bill, providing that the whole people share in the benefits of the project rather than "power" interests, he had thrown his support to the proposal, and for years has been a consistent advocate of this plan. It was also recalled that much of the present opposition to the senator is not new, but extends over a period of many years during which Mr. McKellar has championed the rights of the people against selfish and reactionary interests.

Much of the same kind of opposition was thrown into the fight against McKellar, it was recalled, in the campaign of several years ago, when one Capt. Fitzhugh was chosen by the reactionaries to oust the senior senator. The present alignment against him, it was brought out, does not appear to be much different. Later one Finis Garrett, who had a long record in the United States congress, with few if any progressive votes to his credit, was "touted up" to beat McKellar, and led like a lamb to the slaughter. And the alignment here, it was charged, was about the same.

The above and other points, together with some comment on the activities of the "power trust," led up to the passage of the resolution of approval of Senator McKellar's stand in the present controversy, and leaves no room for doubt that the lawmaker's constituency is at least not unanimous in condemning his attitude.

The resolution follows:

Whereas, a group of prominent local citizens, including a member of the president's power commission, named by Gov. Horton, recently paid a visit to Washington under auspices of the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce in the interest of the development of the Tennessee river by private capital have seen fit to bitterly attack the attitude of the Hon. K. D. McKellar, who has for years consistently supported the so-called Norris bill for government operation of Muscle Shoals; and,

Whereas, we believe that Senator McKellar, in supporting the Norris bill as opposed to various schemes for private exploitation of this vast natural resource, is acting in the interest of the common people and against continued centralization of power into a few hands; and,

Whereas, labor is as vitally interested in the early development of Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee river as, possibly, are any other individuals or groups of citizens; therefore, be it

Resolved, by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, representing thousands of working people in the Chattanooga district, That we deplore the condemnation of Senator McKellar, as given publicity by the Chamber of Commerce delegation, as unwarranted and unfair to a lawmaker who has the intestinal stamina to stand by his convictions in the interest of his constituents, and we commend Senator McKellar for his unyielding attitude in the face of powerful pressure; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished each member of the Tennessee delegation in the senate and congress; and copies also be mailed to labor bodies throughout the state, with the request that they adopt a similar stand.

various other arms of government crippled, thus creating more unemployment and misery. In our city schools alone there are more than 900 teachers, if my information is correct, who might be added to the out-of-works.

"This crisis will not be settled by petty bickerings and selfish motives. Last night I heard a nationally-famous comedian say over the radio that one trouble with us is that there are too many politicians with their ears to the ground rather than with their shoulders to the wheel. If he will agree to include in the list bankers, industrialists, economists and a few others, I will agree with him 100 per cent.

"I repeat, the situation is serious—alarming. Relief must come at once, and from those in position to grant it. Hardly a day passes but that we hear the remark that it would be better for those who have plenty to give up a small share in this emergency than to have their all taken from them eventually.

"We of organized labor have constituted a bulwark against attacks on our institutions, and against lawlessness of all kinds. However, the time appears to be fast approaching when it will be impossible for the American labor movement, or any other force in our great country, to withstand the demands of a hungry and cold citizenship, who are asking only the privilege of earning their share of the bountiful supplies of necessities with which our nation has been blessed by Providence.

"We believe that our past activities entitle us to be classed as conservative, patriotic and intelligent citizens. In the name of the American Federation of Labor, in the name of hundreds of my fellow-citizens of Chattanooga, I call upon industrial, civic, fraternal, religious and other responsible bodies to come together in a spirit of co-operation and patriotism, to intelligently solve our great problems and prevent the chaos which is sure to come when the conservative citizen through necessity joins the ranks of the radicals."

In discussing the troubles of thousands of workers, Mr. Aymon recalled that many are now losing homes into which they had placed srtuggles and sacrifices of almost a lifetime. Many of these, he declared, lack little of being fully paid for, and he expressed the conviction that provision should be made in such emergencies either for protection of the equity or for some return to the unfortunate who finds himself in this unenviable position.

The Chattanoogan was given closest attention by a large number of delegates present, and frequent applause attested that his remarks were approved.

Mr. Aymon left Wednesday for Anniston, Ala., and plans to return home within a few days to complete some work already begun here.

He Wouldn't "Walk a Mile" for a "Scab" Cigarette.

(A Commuincation to "Labor.")

Hope of the Tobacco Workers' International union of securing recognition from the Reynolds Tobacco company, makers of Camel cigarettes and Prince Albert tobacco, has been blasted by a curt statement by the company that "it is not interested in any contractural relations with organized labor."

Under the circumstances, should organized labor "walk a mile" to buy the products of a nonunion company paying 10 cents an hour to its employes, when it is possible to get cigarettes and tobacco made in a union shop, paying the union scale, at no increase in price?

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

Miners Advocate Thirty-Hour Week For Coal Industry

Indianapolis Convention Also Urges Federal Regulation as Cure for Economic Evils of Bituminous Trade.

Indianapolis, Ind.—In a report submitted by international officers to the thirty-second biennial convention of the United Mine Workers of America, in session here, the five-day week with six hours of work per day, is proposed as a remedy for the bad conditions existing in the bituminous coal industry. The report also proposed federal regulation of bituminous coal mining. The report was approved by the convention.

Bituminous coal mining is a "horrible example" of the results of wage cutting, cutthroat competition, destruction of employes' purchasing power and other evils of the soft coal industry, the report declares.

The report was signed by President John L. Lewis, Vice-President Philip Murray and Secretary-Treasurer Thomas Kennedy.

Coal Most Depressed.

"Even taking into consideration the ruthless wage cuts that have taken place in American industry in the last two years," the report said, "bituminous coal, from the standpoint of comparison of low-wage rate, profitless operation, as well as diminished consumption and reduced working time, stands out as the most depressed of all American industries.

Discussing federal regulation of bituminous coal mining, the report indorsed the bill introduced by Senator James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania, providing for a federal coal commission.

The report declared that "during the past ten years the per man day production of bituminous coal miners has increased 20 per cent. This increased production has resulted in decreased earnings for coal miners and created a competitive situation that has eliminated all profits for the coal companies and in addition has thrown more than 200,000 coal miners out of employment.

"Here we have efficiency," declared the report, "the gains of which to the coal industry are represented by a big minus."

Green Assails Low Wages.

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, addressed the convention in support of acceptance of the United Mine Workers as a stabilizing force of economic well being.

He advocated a wage scale that would raise the standard of living and provide a profit for coal operators.

"No group representing labor can meet without considering the present economic conditions now aggravated by the widespread unemployment," he said. "During this period of stress no group has suffered as much as the United Mine Workers.

"If wage reductions are a remedy for unemployment, then the mining industry ought to be the most prosperous in the world," Mr. Green added. "It is an object lesson of an unsound economic policy which brings a lower standard of living."

BROWN WANTS JOB AS WAR CORRESPONDENT

Editor, The Labor World:

Dear Sir: In view of the highly unsettled condition of affairs in the Far East, and the still more unsettled conditions in our own fair land, I feel constrained to choose the least of two evils. Therefore I am hereby making my application to you, the managing director, or something, of your, er . . . grand and glorious sheet, The Labor World, for a position (not a job) as war correspondent for the Labor World in China. I believe you have a general idea of my ability to write plain English, as I have been more or less of a correspondent for your paper for more years than I care to admit. The salary doesn't matter, as I am, at present, entirely without a salary, and if I get enough expenses to be able to eat that will be entirely satisfactory.

I will be ready to leave for the scene of action just as soon as I can secure a tin hat and a bullet-proof coat, vest and pants, and a clean shirt and collar button, as I don't want to get into the same fix I hear Will Rogers is in, and need a clean shirt. It is true that I don't know how to spell Shanghai, but I can spell China and Japan, and Hong Kong. Maybe a few other names over there, and, being pretty deaf now, I would not be discommoded by such things as "deafening bombardments" or explosions.

Hoping this application will meet with your favorable consideration, and that I may be able to escape the, er (Hades) that this country's Big Business seems bent upon bringing to it, I am, hopefully yours,

PRESIDENT'S EXECUTIVE ORDER PUTS TEETH IN FAIR-WAGE LAW; RAPS GREEDY CONTRACTORS

The Executive Order issued by President Hoover stipulating that contracts for the construction of federal public buildings shall include a provision for the payment of the prevailing wage rate will effectively prevent low-wage employers from violating the law on this subject enacted by congress last year.

Many contractors violated the law directly. They also pretended to obey the law after being ordered to do so by Secretary of Labor Doak, and then violated it indirectly by making employes sign statements that they were paid the prevailing rate when in fact the contractors paid them less.

The text of President Hoover's executive order follows:

"In order to effect the purposes of the act entitled 'An Act Relating to the Rate of Wages for Laborers and Mechanics Employed on Public Buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by Contractors and Subcontractors, and for Other Purposes,' approved March 3, 1931, it is hereby ordered that in all contracts within the terms of said act there shall be added to the stipulation required by said act the folloping stipulations:

"It is expressly understood and agreed that the aforesaid wages shall be paid unconditionally in full not less often than once a week and in lawful money of the United States, to the full amount accrued to each individual at time of payment and without subsequent deduction or rebate on any account.

"It is expressly understood and agreed that for the purpose of said act every person, while performing work of a laborer or mechanic on the public work covered by this contract, is to be regarded as employed as a laborer or mechanic by the contractor or subtractor, regardless of any contractural relationship alleged to exist between the contractor or any subcontractor and such laborer or mechanic.

"It is understood and agreed that the pay rolls of the contractor and all subcontractors and agreements made by the contractor or subcontractor or any other party relating to the employment of laborers or mechanics, or the performance of the work of laborers and mechanics on said buildings, and to the wages or compensation to be paid therefor, are to be open to inspection by the contracting officer at such times as the latter may elect, provided that such inspection shall not interfere with the proper and orderly prosecution of the work, and that a clearly legible statement of the rates payable as aforesaid under this contract shall be posted by the contractor in a prominent and easily accessible place at the site of the work so that such statement may be seen at any time by persons engaged on the work.

"It is further expressly understood and agreed that if it should be found by the contracting officer that any laborer or mechanic employed by the contractor or any subcontractor on the public work covered by this contract has been, or is being, paid a rate of wages less than the prevailing rate of wages, as aforesaid, the government may, by written notice to the contractor, terminate his right to proceed with the work, or such part of the work as to which there has been a failure to pay said prevailing wages. In such event, it is understood and agreed that the government may take over the work and prosecute the same to completion by contract or otherwise, and that the contractor and his sureties shall be liable to the government for any excess cost occasioned the government thereby.

"This order shall apply to all such contracts for which bids are hereafter invited."

ATTEMPT TO KILL EXECUTIVES OF BUTCHER WORKMEN FOILED

President Gorman and Secretary Lane Sense Death Plot Which They Charge Was Engineered by Traitor Official of Long Beach Union at Behest of "Open Shop" Interests.

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Feb. 3.—Dennis Lane, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, upon his return to his office in Chicago from a trip to the Pacific coast, told International Labor News Service a sensational story of the attempted assassination of himself and President Patrick Gorman, of Louisville, Ky., at Los Angeles, while they were in the latter city adjusting matters pertaining to the international union.

Tactics familiar to many international union organizers were used in this particular frame-up. President Gorman was called to the phone at the Alexander hotel in Los Angeles and informed that Secretary Lane had bought a ticket to Chicago, and the voice asked if he (Gorman) did not believe it would be good policy also to buy a ticket.

President Gorman informed Secretary Lane of receipt of the anonymous message, and Lane made a trip to the hotel lobby. In the lobby were a gang of hired killers seated in strategic positions. Gorman and Lane, accompanied by William Fridge, traitor secretary of the Long Beach (Cal.) local union, left the hotel and went to a restaurant. The mobsters trailed and peered in at the windows as the three men sat eating. Drawn up at the curb was a high-powered car and in it sat two of the would-be killers.

Auto Trip Urged.

Fridge tried to induce Gorman and Lane to make an automobile trip from Los Angeles to Long Beach, said Lane. Fridge had been urging this all day. It was Fridge's apparent purpose to put the two international union officers "on the spot" at some point along the lonely highway that night. The setup was so crude and raw, however, that the plot was sensed and the danger avoided.

Secretary-Treasurer Lane charges William Fridge, alias Williams, alias Davis, ousted secretary of the Long Beach (Cal.) local of the union, later revealed as a professional spy and strikebreaker, with being the engineer of the unsuccessful death plot at the instigation of the "open shop" interests of Los Angeles.

Fridge, according to the story told by Lane, appeared at Long Beach and told such a convincing story of his past activities in the labor movement that he was made secretary of the newly organized local union there. Everything went along apparently all right for seven months, the per capita tax being remitted promptly to the international union headquarters at Chicago. Then Fridge made a demand for the remission of several months' dues for the entire local membership and $500 for himself for back salary which he claimed was due.

Claimed to Know Lane.

"Fridge sold himself to our fellows at Long Beach largely on his claim of knowing me personally," said Lane. "He said that he had been in strikes with me, but when the letters came from the coast telling me of this, I could not recall the man, but thought he might be someone I had forgotten with the passing of the years.

"I knew he was a faker the moment I laid eyes on him, and he knew that I was onto him without me saying a word. I had never seen the man before in my life and he had a hang dog appearance that gave him away.

"Fridge was forced to resign as both a member and officer of Local 531, Long Beach, Cal., in December, 1931, in the presence of President Gorman. During this meeting he was confronted with a check that he induced a member to cash and which was reported to be a forgery."

ALBERT HILL 40, BRUSH SMITH 89

Week's Exchanges Bring Two Important Items, and Settle Long Controversy.

Exchanges coming to The Labor World office this week contained two items of considerable interest locally, and incidentally, if taken for their face value, go a long way toward settling controversies of years' standing among trades unionists of the state.

When the editor of The Labor World first became a member of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, some twenty years ago, there were two patriarchs in that body whose ages were a matter of wide and varied interest. Neither of these venerable wheelhorses would confess to more than 20, so the question has remained a much-mooted one down through the years. One of the old-timers was Senator Albert E. Hill, of Nashville, who founded the federation and has nurtured it for lo these many years even as a mother protects her young, while the other was T. J. "Brush" Smith, United Mine Workers' official, of Graysville, whose record in the state body has been little if any less lengthy and active than that of the senator.

And now the answer: in last week's issue of the Nashville Labor Advocate, front-page two-column box, an editorial announces, "We're Forty"—referring, however, to the Advocate, and its fortieth anniversary. Of course, this is not definite, but veterans in the Nashville movement interviewed by The Labor World's correspondent in the capital city this week declared the senator was around 35 when the Advocate was founded. Ho, hum!

And about Brush:

The United Mine Workers are holding a national convention at Indianapolis, and marked a copy of the Indianapolis News received here this week contains this paragraph:

"T. J. Smith, age 89, Graysville, Tenn., was one who defended the Lewis administration."

The Labor World congratulates Senator Hill on the attainment of the Advocate's fortieth milestone, and extends sincere wishes for continued success in its work for the labor movement and the city of Nashville. Felicitations are also extended to "Brush," but at the same time we hereby serve notice that when Mr. Smith returns to these parts the editor of this paper will begin an extended vacation to last until sober second thought has convinced the old-timer that nothing can be gained by personal violence against a newspaper man.

Pay of Non-Union Kentucky Miners Cut 10 Per Cent

Operators Paying Scandalously Low Wages — Illinois Union Urges Co-operation to Aid Jobless Mine Workers.

Chicago, Feb. 3.—A 10 per cent cut in wages has been posted at the leading coal mines in the nonunion field of western Kentucky, it has been announced through a Chicago financial publication. The reduction was effective Jan. 15. There was no resistance upon the part of the unorganized coal miners, it is said.

The dispatch says there is no way of determining the average wage paid in the western Kentucky field, every mine having a different scale. It is reported that many of the companies are paying approximately $2.05 a day for inside labor and $1.78 a day for outside labor.

For many years there has been bitter complaint in Illinois over the unfair competition that the union coal miners of this state must contend with as a result of the scandalously low wages paid in the western Kentucky field.

Job Co-operation Asked.

Division of all available work, appointment of relief committees in hard-hit mining communities to solicit aid for needy Illinois coal miners and establishment of the exchange of products plan is pleaded for in a statement issued from headquarters of District 12, U. M. W. of A., Springfield, Ill.

"We should try every possible way to find a job for those who have none," the statement says. "Those who have jobs should assist the unemployed as much as possible. Relief committees should be organized to solicit funds and supplies to relieve the needy and suffering of those out of work."

At the same time John H. Walker, president of District 12, reiterated a statement that certain Illinois coal operators were attempting to break down the district wage scale by "promising steady work to idle miners if they would accept a lowered wage scale."

How Operators Fooled Men.

"Before 1897, coal operators were going to each place where men were unemployed and telling them that if they would take a wage reduction they would give them steady work," President Walker recalled. "Then they would go to other men who had lost their jobs through this manipulation and tell them that if they would take a bigger reduction they would be given their jobs back.

"Because there was no union, the operators were able to play one group against the other until men in Illinois were working fifteen to sixteen hours a day for wages barely enough to allow them food to keep body and soul together.

"That terrible condition brought on the realization of the need for unionization, and from those terrible conditions the union was born.

"We should not permit ourselves to be pitted against each other like that, but should do our best to help ourselves and our brothers in this crisis."

CEDAR RAPIDS LABOR BANS PRISON-MADE FURNITURE

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Feb. 3.—A vigorous campaign to discourage the sale of prison-made furniture is under way through the Cedar Rapids Federation of Labor, on the ground that goods manufactured by convict labor are unfair to wage-earners who are law-abiding citizens and taxpayers.

A committee, which has been interviewing local furniture dealers at the request of the federation, reported that most of the larger furniture stores claim they do not knowingly buy goods made in penal institutions.

As in the case of other articles made by convict labor, prison-made furniture does not carry any marks by which it may be identified. The state penitentiary at Ft. Madison has a large furniture department and some of this product, it is reported, is sold in Cedar Rapids and other cities throughout the state.

$750,000,000 FEDERAL FUND FOR CLOSED BANKS

Washington.—In 1931 there were 2,290 banks closed in the United States with funds amounting to $1,758,000,000, Ogden L. Mills, undersecretary of the treasury, sold the senate banking and currency subcommittee which was considering the bill endorsed by the president to provide for the advancement of federal funds to the receivers of insolvent banks.

Mr. Mills said the machinery of both federal and state laws regarding insolvent banks are entirely inadequate to secure prompt relief for the depositors in the form of payments of a portion of their equities in the assets of the closed banks.

Under the proposed measure the federal funds immediately available for relief of the insolvent banks would amount to $150,000,000; of this sum $100,000,000 will be subscribed by the U. S. treasury and $50,000,000 by the federal reserve banks. The corporation to handle the federal fund can borrow up to four times its capital stock, making its total resources $750,000,000. Loans at interest rates fixed by the corporation will be made on free securities of insolvent banks with the idea of holding the paper until the security market becomes more favorable. In the meantime, payments would be made to the depositors of at least a portion of their equities.

RAIL WORKERS BOW TO DEMAND OF OPERATORS

Agree to Reduction as An Emergency Measure.

WAGE CUT THEORY IS NOT APPROVED

Unprecedented Conditions Made Concessions Temporarily Necessary.

Chicago.—It was only after blocking more drastic reductions sought by the railroads that the twenty standard railroad labor organizations agreed to accept a 10 per cent cut, for a period of one year. In return, the railroads agreed to withdraw their demand for a 15 per cent pay slash and promised to try "to maintain and increase railroad employment."

Acceptance by the unions of the 10 per cent wage reduction was given through David B. Robertson, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' association, and was announced by Daniel Willard, head of the railroad presidents' committee of nine. The agreement terminated joint conferences of the railroad presidents and labor executives which began Jan. 15.

Willard Hails Action.

In announcing the employes' decision, Willard declared that their action was "the greatest single step toward the reconstruction of American business and industry which has been taken since the depression."

The railroad unions do not believe the wage reduction will restore prosperity, but as they said in their statement accepting the reduction, they are taking it in the hope that it may stimulate business and advance the general welfare.

Workers State Stand.

The unions' statement follows:

"After a painstaking review of the proposals and arguments which have been ably and forcibly presented in behalf of the railroads, we feel compelled to reiterate our previous opinion that as a matter of pure right and justice the railway employes could not be called upon to agree to a 10 per cent reduction of their meager earnings.

"Nor do we wish to give any assent to the theory that wage reductions are to be regarded ordinarily as the appropriate means to promote prosperity. We cannot believe that the public welfare is advanced by reducing the purchasing power of labor.

"But with a profound sense of responsibility to the workers whom we represent and to our country, we have weighed the urgent needs of the railroad industry and the demands of the public welfare in this present unparalleled situation against the individual sacrifices requested of the railroad employes.

Hope Action May Help.

"In the hope that our action may improve the health of our industry, may improve the cooperative relations of management and employes, may stimulate a revival of business, and may advance the general welfare, we have decided to accept the proposal of the railroads to the employes whom we represent, that—

"Ten per cent shall be deducted from each pay check for a period of one year, beginning February, 1932.

"Basic rates shall remain as at present.

"This arrangement shall terminate automatically January 31, 1933."

Massey, Thomas, Try Luck on New Jobs

Louis Massey, who has been with Booth Barber Shop, 19 West Eighth street, for many moons, decided last week to "try his luck" with the Big Four shop, 14 East Eighth street, and A. H. "Tommy" Thomas, moved over to Booth's to take Louis' place. Mr. Thomas had long presided over a chair at the Sanitary shop, East Seventh street.

Both gentlemen are well known locally and many friends will wish them every success in their new positions.

"Bob" Malone Out After Bad Attack

R. L. Malone, familiarly known to scores of local trades unionists as "Uncle Bob," dean of Local 74, Carpenters, is walking around after a severe illness which kept him confined to his bed for several weeks. Mr. Malone expects to be able to resume work, if any, within a short time.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED

Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven.
MAT. 6:10.

Thus far we have seen how Jesus spoke briefly of God and spoke chiefly to the individual in His teaching, and that His one objective was to establish among men a brotherhood or spiritual Kingdom wherein God was to be acclaimed the Ruler by common consent. In the only prayer in which Jesus told His disciples what they ought to pray for He included a petition in behalf of this Kingdom.

WM. L. MOSS

To sum up what we have found to be true concerning Jesus' teaching let us put them down in the order in which we have learned them.

1. Jesus put God first, not as a material entity to be worshiped as we would worship a golden calf, or an etheral spirit in name only, but as our Creator, our Father, who knows every one of His children and has given us our life and bodies for a definite purpose.

2. Next to God the Father Jesus put men, not as just so many millions of creatures with only their relation to the Father defined and made clear but with a definite and distinct relationship they are obligated to live toward each other.

3. Jesus conceived life as a connecting link between both God and man and as a meeting ground between men and men as individuals and as the children of the Heavenly Father. This connecting link He called the Kingdom of God.

First God the Father, then men as His children, and then the Kingdom of God, the brotherhood of love and association wherein the Father and His children meet and the children meet each other. I believe most any fair-minded student of Christ's teaching will agree with me in what I have stated above.

Since in our progressive study and analysis of Jesus' teaching we have come down, so to speak, from God the Father, through men His children to the Kingdom, and this Kingdom is the meeting place of both the Father and His children and the children with each other, we have the task before us now of inquiring into the subject of the Master's idea of the Kingdom. Then next week we will begin our study of the Kingdom by defining what are the three points in the social ideas of Jesus and then we will learn something about them.

Potatoes provide the base for a cheap and durable form of paint suitable for use particularly on farms for gates, fences or machinery exposed to the weather. One pound of potatoes are peeled and well baked. They are then mashed in three pounds of boiling water and strained through a sieve. To the resulting mixture added two pounds of powdered mixed with four gallons of water

RUN-DOWN and WEAK

"I began taking Cardui when in a weakened, run-down condition," writes Mrs. F. S. Perrit, of Wesson, Miss. "I took one bottle, and I seemed to improve so much that I sent for six bottles. After I had taken the six bottles, I seemed entirely well.

"Before I took Cardui, I was nervous, restless, blue and out of heart. I felt depressed all the time. After I took Cardui, all this disappeared.

"I gave my daughter Cardui and it helped to relieve irregular . . ."

Automobile Living Standards for Labor

Dr. Lewis Haney, director of the New York University of Business Research, specializes on articles for magazines and newspapers consecrated to the interests of those who own and manage industry for maximum profits for the owners and scant regard for labor. Lately he has discussed the living standards of the workers.

In a recent article he announces his discovery that the "wages of some labor groups" are too high. He says he does not argue that "living standards should be sharply lowered," but, he adds, "it hardly seems reasonable that every American farmer and laborer must own and operate an automobile."

Isn't that a brilliant suggestion?

In these days of high-speed production, an automobile is just as necessary a part of the equipment of the farmer in his business of producing and marketing farm products as any other piece of farm machinery. An automobile is also necessary so that he and his family may secure some of the education and pleasure that come from short and long auto trips. Every farmer should have an automobile, and the prices he receives for his products should by all means be high enough so that neither its purchase price nor upkeep will financially embarrass him.

And now the workers in industry. Under machine production the American workers produce a greater quantity of commodity wealth for the owners of industry to appropriate than do the workers in any other country in the world.

From 1919 to 1929 the workers in our manufacturing industries increased their output 54 per cent, but the employers raised the workers' wages only 26 per cent.

From 1919 to 1929 by far the larger portion of the prodigious increases in the workers' output was taken by those who own and operate industry.

A Ford or a Chevrolet costs between $500 and $600. And yet an economist interpreter of the labor policy of our industrial bourbons implies that wages should be deflated so that the workers will not be able to buy and maintain modest-price automobiles.

Dr. Haney seems to be tinctured with the slave owners' conception of what labor should be paid for producing wealth. The slave owner fed, clothed and housed the slave worker and garnered as his exclusive net profit the difference between the cost of the slave's living and the price received for the wealth the slave produced. In short, the slave owner's profits were regulated by the living standards of his slave workers.

So with Dr. Haney. Automobiles, he reasons, are not absolutely necessary to keep the modern worker in good working condition, therefore adjust his wages downward so that he will not be able to buy an automobile.

Labor disagrees with Dr. Haney.

Labor believes that the wages of every worker in the United States should at least reach a figure that will enable him to buy and keep up, without sacrificing any comfort, an automobile for the pleasure of himself and his family, or for his own pleasure if he has no family.

Judicial Hair-Splitting

The supreme court of the United States continues to indulge in judicial hairsplitting in federal workmen's compensation cases to the detriment of deserving injured workers.

The latest manifestation of this unwise policy is the court's decision in the case of Clarence Bezue against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad company.

The railroad company is engaged in interstate commerce. At Maybrook, N. Y., the company maintains a roundhouse and other plants for servicing and repairing locomotives used in interstate transportation.

Clarence Bezue was employed as a general laborer in these plants. The foreman ordered him with others to remove the main driving wheels of a locomotive from the lathe in the hoist shop, put them upon a track and push them to the pit in the roundhouse where they could be placed under a locomotive being repaired. During this work Bezue was injured by the negligence of the foreman in removing a block from under the wheels.

Bezue sued the railroad company for damages in the courts of the state of New York under the federal employers' liability act. Officials of the company contested the suit on the claim that the locomotive while it was being repaired was not an instrument of interstate commerce, and that consequently workers employed on the repairs did not come under the federal law.

The supreme court of the state of New York awarded damages to Bezue. The court held that the Maybrook terminal facilities of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad company in which Bezue worked constitute a part of the railroad's system necessary to the conduct of interstate commerce, and declared that, although Bezue was occasionally put on work not a part of interstate commerce, nevertheless the nature and purpose of the plant warranted characterization of all his work, of whatever nature, as in interstate commerce.

The officials of the railroad company carried the case to the appellate division and the court of appeals of New York, which affirmed the decision of the state supreme court. The railroad company thereupon took the case to the United States supreme court, which denied the legality of Bezue's claim.

The supreme court admitted that terminal facilities, repair shops, and their employes, are necessary to the conduct of interstate commerce, but declared that "the mere fact of employment does not bring such employes within the federal employers' liability act." The court sustained its position with the declaration that Bezue's claim must be determined solely by "whether the locomotive in question was, at the time of the accident, in use in interstate transportation or had been taken out of it."

Three courts in New York state decided that the locomotive on which Bezue was working at the time of his accident was in interstate transportation while in the repair shop and that Bezue's work was incidental to interstate transportation. The United States supreme court decided, however, that the locomotive was not engaged in interstate commerce while in the repair shop, that Bezue's work when injured was consequently not interstate commerce work, and that therefore his claim for damages against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad company under the federal employers' liability act was invalid.

It is this sort of judicial hairsplitting that injured workers have to contend with in the federal courts.

The United States supreme court should throw some of its out-of-date precedents in labor cases on the scrap heap and develop a system of principles more in accord with social justice.

Dangers of "Economic Regimentation"

The editor of the Iron Age deplores certain tendencies by our federal and state governments to control some of the antisocial activities of those who own and govern American industrial concerns and persuade them to give more attention to the public interest as a motive in production and distribution.

"Economic regimentation," the editor says, "like social caste and political autocracy, is contrary to American tradition."

The editor refers, of course, to "economic regimentation" of the employers by the state.

Those who own and control industry should be the last ones to deplore any tendency toward their regimentation.

They have already regimented our millions of workers.

The tyranny they impose on workers, except where restrained by strong trade unions, is absolute.

They fix the workers' wages and lower them by executive orders.

They determine the workers' standards of living and have deliberately reduced those standards by wage cuts and short time.

They ruthlessly and recklessly install labor-displacing machinery which throws millions into the army of the unemployed, and then set up charity organizations to collect from the public, including the employed workers, relief funds, the maximum ambition of which is to keep the jobless and their families from starving.

They issue their decrees, and the workers can obey them or get out.

In short, the owners and managers of our industrial plants have completely regimented the workers and established an industrial dictatorship probably more effective than that imposed by the autocratic tyrants who despotically rule bolshevist Russia and fascist Italy.

But when the people's representatives in legislative bodies suggest certain regulation of the business activities of this gentry, up jump their editorial spokesmen with brainstorm declarations about "American tradition" and dangers of "regimentation" by the state.

If all the bills suggested by economists and legislators for state control of these industrial overlords were written into law, the regimentation of employers would not be a hundredth part as much as the regimentation which they, themselves, have already imposed on the workers by their dictatorial ownership and control of opportunities to work and hence the right to live.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The nation-wide campaign of the American Legion and co-operating organizations, including the American Federation of Labor, to find work for 3,000,000 unemployed wage-earners is one of the most important moves yet made to hasten economic recovery. Results have already been obtained by the campaign, which is being pushed with determination and the will to win.

Strategy of the campaign is being centered on large corporations, many of which, it is contended, can well afford to increase the number of their employes 10 per cent out of surplus. Others, with diminished surplus, can make a 10 per cent increase in the number of men employed by a spread of work, it is held. Undoubtedly many big corporations can take on workers if they will. The Legion and the other organizations in the campaign are out to make them see that they must.

Success of the campaign should be a big step in the restoration of public confidence and buying power. Men put to work will have money for the purchase of goods, payment of bills and other expenditures which will again set in motion the wheels of industry.

* * *

It may be heresy to mention it, but: One incidental benefit to the workers of the world who usually have no particular interest in wars, may arise from the calm statement of the German people that they are unable to pay the expenses of the war in which they were licked.

Somebody is always sure to get licked in any war.

And it seems to be the case that even the victor plays a losing game in modern war.

Figures differ as to the amount of the "loot" in the world war: The Germans claim that the value of the property turned over after Versailles was about double the value allowed by the reparations commission.

Of course, Japan is making a regular "cleaning" in Manchuria; but Japan says that is not a "war."

But it is not proven even yet that Japan will come out ahead in that game.

Meanwhile, from now on, even the best "prepared" nation has nothing better than an even chance of winning a real war.

And in that case—what about the war bonds?

Germany has even evaded payment of her domestic bonds.

Suppose there were a real question as to whether America could pay her war bonds, in case of defeat; would the bankers be ready to float them?

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

IN his "History and Problems of Organized Labor," Frank T. Carlton, Ph. D., says: "Several of the organizations among the wage-earners founded between 1873 and 1881 were secret in character, and were not strictly trade unions." In illustration of this peculiar phenomenon that cropped out of the labor union movement in the last quarter of the nineteenth century here in the United States we last week concluded a brief summary of the rise and decline of the Knights of St. Crispin. No study of the secret society movement in labor unions would be complete without mention of still another such ill-fated organization, the Noble Order of the Knights of Labor.

On Thanksgiving day, 1869, Uriah S. Stevens, a Philadelphia garment cutter of marked intelligence, met with six of his fellow-craftsmen and across the table at which they had been discussing the possibilities of a new secret society among workingmen clasped hands and vowed lifelong fidelity to the principles as set forth in the rough draft of the new constitution of the infant organization they had within that hour brought into being. The organization they created was the Noble Order of the Knights of Labor.

Stevens was a man of remarkable force of character (according to both Orth and Perlman), a skilled mechanic, had been for years a member in high standing in the Masonic order, and possessed an insatiable love for good books. He was a gifted public speaker, honest and sober, an organizer of great ability and a diligent student of social conditions. Perhaps no other organization, labor or non-labor, ever had a better equipped, more intelligent prime mover than the Knights of Labor had in Uriah S. Stevens, in whose brain the order had its inception.

With his six associates, Stevens had seen the dissolution of the local garment cutters' union. In that day the federation idea had not been fully developed and the limitation of a union membership to workmen of only one craft seemed to be impracticable to many, although it was upon this very same idea that the American Federation of Labor, an all-embracing organization made up of many smaller one-craft unions, a short time later made its strongest appeal and proved that "federation" was the solution of all the internal troubles then afflicting labor unions. As impracticable as it sounds to us today, Stevens and his associates resolved the new society should embrace "all branches of honest toil," a kind of "one big union." From Solon, wisest of lawgivers, they chose their constitutional motto: "That is the most perfect government in which an injury to one is the concern of all." The great English philosophical statesman, Burke, supplied them with the keynote to the preamble to their constitution: "When bad men combine, the good must associate, else they will fall, one by one, an unpitied sacrifice in a contemptible struggle." (Continued Next Week.)

Campaign Pushed At Conferences In Central Cities

Labor Executives Invited to Attend Regional Meetings Called to Forward Great National Job-Finding Effort.

New York City, Feb. 3.—Trade union leaders in every section of the country have been invited to join in regional conferences to forward national plans to smash depression and give employment to a million workers now unemployed.

The conferences are a part of the American Legion-American Federation of Labor-Association of National Advertisers concerted campaign against unemployment and are being held in central cities of the various regional districts upon call of the American Legion commander. The labor men invited were suggested to the campaign headquarters in the Biltmore hotel here by Matthew Woll, director of the division of labor.

Good Results from Meetings.

Conferences already have been held in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Birmingham and Kansas City, with what are termed here "magnificent results." In the Chicago conference labor was represented by Victor A. Olander and John Fitzpatrick, representing the state federation of labor and the Chicago Federation of Labor. Those invited to participate in the Boston meeting were R. J. Watt, secretary-treasurer of the state federation of labor; M. J. O'Connell, representative of the Teamsters' Joint council, and J. Arthur Moriarity, president of the Boston Central Labor union.

Those invited to participate in the Philadelphia conference, at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel on Feb. 2, were: Joseph Ritchie, representative of the American Federation of Labor; Adolph Hirschberg, president of the Central Labor union, and Thomas Exrodt, representative of the Allied Printing Trades.

Other Conferences.

For the Birmingham conference, held in the Tetweiler hotel on Feb. 3, those invited were: George L. Googe, southern representative of the American Federation of Labor; C. R. Thiemonge, secretary of the Central Trades and Labor council, and C. H. Harrison, secretary of the Building Trades council.

R. T. Wood, president of the Missouri State Federation of Labor, was invited to represent labor at the Kansas City conference, held on Feb. 6 at the Muelbach hotel.

On Feb. 9 a similar conference will be held at the St. Francis hotel in San Francisco, with the following labor representatives invited: Frank C. McDonald, San Francisco, president of the State Building Trades council; R. V. Fremming, Long Beach, president of the Oil Field Workers, and David Beck, Seattle, representative of the Teamsters' and Chauffeurs' International union.

Progress Pleases Woll.

A representative of the American Federation of Labor, directly assigned by President Green, has been requested for all meetings, so that the American Federation of Labor may be able to participate in the sessions with a continuity of purpose and with a continuity of report back to headquarters.

Labor Division Director Woll expressed himself as delighted with the progress of the campaign and as thoroughly convinced of the practical results to follow.

UNEMPLOYMENT ON RAILROADS TAKES BIG DROP IN MONTH

The interstate commerce commission reports that railroad employment in the middle of November, 1931, showed a total of 1,169,229 employes at work on Class 1 steam railways, a drop of 15.78 per cent compared with the total employment at the middle of October, and 16.15 per cent below the total for Nov. 15, 1930.

DAMROSCH ASKS RELIEF FUND FOR IDLE MUSICIANS

New York.—Walter Damrosch, former director of the New York Symphony orchestra, issued an appeal for the $300,000 relief fund for jobless musicians sponsored by the Musicians' emergency aid.

The musicians, it was stated, although skilled in their art, are steadily being forced toward destitution. According to Mr. Damrosch, the unemployed musicians do not go to the welfare agencies or stand in bread lines. They remain behind the doors of their studios, silent, suffering and discouraged because the lack of buyers for their services brings them face to face with want.

BOSTON ASKS $3,000,000 JOBLESS RELIEF FUND

Boston.—The United Boston unemployment relief committee opened a drive for a $3,000,000 jobless relief fund. William H. Taylor, chairman of the committee, emphasized the importance of maintaining the city's aid for between 50,000 and 65,000 men, women and children.

"Boston's unemployment relief," Mr. Taylor said, "is being administered by the overseers of public welfare to the heads of 7,900 families. The head of the family is not made to feel he is receiving charity, because he is asked to work in one of the municipal departments in return for the aid that is given him."

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Poor Bear Great Burden Already, Congress Is Told

A. F. of L. Head and Legislative Committee Urge Increase of Surtaxes and Advocate Impost on Automobiles.

Washington, Feb. 3.—Labor stands firmly against any increase of taxes paid by the masses of the people, Congress was told by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and the federation's legislative committee composed of William C. Roberts, Edward F. McGrady and W. C. Hushing.

"We do not see how anyone can honestly recommend any specific item of taxation that will add to the burden now borne by the masses as the result of unemployment," Mr. Green and the legislative committee declared in a letter to James W. Collier, chairman of the house ways and means committee.

The letter said:

"Representatives of the American Federation of Labor have placed before you the attitude of labor on the 'sales,' estate, gift and inheritance taxes. We now desire to make further recommendations.

"We do not believe there should be any reduction in exemptions or increases in the lower brackets. The great mass of people have suffered intensely during the past two years and a half. Unemployment has been and is now acute and millions of people have been forced to support their relatives and friends to keep them from starvation. We do not see how anyone can honestly recommend any specific item of taxation that will add to the burden now borne by the masses as a result of unemployment.

"We do not believe that any increase should be made on the tax on amusements.

"But there are certain luxuries that can be taxed that will bring in large revenues. Among them is the automobile. A 5 per cent tax on all motor cars would not affect the poor. Surtaxes should be increased, as those who are able to pay such taxes are certainly able to pay more.

Tax Autos First, Is Plea.

"The automobile industry should be required to pay its just share of the national taxes. No industry, not even steel, has created as many multi-millionaires as has the automobile industry. Through mass production and low wages the automobile owners have been able to accumulate millions while their employes have suffered severely because of total or part time unemployment.

"There are other luxuries that only the well-to-do can buy and enjoy and that should be taxed, but the first on the list should be the 5 per cent tax on automobiles.

"We submit this to you in the hope that the recommendations herein made will be favorably received."

Federal-Aid Roads Must Be Built By Free Labor

Washington, Feb. 3.—The house of representatives, by a vote of 123 to 87, adopted Representative La Guardia's amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill effectively banning convict labor from the construction of roads whose cost is paid in part by the federal government.

The agricultural bill appropriated $100,000,000 to be distributed among the states for highway construction with the proviso that the states should contribute an equal amount.

The states of Alabama, Florida, New Jersey and Virginia have hitherto accepted the federal government's contribution, and then used convicts to build the highways.

La Guardia's Amendment.

Representative La Guardia proposed to stop the use of federal funds to pay the cost of keeping convicts on road work by offering the following amendment to the current appropriation of $100,000,000 for co-operation with the states in road construction:

"Provided, That none of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to any state on account of any project on which convict labor shall be directly employed."

"This is an appropriation of federal funds in aid of highways," Representative La Guardia said, "and the present increase in the appropriation is predicated on the theory that it will relieve unemployment.

Fallacy of Convicts on Road Work.

"Imagine the appropriation of funds on the theory of relieving unemployment, and then using convict labor on such road construction. The very idea would be humorous if it were not so tragic.

"It is almost inconceivable, it is unbelievable, that convict labor should be used on roads built with federal funds while honest labor is walking the streets unemployed."

Mr. La Guardia said that under present practices the amendment would affect only the states of Alabama, Florida, New Jersey and Virginia. His proposal did not concern state highways constructed entirely from state funds. "If a state desires to employ convict labor on its own roads," he explained, "paid for entirely with state funds, and it can do so under its own laws, we cannot stop it. But where federal funds are employed, then, of course, my limitation would apply."

Convicts Displace Free Labor.

"Every convict working on these roads," La Guardia concluded, "takes the place of a free laborer or of an unemployed man who obeys the law, and wants to live and support a family honestly. Every convict used displaces an unemployed worker.

"We are now concerned with unemployment. Surely we cannot take a convict who has violated the law, who is in prison, and put him in competition with a law-abiding man supporting his family and educating his children. A convict at least gets shelter, food and clothing. An unemployed worker starves if he cannot earn money by being honestly employed."

There was considerable opposition to La Guardia's amendment, but at the end of the debate the house adopted it with 123 representatives voting for it and 87 against it.

LABOR HEAD STRONGLY URGES EIGHT-HOUR DAY FOR FIREMEN

President Green, Stressing Curtailment of Working Periods as Unemployment Relief Measure, Assures New York Firemen of A. F. of L. Backing in Fight for Shorter Day.

New York, Jan. 27.—President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, vigorously championed the eight-hour day for firemen, in speaking here at the fifteenth annual reception and ball of the Uniformed Firemen's Association of Greater New York, held at Madison Square Garden. The Uniformed Firemen's association, which is affiliated with the International Association of Fire Fighters, is pressing a big campaign for the eight-hour day.

Establishment of the eight-hour day as a measure of justice and as a help in solving the problem of unemployment was strongly stressed by President Green. "The American Federation of Labor has repeatedly endorsed this economic reform, and I want to assure the members of the Uniformed Firemen's association and their friends and families that the federation will give them all the support possible in their efforts to secure the eight-hour day," he said.

In Community Interest.

"We believe," Mr. Green continued, "it would be to the interest of the community to give the firemen the eight-hour day. It would be an investment that would be valuable from every point of view. It would be far better for the people of this community to pay the small increase in taxes than it would be to raise these large sums of money for the purpose of helping the unemployed.

"Establishment of the eight-hour day would take up the slack of unemployment in a most definite way. It is estimated that it would provide work throughout the country for 175,000 additional firemen. It would probably put more than 2,500 additional men to work in New York City, and after all this is the main and chief objective: to provide work rather than charity.

"We believe the eight-hour day tends to develop efficiency in this important branch of the city service; that it is important to all the people to have the efficiency of the firemen insured, for the human machine needs surcease and rest."

Sees Five-Day Week Near.

Asked in an interview if he believed the general five-day week was coming, Mr. Green said:

"Yes, and it is nearer at hand than we think. I am of the opinion that the five-day work week will be established first for government employes and that that will be the very next step forward in a very short time. The industrialists will necessarily follow to take up the slack in unemployment.

"I think it can be safely stated that out of the depression will come the universal establishment of the five-day work week in industry. The day is going to be shortened, but it will be shortened gradually in all probability. Some are experimenting on the six-hour day, and the first results have proved satisfactory."

Federation Engineer Declares Government Operation Successful

The fact that two progressive senators—La Follette and Costigan—are sponsors of the proposed $375,000,000 relief bill now before the senate is responsible for much of the opposition to that proposal, according to Geoffrey C. Brown, consulting engineer of the American Federation of Labor, who was an unexpected guest of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night.

"There are reactionary forces in every community in the United States which will oppose a bill so drafted and so sponsored, quite apart from its merits or from the necessity that it represents," the speaker declared.

Touching upon the Muscle Shoals question, which had been a subject for discussion of the delegates, Mr. Brown paid his respects to opponents of government ownership and operation of the great project. He said that during ten years' residence in New York state he had done much work in the public utilities field, with particular reference to giant power developments, and that it is a standing joke in that section that power generated on the Canadian side of Niagara Falls is furnished the consumer for from 2 to 3¾ cents per kilowatt hour, while that on the American side, developed by private interests, takes toll of the consumer to the tune of 7 to 11 cents.

The theory that excessive taxes are the rule wherever government operation obtains was exploded by the speaker, who called attention to the fact that the great development referred to, operated by the Canadian government, has been self-sustaining from its inception, even though the rates to the consumer are some 75 per cent less than that charged under private operation.

Mr. Brown said:

I have been much interested in the discussion from the floor this evening in connection with your mayor's statement as to the adequacy of voluntary unemployment relief in Chattanooga.

It may interest you to know that last week in Columbus, Ga., I encountered a situation which seems apropos of the one you are now facing. While I was in Columbus the regular appeal of the American Federation of Labor, asking support from all trade unionists in the city for the La Follette-Costigan unemployment relief bill, was received by the Central Labor union and all craft locals. Each of these organized groups immediately wired to the two Georgia senators and the local congressman in support of this bill. On the following day, however, the mayor, the city manager and the city commissioners of Columbus sent a wire to these same congressmen, stating that the city of Columbus was well able to take care of its own unemployment problem and required no outside aid whatsoever.

The text of this telegram appeared on the front page of the Columbus afternoon newspaper. On the same page of the newspaper, three columns away to the left of this item, however, there appeared a three-quarter-column report from the social welfare committee of Columbus, which is in direct charge of distribution of relief to the unemployed and destitute of that city. This report was in the form of an appeal and stated that unemployment and destitution in Columbus were widespread and increasing, and that the social welfare commission and community chest had not sufficient funds to provide fuel and necessary food to one-tenth of the cases that were coming to their attention.

A committee from the Columbus Central Labor union, armed with this newspaper, called on me that afternoon in my hotel room, and directed my attention to these two contradictory news items asking for comments. I offered the obvious suggestion that they immediately wire the two senators and local congressman to the effect that contrary to certain reports Columbus, Ga., simply was not in a position to cope with its existing unemployment problem on the voluntary basis, and I further suggested that a clipping of the report of the Columbus welfare committee, as it appeared in the newspaper, be sent to each congressman in support of this second telegram. This action was taken promptly by the committee.

It might be well for you to bear in mind that there will unquestionably be much opposition to the La Follette-Costigan bill quite apart from its merits or from the necessity that it is designed to assist, on account of the fact that the bill has been drafted by two progressive senators and is being actively sponsored by that group in the senate known as the progressive group. There are reactionary forces in every community in the United States, which will oppose a bill so drafted and so sponsored quite apart from its merit or from the necessity that it represents. I do not need to remind you that the American Federation of Labor is very actively supporting the La Follette-Costigan bill for direct relief to the unemployed.

Passing to another part of tonight's discussion which interested me greatly, that bearing on the ultimate disposal of the Muscle Shoals development, which lies, so to speak, at your doorstep, I was gratified to hear practically unanimous support of the principles of government operation and control of this giant project.

For ten years I lived in the state of New York and during this period did some work in the public utilities field, with particular reference to giant power developments. It has always been a standing joke in western New York state, that on the Canadian side of the Niagara river government-generated and transmitted power reaches the consumer at a cost of some 2 cents to 3¾ cents per kilowatt hour, while 200 yards away on the New York side of the suspension bridge, similar power, generated and distributed by private enterprises, costs the unfortunate consumer from 7 to 11 cents per kilowatt hour. This is an illuminating comparison and contrast between government and private ownership of great power resources from the standpoint of the ultimate consumer, who must pay the bill.

Everything that I have heard charged against the power combine this evening is fully supported by an abundance of testimony which has been widely published during recent years. There is no necessity for me to amplify any of these facts because they are all in the record. It is possible for the good citizens of this region to make of the Muscle Shoals development just as economical and effective a power generation and distribution unit as the Ontario hydraulic power commission has done, and I can hardly conceive of a greater single blessing for all the communities that will be served by this development when in operation than to have it owned and controlled by the people, for the people, in the true democratic manner.

The question is sometimes asked as to whether the Ontario hydro-electric development has in any way increased taxes in the great region that it has been serving during the past twenty years. Let me state that it has not increased taxes at all. The entire development has been self-sustaining right from its inception, and affords an absolutely conclusive demonstration of the economy and effectiveness of government operation when ably managed.

Mr. Brown came to the south in furtherance of his activities on behalf of the American Federation of Labor, which are, in brief, "selling" the large employer the fact that co-operation with employes makes for efficiency, mutual confidence and prosperity for all. He is conferring, while here, with Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and will remain in Chattanooga over the week-end.

of these people was most unfortunate.

The situation in Harlan and Bell counties, Kentucky, is not familiar to the general public and for this reason a committee was named to prepare a statement of the position of the organized labor movement on the present deplorable conditions. Working people are certainly in position at the present time to appreciate and sympathize with troubles of people out of work, whether it be through strike, lockout or through regular course of unemployment, and we hesitate to ask the public not to contribute to any one that is suffering in the present emergency.

However, we believe that it is nothing more than justice to ourselves and to the American labor movement to state briefly that the United Mine Workers of America, the legitimate American labor organization, has in the past extended every effort to relieve, through organization, the people who are now suffering from having found themselves crushed between two un-American forces, the selfish, arrogant employers and the self-appointed saviors of the miners, the National Miners' union and the I. W. W., both communistic, radical movements controlled by men and women in New York and other large cities who have no sympathy and no understanding of those institutions of the American government which the southern working man loves so well; nor of the suffering of working people, whether they be miners or other industrial workers.

A great majority of the miners in Harlan and Bell counties have listened to the pleadings of these radicals, which is responsible to a large extent for their present unenviable condition and for the

The Chattanooga Times has discovered an old Tennessee statute which prohibits the sale of razors, and is running a series of photos of prominent local citizens, given luxurious growths of beards by the staff artist, to show the probable results had the old law been enforced.

The Labor World, most always ahead of other publications, has discovered after diligent search that the law prohibiting the sale of razors has been enforced in Tennessee for at least eighty-nine years.

LABOR-HATERS DIRECT RED CROSS "RELIEF"

A peculiar and almost unbelievable report comes this week from headquarters of the United Mine Workers in Pineville, Ky. A telephone conversation with representatives of the mine workers in the stricken mountain town brought the information that "relief" work being conducted by the Red Cross among the families of the unfortunates is, in effect, being directed by the coal mine operators, the statement being made that no relief is granted until the applicant first obtains an order for same from one of the various mine operators.

Local trades unionists recall that John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, was largely instrumental in obtaining from congress an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the care of the destitute victims of greed and oppression in the mining camps, and it is understood that this money was to be distributed through the Red Cross, although that organization had no part in the efforts to secure the appropriation.

Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers in this territory, stated Thursday that the matter would in all probability be brought to the attention of international officers, and vigorous protest entered if the information was correctly stated.

Pledging unity in their efforts to continue the battle of American mine workers against attempted inroads by communistic organizations, more than

Mayor Bass Clarifies Statement Concerning Outside Relief Needs

Discussion of a public statement recently made by Mayor E. D. Bass to the effect that Chattanooga should not accept outside aid in the feeding and clothing of her destitute unemployed led to the appointment of a committee by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night to invite the city's chief executive to clarify for readers of The Labor World what he had already stated to another committee was a misconstruction of his attitude.

It was brought out in the discussion that many workers had gained the impression from the published articles that the mayor was blocking any manner of outside relief, including possible government appropriations for buildings and other projects, and that in justice to all parties at interest he should be asked to explain his statement.

Accordingly, the committee called upon Mayor Bass Wednesday, and he, after expressing appreciation for the opportunity, dictated the following:

I recently made a public statement that if the people of Chattanooga would do their duty this city needed no outside aid. I am informed that that statement has been misunderstood by some people. In making that statement I had reference entirely to relief work connected with the feeding and clothing of needy people, and I in no sense meant to infer that outside aid in the way of expenditures through the national government or otherwise that would produce work for people would not be welcome. Certainly aid of that sort is always welcome.

What I was attempting to emphasize was this: that there were people in Chattanooga who were amply able to provide necessary funds for immediate care of distressed people, and this is undoubtedly true. This depression is nation-wide. Every community is affected, and when we have people in our own community who are able to provide funds to take care of our own needy people, I do not think we should expect outside aid for such purposes.

This is what I meant to convey, and I trust this statement will clarify this question in the minds of any one who may have misunderstood my expression.

I am sure no one understands and appreciates the difficulties of this situation more than I do. I perhaps have direct contact with more people who are suffering because of this depression than any one in Chattanooga. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the man who is out of employment, and I am willing to use every means in my power as mayor of this city to relieve the situation; and in my efforts to secure relief for those in distress I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to say that I am not receiving more loyal support from any class of our citizens than I am from the working people of this city who are able, because of having retained their positions, to help.

This is further evidenced by the fact that only yesterday we begun the collection of coin boxes recently distributed. This first collection was in a community where people of ordinary means reside, and 117 of these boxes collected showed an average contribution of more than 70 cents per box, after having been in their possession for two weeks.

1,100 delegates to the convention of the United Mine Workers at Indianapolis returned to their homes determined more than ever to "carry on" against tyranny and oppression which has been the lot of these workers in many sections, according to Ben Williams, field representative for District 19, who returned to Chattanooga this week after attending the two-weeks' session of the miners.

"The convention," Mr. Williams told a representative of The Labor World, "was, in the opinion of veterans in the movement, one of the most constructive sessions ever held by the organization, and the spirit shown by the many hundreds of delegates was likened to that of the trail-blazers who built the foundations for our government in the face of almost insurmountable adversities. Many matters of deep import not only to the miner, but indirectly to his fellow-worker in other lines, received the solemn consideration of the delegates, and the deep determination to 'carry on' in spite of opposition from many sources was evident on every hand.

"Among the most important actions of the convention was the unanimous vote in favor of a five-day week and a six-hour day for mine workers, and approval of a bill which has been introduced in the congress, dealing with the industry, which was regarded as the only practical and constructive program to cure the ills of the industry which has yet been proposed. A very encouraging feature was the reports from fields at present non-union. An evident determination was manifested to organize and obtain joint working agreements to replace conditions which have become the worst in the history of the industry. An increasing number of mine operators, it was reported, are approving the organization of the workers as a step toward stabilization and a return to former prosperous conditions. Joint negotiations are now under way in many of the bituminous fields and the anthracite district.

"The delegates also went on record unanimously against any wage reductions, condemning as blind and foolish the policy of those operators who aggravate existing serious condition by continuing their efforts at destruction of standards of the workers, and thus further curtailing buying power of the masses.

"Among many resolutions adopted were the following: Condemning and opposing communistic program and propaganda emanating from soviet Russia; indorsing the La Follette-Costigan relief bill; government ownership and operation of utilities; old-age pensions, and others.

"Delegates were present from every coal-producing state in the United States and Canada, hundreds coming from the non-union states of West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and the southwest, where they have been waging a heroic struggle against tyrannical oppression, and have been compelled to sacrifice every comfort and many necessities in order to carry on the fight for their rights as American citizens.

"The convention adjourned with a more harmonious spirit and determination to carry out the principles of the national organization and of the American government than any convention for years, and with the delegates all imbued with the purpose of stabilizing the industry and bringing relief from the misery, want and distress that prevails today throughout the land."

T. J. Smith, of Graysville; George Branam and Clift, of Soddy, were among forty-five delegates representing District 19.

W. D. Canada Crashes With Colored Taxi

Driving his Rolls-Rough to Sunday evening services, W. D. Canada, veteran member of Local 226, Painters, Sunday night ran afoul of a colored taxi north of the Market street bridge, and both himself and Mrs. Canada were badly shaken up. Mrs. Canada fared worse from the impact than did "Bill," she having received severe bruises and cuts, and is still suffering from the shock.

The accident occurred about 6:15 o'clock last Sunday evening, near the intersection of Market and the Cherokee trail. The Canada family bus was badly damaged, and "Bill" is getting plenty of exercise since he has recovered sufficiently to walk.

Railway Carmen Sponsoring Dance

Lookout lodge, 211, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, is sponsoring a dance which will be given in the ballroom of Hotel Patten on the evening of Feb. 20, the proceeds to go to the relief of unemployed members.

J. W. Fuller, recording secretary of the lodge, said this week that the lodge had been very successful last year in interesting local citizens in a similar affair, and the relief given as a result of the ball was much appreciated.

He stressed the fact that funds derived from the second affair, Feb. 20, will be used for relief only.

El Paso Printers Union Establishes 5-Day Week

El Paso, Tex.—By a referendum vote of 3 to 1, El Paso Typographical Union No. 370 has decided to establish the five-day week in all newspaper and job shops within its jurisdiction, the action being taken as a measure of unemployment relief.

Reporting the vote, the El Paso Labor Advocate said that the printers' action was in keeping with the usual progressive attitude of the union. "In the past many such steps have been made by this union which have kept it in the forefront of progressive moves for the benefit of the working men in general," the Advocate said.

SENATE BILL REPORTED TO CUT MEXICAN QUOTA

Washington.—The senate immigration committee reported favorably the bill extending the quota restriction of immigration to Mexico. It is estimated that this would reduce Mexican immigration to 2,500 annually.

Senator Harris, the author of the bill, said the administration of the present law had cut down Mexican immigration to about 2,500, but he proposed that this be made compulsory by law.

INTERNATIONAL UNION CHIEFS OFFER THANKS

CO-OPERATION HAS BEEN EFFECTIVE

Birthright and Shanessy Commend Activities of Local Workers.

Says "Thanks"

JAMES C. SHANESSY

Expression of appreciation for co-operation and support of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council comes this week in a letter from headquarters of the Journeyman Barbers' International union, signed by James C. Shanessy, president, and W. C. Birthright, secretary.

The international union officials declare that this support has been tremendously effective.

"We have learned," the letter says, "in these hard times, that it is organized labor that stands alone between independence and degrading servitude; that unless labor is powerful and militant enough to be respected it is doomed to become the 'yes man' of hard-boiled employers."

"We stand ready to co-operate and do what our hands find to do to help in this great cause of human betterment," the communication concludes. It follows:

The Journeymen Barbers' International union wishes to express its appreciation for the co-operation and support it has received directly and indirectly from you during the year just closed.

This support has been tremendously effective. It nailed to the door the indisputable fact that a union label, a shop card or button, means not only quality of service, but that organized labor identifies its own. We heartily thank your officers and all your affiliated members for this loyal support, being aware of the fact that unless we are "all for one and one for all," organized labor as such is merely sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, and means nothing.

Like the rest of you, the Barbers' union has gone through its travail during the year just closed. Our members have paid the dear price of depression; but in spite of the difficulties which have beset us, we have pressed forward towards the goal of human betterment, which we all seek, thanks to the indomnitable spirit of our own members and the hearty and cordial support we have received from you and others like you.

We have learned, in these hard times, that it is organized labor that stands alone between independence and degrading servitude; that unless labor is powerful and militant enough to be respected it is doomed to become the "yes man" of hard-boiled employers.

The Journeyman Barbers' union has fought these many years (and stands unshaken now) for independence of labor—for a living, saving wage—the unqualified American standard of living. Without democracy in industry there is no such thing as democracy in America. There cannot be democracy in industry with starving, fearful, indifferent workers. For years industry has been fighting the encroachment of democracy upon business, under the guise of fighting "errors of labor."

The Journeyman Barbers' International union is entering upon 1932 with renewed zeal and courage, having in mind the grand principles of trade unionism—the little giant that works for the betterment of human happiness.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part V

[illegible] LK XIV:19.

I. Jesus' Social Optimism.

By far the largest part of our Lord's teaching [illegible] in some way with the Kingdom of God. Different from His [illegible] messianic conceptions was [illegible] upon His consciousness [illegible] His evident [illegible] the eternal destiny of Gulty Ones rested in His decision on the Mercy into the possessive Son [illegible] God in the [illegible] of Gethsemane praying [illegible] to [illegible] the inevitable ordeal — His Cross of Kingdom He carried [illegible] intact from His baptism in the Jordan until the consummation of His mighty passion was accomplished and He bade His disciples [illegible]

WM. L. MOSS

Discerned by Jesus under varying forms and pictured in four more than one angle in this parable, this Kingdom was to [illegible] civilization having its goal in the individual; a world in which [illegible] otherwise a [illegible] life must be [illegible] if it was to be of [illegible] quality. This world order was to be founded on the Spirit of God itself, on God the Heavenly Father, and in this civilization men were to work with the Father and together among themselves in an unselfish brotherhood at the various tasks life brought them, guided by their Father's will.

Jesus had a clear vision of what He regarded as the social ideals that were to find sway in the Kingdom and they can be divided under three heads: (1) Jesus' spirit of social optimism, (2) His spirit of social opportunism and (3) His spirit of personal social responsibility. Our consideration next week of this phase of Jesus' teaching will be a study of the first of these, His spirit of social optimism.

Memphis Waterworks Profitable

Recent flare-up of the Muscle Shoals question, caused by the fact that Senator McKellar declined to change his convictions respecting the Norris bill at the urgent behest of a committee of local citizens representing the Chamber of Commerce, together with opposition by the people to a proposed increase in street-car fare on certain lines from 7 to 10 cents, has served to revive the controversy regarding municipal, state and government operation of utilities in general.

Of particular immediate interest, therefore, is the report of the board of water commissioners for the city of Memphis, which city long has owned and operated its waterworks, and, incidentally, has one of the finest plants of its character in the entire south.

The report shows a net profit for the year 1931 of $252,485.07, and an accompanying diagram apportions the expenditure of the dollar, including the following: "Administrative expense, 2 cents."

This, together with the figures showing net profits of more than a quarter-million dollars for the year, rather explodes the theory of the private-ownership advocates, whose favorite pastime is declaring that taxpayers are loaded with deficits in cases of utilities owned and operated by the people.

Only recently a prominent local citizen stated to the writer that "you know you cannot get more than 50 cents from the public dollar." Assuming that this gentleman was correct in his statement, had the Memphis plant been operated by private owners they would have cleaned up more than half a million dollars in net profits for 1931. A pretty fair sum in these days of depression and bankruptcies, for a few millions invested.

Report of the Memphis board also contains the following: "The water department does not participate in the distribution of the tax money paid by citizens to the city of Memphis, but is operated and maintained entirely by revenue derived from the sale of water, and all interest and sinking funds to retire bonds issued for the use and benefit of the water department are cared for out of this revenue."

And the citizen who today advocates government, state or municipal ownership of utilities is, in the eyes of some people, a radical, a socialist, a communist, an ignoramus or what have you.

Our Rail Problem Not Solved

Following a course plotted with extreme wisdom the railroad unions have held the railroads to a ten per cent. wage "deduction" for a period of one year and have exacted some compensating concessions from the roads. It is estimated that in accepting the wage "deductions" the unions have presented the roads with a blank check for some $210,000,000, with which the roads hope to in some measure rehabilitate their finances. Manifestly the unions hope so, too.

But wages were not and are not the source of railroad troubles. The trouble was and is elsewhere. The railroads now may proceed with the benefit of increased freight rates, decreased wages and probably help from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is doubtful if these three tremendous helps will solve the railroad problems.

* * * *

In the first place, the railroads remain burdened with an enormous sea of "paper" which represents inflation, or something besides usefully and necessary invested working capital. Of course the roads cannot claim a state of prosperity until they can pay interest or dividends on that sea of "paper."

In the second place the railroads are confronted with a brand of competition which they have been unable to meet up to now. They face active and effective competition by water, by highway and by air. For the present water and highway are the big factors. The railroads thought trucks couldn't do much business in the hauling of perishables, but refrigerated trucks are doing it. Trucks are doing a sizable business in transcontinental haulage and a really important interstate business sectionally.

* * * *

There is one thing that can be done, though it may not really equalize the competition. Conditions for truckmen in interstate business can be fixed on a basis of safety and humane consideration for trucking personnel. Organization and long agitation forced a regard for conditions of work among railroad men. Truckmen know little of that protection today, except where they are organized. Plenty of two-man truck crews travel day and night, with the off-shift driver sleeping on the moving truck and with both drivers sleeping therein if and when night stops are made. Manifestly such driving is a menace to public traffic and to the drivers themselves.

* * * *

The wage "deduction" will not cure the ills of the railroads. No more would a building trades wage reduction cure the ills of that industry. The employers of America demonstrate in every fiscal climax that they are neither economists nor generals. They are the new Bourbons, who, as to economics, learn nothing and forget only such wisdom as comes their way. The salvation of American industry, railroads or what-not, is not to be gained at the cost of injustice to the wage earners.

The one piece of brilliance in the railroad negotiations was the final bringing together of all class 1 roads into one national conference. For the unions there is immense credit in the outcome. For the railroads it seems impossible to find that great American genius for management of which our school books tell us.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

When the papers reported the other day that a man named Leo Melanowski was living in the home of the Little Sisters of the Poor in a middle west city, it didn't sound especially interesting—unles you read on and learned about the man's background. For Melanowski was one of the big men in the early days of the automobile industry. Three decades ago he was considered probably the best automotive engineer in the country. As a matter of fact, some men still feel that way about him.

At one time Henry Ford asked him for a job. He guided the early development of the motor industry; he once held five shares of Ford stock, which, if he had held on to it, would have netted him more than a million and a half in cash in 1919. But today he lives in the home of the Little Sisters of the Poor; and the whole story emphasizes the prodigal way in which business, like life in general, uses human talent in order to get the results it wants.

Melanowski is not the only one of the early giants of the automobile trade to wind up in poverty. David Buick died almost penniless in Detroit a few years ago. R. C. Hupp, if not in poverty, was not among the mighty and the rich when he died recently. And the automobile business is not the only business that has tales like that. Nearly every industry can duplicate them. Just why things like that should happen is not at all clear. No industry ever had a surplus of brains. The old saying, "There's always room at the top," is perfectly true. A man of outstanding ability is always in demand. And yet—every now and then such a man of that kind gets absolutely nowhere. It is as if there were some hidden and inexplicable rule by which business must sacrifice, now and then, a keen brain to some invisible and maleficent power. Melanowski, Buick—you could make a long and dismal list. It testifies to one of the most distressing and wasteful ailments of modern business.

Some prison-made products are still labeled with the names of outside manufacturers, in order to facilitate their sale among purchasers who don't like goods made by convicts. As one writer says, in commenting on this practice, imagine what a prisoner, who is made to put on these lying labels, thinks of society, which has incarcerated him for crooked work!

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue sea,
Keep rolling on for all of me.
On you I cannot waste a glance
While bathing beauties 'round me prance.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

FOR years the leaders and membership of the Knights of Labor kept the name of their organization secret. It was generally called the "Five Stars" by both the initiated and the uninitiated, since five asterisks (* * * * *) was appended to all public notices issued in its name. But as time passed on, in fact by 1878, just nine short years after the order had been founded in Philadelphia by Uriah S. Stephens, the veil of secrecy that enshrouded a large part of its activities had been removed in order to allay public hostility.

In 1878 a change took place in the leadership of the order, and among other changes was the replacement of Stephens by Terence V. Powderly as Grand Master Workman. Also along about this time the order was entering its last phase of existence—a stage in its development and life that indicated it had lived its period of usefulness and, what is more important than all else in this respect, by its ill-starred activities it was practically forcing into existence the "Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions of the United States and Canada," which in its turn failed to fill the needs of American labor, but which in reality proved itself to be the precursor of the present-day American Federation of Labor.

Under Powderly's leadership the Knights of Labor continued in many ways to uphold the high ideals of its founder and past Master Workman Stephens. Powderly praised justice, would not approve violence and pleaded for "the mutual development and moral elevation of mankind." These words but echoed the noble sentiments of his predecessor.

In spite of Powderly's high ideals and wise leadership sinister forces were working within the society, shielded by the order's cloak of quasi-secrecy, and by 1886 the crisis came for the Knights of Labor.

Tax Plan Is Fought By New York Labor

"Head Tax" Denounced by State Federation as Breeder of Discriminations and Abuse Against Workers.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 11.—A recommendation made by the Mastick tax commission that every one earning more than $500 a year should be required to pay a $2 fee for filing an income tax return is meeting vigorous opposition from the New York State Federation of Labor.

In a formal protest from John Sullivan, the president, and John O'Hanlon, secretary-treasurer, to leaders in the state legislature, the proposal was characterized as a highly objectionable "head tax." They said:

"Such head tax cannot seriously be considered as a source of income for the state, and can only reasonably be regarded as a plan to make a record of the wage-earners of the state with information as to their places of employment and wage-earning and residence for those who may have some interest in such information that is not connected with the welfare of our wage-earners.

"Such head or poll taxes on wage workers and other citizens are utilized in some of the other states for the purpose of placing a qualification on voters, and no guarantee can exist that the proposal for a head tax on wage-earners would not, in addition to its other objectionable features, become the basis for such electoral qualifications in this state and breed the discriminations in this state and abuses that attend such head or poll taxes in the states now afflicted with them."

Democratic Leader Sees Mooney Vindication Near

Washington.—Representative Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, democratic floor leader of the house, has joined the movement in congress for a pardon for Tom Mooney.

Writing to Mooney, Rainey said:

"I am glad to know that the report of the Wickersham commission in your case will be made public and I have every confidence now that your complete vindication is not far away. You have certainly been buried long enough in a living grave and the treatment you have received will always be a blot upon the history of our country.

"The sooner the vindication comes the better. I think the people of the United States will rejoice to hear of your release under an unconditional pardon, and it ought to be immediate."

Culinary Crafts Organize Pacific Northwest Alliance

Portland, Ore.—Delegates from local unions of culinary crafts in the Pacific northwest, meeting here, formed a permanent organization of the Pacific Northwest Alliance of Culinary Workers and Beverage Dispensers. The organization will be composed of the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and the Canadian province of British Columbia.

Messages of greeting were received from General President Edward Flore and Robert Hesketh, general secretary of the international organization.

Reports received from the various local unions in the jurisdiction were encouraging despite the general business depression. Organizer Jack Weinberger declared that "there is a determination upon the part of the membership to fight to the last ditch against wage reductions and to oppose all attempts to break down established working conditions."

The alliance went on record as favoring the repeal of the Volstead act.

"Union-made, but does not bear a label" is a stock phrase which we should ignore. Demand the UNION LABEL.

What Next!

A novel form of life insurance coverage is being offered shoppers by several stores in Great Britain. Under a general insurance policy, the customer automatically has his life insured, and in the event of death the heirs of the insured receive a sum in direct proportion to the amount spent in the store during the previous year. The shopkeeper pays the premium at the rate of about 2 cents for every $5 of customers' purchase. The maximum benefit under the plan is $200.

"DEFLATION" HITS WAGE EARNERS HARDEST BLOW

Common Folks First to Feel Campaign to Lower Costs, Which Instead of Restoring Prosperity Aggravates Depression and Threatens to Prolong It Indefinitely.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, Feb. 11.—Just a few months ago a lot of smart men—those who head up the country's big business—began telling us that the way to end the depression is to deflate. To change the way of thinking everything from the price of a box of matches to the value of the currency was inflated. And as a result of their preachments was launched a tide of "deflation" against every sector where it could be resisted most—the wages and salaries of common folks.

No one would like to say that those campaigns were colored by a desire to improve the health of personal pocketbooks, and yet not one of the smart fellows has come forward since to say that he has not used the opportunity offered to slash the pay of common workers—white collared and denim clad.

Some of them took a slash at the pay for themselves—from $10,000 to $9,000. That meant a little less income tax for Uncle Sam and maybe a subsidized junket in the winter.

Wages, Salaries First Hit.

We have had no more sustaining and fortifying tonic during the perilous days of the depression than the asseverations of these apostles that the depression would be short lived, and the good old days of prosperity for everybody would come back in a hurry, if we just took a liberal dose of deflation for business conditions.

The main thing is that they didn't tell us enough. They didn't tell us, for instance, that such deflation starts with costs, and that wages and salaries usually stand at the head of the lists—right where the deflater can hit them first and take a strong swat for a starter.

Another thing they didn't tell us was that deflation of business also means higher taxes—higher taxes that hit the little fellow and take more away from him by way of income than from anybody else, but without giving him any more government in return. Deflation in every depression has invariably had an "inflationary" effect upon the rates of taxation.

Deflation Preached by Radio.

How many times in the last 12 months has the radio been used to tell the common folks that the depression is a downright absurdity if we just looked at it in the right way—just cut our expenditures a little, went to the movies a little less often, and did without a cigar now and then? If we just did a few of these things, we argued, everything for us and mother and the kids would be "sweet and pretty." Yes, sir, just deflate a little by spending the old dollar bill, and watch Old Man Depression scurry around the corner!

Why, there was such exuding confidence in those radio pantologies that we almost felt good about things, and thought it would be nice to go down some morning and tell the boss we would donate a month or two's wages of salary to the dear old concern just to show our love and loyalty to it. Some of us even asked ourselves whether we were not mistaken about the grim depression being here, and that maybe we were just individually down on our luck a bit.

Or little Johnny needed some shoes, which he usually does, and we didn't have the price, we almost felt that Johnny should be willing to go barefooted a bit to serve a great cause—the altruistic cause of deflation.

"Deflation" Still Continues.

But, gentlemen, times are not what they were and things are not what they seemed. Unemployment and wage slashes under the gentle name of deflation of business, made tasty by radio panegyrics, has taken from the wage and salary earners of the country in the last year a sum of ten to fifty per cent of the earnings of previous years. And there is no substantial sign that this decrease, still called deflation, may not continue for the rest of the year, and that little Johnny may not have to do without two pairs of shoes.

What apostle of deflation told us that the heaviest burden which wage earners and persons of small means must meet in the next 12 months, in addition to income slashes and unemployment, is the problem of increased taxes, direct and indirect? These increases are coming from the federal and state governments and from the counties and municipalities. No person, unless he lives in the county poorhouse, is escaping them.

Living Standards Lowered.

The man of small means is less able this year to meet tax increases than he has been for several years. Coupled with wage and salary slashes, these taxes present an unusual burden and mean that family budgets must be further reduced and standards of living further lowered.

Deflation of credit means a tax on opportunity—deprivation of boys and girls of expected education, the postponement of needed medical or dental treatment, the lapse of insurance policies, the separation of families, and living in more crowded and less wholesome quarters.

This depression will have a lot to answer for in future years without increasing its destroying effects by the deflation of credit. There will be reduced stamina and health of working people. Deprivation and undernourishment due to part-time work, reduced wages or unemployment, may be expected in the years to come to increase the toll of tuberculosis and kindred diseases.

Death Toll to Rise.

Undernourished babies and children will be more susceptible to the ravages of disease, and the death toll of the nation may be expected in the next few years to show an increase as compared with recent past years.

Large sums for charity have been raised this winter in almost every community and are being used to relieve cases of utter destitution, starvation or dire emergency. These funds are of no assistance to families in straitened circumstances due to slashed wages and salaries. There is nothing to commend in spectacular gifts of charity when they are more than offset in a community by its wage and salary cuts, and at the destruction of the ability of its wage and salary earners to maintain themselves in comfort and on reasonable standards of living.

Charity, wage and salary cuts and deflation of credit are a trio of evils that can serve to prolong the business depression more than any other group of economic factors.

,300,000 Children Out of School, 2,500,000 Competing for Work

Washington, Feb. 11—Around 3,300,000 boys and girls under 17 years are out of school during the academic year 1929-30. Many of them are exploited by unscrupulous employers who, despite the army of millions of adult workers, were so devoid of ordinary decency and patriotism that they eagerly sought out boys and girls of tender age because children would work for smaller wages than adults.

These are the outstanding conditions among children, according to a statement by Mrs. Clara M. Beyer, director of the industrial division of the children's bureau of the U. S. department of labor.

Leave School to Support Family.

"Of the total of 3,300,000 children, nearly 2,000,000 had been in school but were compelled to leave because the financial inability of their parents to pay the expenses of school attendance.

"In past studies of unemployment and child welfare," Mrs. Beyer said, "there comes to light over and over again the tragic paradox of children leaving school for work to eke out the family income when the normal breadwinners cannot find work of any kind.

"The same thing is happening in this depression. In September and October of the past year, 5,549 boys and girls of 14 and 15 took out their first working papers in New York City alone. In Philadelphia the corresponding figure for September was 1,000."

Employers Turn Children Into Profit.

"Although considerable improvement has been made during the past ten years in the percentage of young employed workers, Mrs. Beyer's report points out that, despite the existence of child labor laws and public opinion opposed to child labor exploitation, many employers persist in turning children into profits.

"Again and again during this decade," Mrs. Beyer says, "we have been informed that industry no longer wants the 14 and 15-year-old child. Public and private child welfare agencies have broadcast the idea that '14 is early enough' for children to go work, that the difficult years of adolescence should not be further burdened by the physical strain of employment.

"Yet the 1930 census shows for the fifteen states and the District of Columbia for which figures are available a total of 102,503 children 14 and 15 years of age at work, a decrease of 22 per cent as compared with 1920 figures. The number of employed children between 16 and 17 years of age was 231,322, or 5 per cent less than in 1920. The children between 10 and 14 years of age in these states (75,649), who, of course, should not be at work at all, have, it is true, decreased 42 per cent.

5,500,000 at Work or Job Hunting.

Summing up the figures, Mrs. Beyer finds that 800,000 children from 7 to 13 and 2,500,000 between 14 and 17 were out of school during the school year.

In answering the question, What are these children between 14 and 17 substituting for school during these most impressionable and difficult years, Mrs. Beyer says:

"Undoubtedly the vast majority are working or hunting for work or they are wasting their time, at best, in unprofitable idleness, at worst, in taking the first steps toward delinquency and crime.

Keep Children in School.

"Here is an opportunity, if we but have the courage to grasp it, to wrest from a national calamity a national good—to free for unemployed adults the jobs these boys and girls are leaving school to take, and give to a very large group of adolescents, who will be the young men and women of a few years, hence training that will fit them for more desirable jobs, more satisfactory living, and for better citizenship.

"This means not only keeping the children in school, but giving them worthwhile training and educational and vocational guidance that will fit them into fields of usefulness where their services will be in demand when better days come."

ENGLAND BUYS LARGE LOT OF SOVIET UNION COTTON

London, England.—The Lancashire Cotton corporation purchased 500,000 pounds sterling worth of cotton produced in the Soviet Union. This is the largest Russian cotton transaction in the history of the Liverpool cotton market.

Observers express the conviction that this large-scale invasion of the British cotton market indicates that the authorities of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics are endeavoring to displace certain grades of United States and South American cotton in the Lancashire mills.

legitimate labor movement to give approval to public appeals for assistance in the name of these radical organizations might be construed as an expression of sympathy with their methods.

The legitimate miners' union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor maintains relief stations in the stricken territories, headquarters at Pineville, Ky., with a local miner in charge, and such contributions as are sent through that agency are distributed direct to families in the community and an accounting is made for every dollar received and spent. United Mine Workers have received many such contributions from throughout Kentucky and Tennessee, for which the entire labor movement is duly thankful. Local appeals, after having been indorsed by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, have received hearty response. However, there have appeared in this city from time to time people who claim to represent the stricken miners who were unkonwn to the legitimate organization. We have endeavored at all times to avoid giving official sanction to any appeal not coming directly from the accredited representatives of the United Mine Workers of America.

It is far from our purpose to attempt to stop any relief being furnished hungry and cold people, wherever they may be or whatever may be their avocation, but we believe it is only justice to ourselves and to those who have extended good-will and friendship in the past to make it clear to them at this time that any appeal for financial or other assistance in the Harlan and Bell county fields should come with the official sanction of our legitimate American movement.

MORE ABOUT BARBER CHIEFS

Let us go forward this year with greater determination to maintain peace, unity, solidarity, and carry on a continuous campaign to organize the unorganized men and women of your city and vicinity.

The Journeymen Barbers' union has always stood at the forefront of progress and betterment and it will continue to do so. It gratefully asks your hearty and continued support to the end that the entire American labor movement may "ascend the mountain." We stand ready to co-operate and do what our hands find to do to help in this great cause of human betterment.

Fraternally yours,
W. C. BIRTHRIGHT,
General President.

Urgent Appeal For Senate Aid Bill Is Expected

Midwinter Meeting Surveys Acute Unemployment Situation and Acts on Questions of Transcendent Importance.

Washington, Feb. 11.—Economic and industrial problems arising out of the depression, which transcend in importance all other questions, are under consideration by the American Federation of Labor executive council, now holding its mid-winter meeting here. Special attention is being given to the acute unemployment situation and to practical remedies advocated by organized labor.

This meeting of the executive council is regarded as of great importance. It is the first time the council has met since adjournment of the convention of the American Federation of Labor held at Vancouver, British Columbia, last October.

Owing to the distressing economic condition which prevails throughout the nation and owing to the fact that legislative measures of extreme importance to labor are being considered by congress the meeting takes on added significance.

Following the close of the council's sessions, presidents and representatives of national and international unions meet in joint session with the council members to consider labor's legislative program.

To Back Relief Bill.

A survey will be made of the entire unemployment situation. It is expected that the council will vigorously and aggressively appeal for the enactment of the Costigan-La Follette relief measure providing for the appropriation of $375,000,000 to aid in relieving the acute suffering caused by reason of unemployment.

The council will receive report of the railroad negotiations which were concluded a few days ago when a reduction in wages was formally agreed upon.

The wage reducing policy now being pursued by large employers of labor throughout the nation will be given special attention.

Legislation Considered.

The legislative proposals, including the injunction relief legislation, appropriations for various activities of the government, the proposal for entrance into the world court, taxation measures and legislation providing for the introduction of the five-day work-week for civilian government employes, will be considered and acted upon in consecutive order.

The attempt which is being made to reduce the wages of federal employes will be a matter of special attention and consideration. President Green will report in detail on the various proposals which have been made providing for a reduction in the pay of federal employes and the extraordinary efforts which have been put forth by the American Federation of Labor to prevent consideration and action upon them. The special service which the American Federation of Labor has rendered in connection with this matter and all the things which it has done in a detailed and definite way in order to guard against the imposition of reductions in wages for federal employes will be submitted to the council.

The withdrawal of the National Federation of Federal Employes from affiliation with the American Federation of Labor will be considered most carefully and concretely. The executive council will take such action as may seem necessary in connection with this matter. All correspondence dealing with the action of the federal employes and the refusal of the officers of the federal employes to accept the invitation which was extended them to meet with the executive council for the purpose of adjusting differences will be read. All the facts and all the information in connection with this matter will be carefully reported and considered.

Press and Radio To Tell Nation Of Big Campaign

Work of Perfecting Local Organizations Speeded, as Huge Effort Begins to Produce Jobs for Idle Wage-Earners.

New York City, Feb. 11.—Feb. 15 is set as "zero day" for the big national campaign sponsored by the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor and the Association of National Advertisers, with re-employment of a million now idle workers as the goal.

News of the huge effort to develop employment and a return of normal buying through the united action campaign will be carried to the country daily by more than 750 daily newspapers and over the radio in 30-second broadcasts on more than fifty national programs.

Meanwhile the business of perfecting local organizations in all communities is proceeding with full speed, but in every case on a purely voluntary basis.

Campaign Getting Results.

The program of regional conferences will be completed before the zero day with a final conference in San Francisco on February 9. Labor participation has been invited in each of these conferences and has already been reported from Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia.

Many local organizations, unable to restrain themselves, have not waited for February 15 to begin their campaigns for pledges of work and wages and reports are reaching national headquarters in large numbers from communities where the united action campaign is at this early date producing actual results. Here are typical reports:

Waynesboro, Pa., work found for 40 men.

Jerome, Ariz., additional miners being employed daily.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 429 days' work found.

Columbia, S. C., work found for 57 men.

Punxsutawney, Pa., $20,000 factory addition hastened for immediate work.

Robesonia, Pa., industrial employment for 30 men and road work involving $5,000 in wages made available.

Port Henry, N. Y., $10,100 worth of work found.

Drive Is Great United Effort.

"Practically every division of our national organization is now functioning smoothly and long before the opening day of the actual campaign effort every division will be well set in its stride," said Carl Byoir, general director of organization.

"It is possible to say now that within six weeks we have brought together a greater number of organizations and individuals in a united, co-operative, volunteer effort than we were able to bring together in four times that length of time at the outset of the World war. That illustrates forcefully the dynamic character of this campaign and the determination of our people themselves to overcome the depression, restore normal buying and set our feet once more on the road to national well-being.

"This effort is purely voluntary. Each organization and individual cooperates as and to the extent of the desire and ability of that organization or individual. But the idea is so simple, the object so vital, the goal so obviously attainable that everywhere co-operation is full and complete and determination is unbeatable. On Feb. 15 our great campaign will formally open. We shall strive for the fullest results, but whatever we accomplish will be that much of victory, that much more of human comfort and self-respect restored, that much sorrow and pessimism defeated."

CANADIAN RAILWAY WORKERS URGE INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY

Ottawa.—The Canadian government was urged by a delegation representing the organized railway running trades to make a "scientific investigation of the human factors in industry and the apportionment of wealth invested in and produced by industry with a view to preventing recurring unemployment."

It was pointed out that in October last Canadian railways were employing 54,730 fewer workers than in October, 1928, a decrease in three years of 27 per cent. If capital investment is unused power and equipment was legitimate overhead in a depression, unused labor should also be protected, the delegation declared.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

INTERNATIONAL HEADS MAKE DRAMATIC PLEA FOR RELIEF OF JOBLESS

Over 100 Union Chiefs Present Petition to President Hoover.

LA FOLLETTE-COSTIGAN RELIEF BILL DEFEATED—CORDELL HULL VOTES "NO"

Temporary Setback Fails to Discourage Labor Chiefs. President Receives Big Delegation in Silence—Proposals for Remedying Situation Include Passage of Major Legislative Program.

Washington, Feb. 17.—Defeat of the La Follette-Costigan bill appropriating $750,000,000 for unemployment relief, although regarded as a discouraging feature, has not altered the determination of officers of the American Federation of Labor and the various international unions to force action by the nation's lawmaking bodies to grant relief to starving millions in this the greatest crisis faced by the American people.

The proposed appropriation was defeated in the face of one of the most dramatic and forceful appeals which American labor has made in all its history, the senators voting, 48 to 35, to defeat the proposal, the next day after the house had suspended the rules to bring quick passage, 350 to 15, of the Glass-Stegall bill to "relieve" the federal reserve banking system with $750,000,000 of treasury gold.

Senator Cordell Hull, of Tennessee, was among those who cast his vote against the La Follette-Costigan bill. Senator McKellar voted "aye."

Labor's appeal was presented to President Hoover and consisted of national leaders by over 100 presidents of international unions, who went in person to offer the conclusions of the workers' representatives after an all-day conference.

Headed by William Green, president of the federation, the labor representatives marched from the conference table in the A. F. of L. headquarters to the White House.

President Hoover received the petition without comment.

From the White House the labor representatives went to the capitol and presented labor's program to Vice-President Curtis and Speaker Garner, who expressed their sympathy with the appeal and said they would bring it to the attention of the senate and house of representatives.

The labor conference consisted of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor and representatives of the affiliated national and international unions. It was convened by President Green with the approval of the executive council to consider the unemployment situation, anti-injunction legislation, and other federal labor measures.

On the unemployment crisis the appeal adopted by the conference declared:

That a real national emergency has been reached.

That the number of unemployed was constantly increasing to more than 8,300,000 idle in January.

That local relief agencies could not cope with the situation.

That adequate relief is not being supplied.

That men, women and children, "hungry and cold and undernourished," were deprived of food, warmth and shelter.

That "the entire resources of the nation must be brought into action in order to meet and deal adequately with this emergency."

In this crisis the conference appealed to congress "for an immediate appropriation of an adequate sum to meet the demands of the existing economic situation."

The appeal emphasized federal appropriations of billions of dollars to aid banks, corporations and business institutions, and declared that the contrast would be deprecating if congress should fail to help promptly the hungry and needy.

"The masses of the people," the appeal said, "will feel that congress has utterly failed to measure up to its duties and responsibilities if, while in session, as it now is, during a period of great national emergency, it fails to appropriate funds to supply food and shelter to millions of suffering, starving people."

In addition to direct federal appropriations for unemployment relief the conference stressed the following proposals to remedy the unemployment situation:

Immediate establishment of the five-day week in public and private industry.

Creation of "made work" by all business executives, professional men and family heads.

Retention of boys and girls in schools.

In the field of federal labor legislation the appeal asked for the speedy enactment of the following measures:

The Norris anti-injunction bill.

Five-day week for government employes.

Federal contributions to state old-age pension legislation.

The King bill to deport alien seamen.

The payment of the prevailing wage rate by all contractors engaged in government work.

The development of a public works program to prevent a recurrence of unemployment.

The Davis-Kelly bill to provide for the regulation and control of the coal industry.

The modification of the Volstead act to permit the manufacture of 2.75 alcoholic content beer.

Increased income taxes in the higher brackets.

Increased inheritance taxes.

Legislation supported by organizations representing government employes.

WOMEN'S LEAGUE PROGRESSES.

The woman's division of the Navy Relief Retirement association, organized to band together the wives of navy and navy yard employes for active service is a new affiliation of the National Women's Trade Union league. Another new affiliation is the Akron committee, recently chartered. Progress is being made on the organization of the Women's Trade Union League of Cleveland, O.

ADDRESSES BEAUTICIANS.

"No protective law in the statutes of any state, but that it was put there by pressure of united effort from the workers," W. J. Moran, editor of the El Paso, Tex., Labor Advocate, declared in addressing the El Paso Beauticians' association. The speaker brought out the advantages of organization, showing that organized labor was the only force to secure needed legislation.

A. F. of L. Conference Launches Organization Campaign With Ringing Declaration That Strong Trade Unions Are the Only Hope of the Workers

Washington, Feb. 17.—A ringing manifesto urging a nation-wide campaign to bring the unorganized workers into the trade union movement was issued by the American Federation of Labor conference here consisting of the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. and ninety-five representatives of the affiliated national and international unions.

The manifesto points out that social reforms are largely futile unless backed up by strong labor organizations and stresses the necessity for labor's sake of bringing all unorganized workers into the trade union fellowship.

The text of the manifesto adopted by the labor conference follows:

Regardless of whatever palliative, corrective, stabilizing and productive measures are resorted to, legislative and economic, domestic and international, there remains the all-important problem of organizing the wage-earners into ever necessary, self-governing and intelligently directed, constructive trade unions, national and international in character, and under such principles and practices as will unite the forces of labor throughout our industrial and commercial life.

Effective Organization Necessary.

It is self-evident that all reforms in economic and social theory and practice have been attained and maintained only where there was effective organization of wage-earners.

It is equally self-evident that retrogression in the life and work of our people has been retarded by the degree of effective organization amongst wage-earners.

It is likewise true that the progress of our people and their participation in whatever form of advances society has made has been realized to the extent that the great mass of workers have put forth their claims collectively.

Right to Work.

It is almost universally recognized in recent years, with the development of large scale and mass production industries, that the consumptive power of our people must be balanced to provide home markets for our products and services, and that our productive organization must be so regulated as to give all who are willing and able to work opportunity to render useful and self-sustaining service.

These problems of balance involve both wage and salary incomes, length of work day and work week, needs and standards of living, and the varied possibility of expanding demand for different articles.

Collective Action Required.

It has been clearly demonstrated that these ends which involve balance between production, distribution and consumption can only be attained through the collective and co-operative action of all workers, whether of the wage or small salary income groups of our people.

The call of the hour, as at all times, is for effective organization of all wage-earners into collective, self-controlled groups, as represented by trade unions.

Organized Workers Fix Labor Standards.

Indeed it is frankly admitted on all sides that the conditions of the unorganized and small salaried workers are wholly dependent upon standards fixed or maintained by the organized workers, and progress would be speeded many fold if the unorganized also became centers of constructive forces.

In this period of widespread need and national emergency it is of utmost importance that regardless of all other measures approved and policies adopted, that renewed efforts, enlarged activities, and greater concentration be directed in the stimulation, development and maintenance of an organizing campaign of unlimited scope.

Trade Union the Workers' Hope.

The beginning of progress for workers is the trade union.

Their hope of representation in their industry is their trade union.

For redress of grievances and assurance of a square deal they must turn to their trade union.

For control over wages and hours they must rely upon their trade union.

For the presentation of their needs and problems within the industry, before legislative groups, and to the public, they must depend upon the trade union.

The union provides the agency and the method whereby workers may advance their economic and social welfare.

We need to carry the gospel of unionism to every producing worker, wage-earner and salaried employe throughout the length and breadth of this country.

Organization Drive.

To that end this conference calls on all national and international unions to renewed activity in the work of organizing the members of their respective trades and callings into their respective organizations, and that every possible consideration be given to plans and procedures that will facilitate such enlarged membership.

This conference further calls upon city central labor unions, state federations of labor, and other representative organizations to aid and assist the said national and international unions in this work.

Fellowship in Union Membership.

We should carry to all wage-earners the message of fellowship in union membership and activity for the best interests of workers who must establish the rights and protection of their interests.

No other purpose has the same urgence as that of organizing workers, so that they may be in a position to help themselves and each other.

The hardships of the past three winters are incontrovertible arguments for extension of union membership and wider programs of action.

We call upon every trade unionist to join in this campaign and we call upon every worker to join our cause. Those who are not with us are against us and against their own best interests.

Reports of Work Found for Idle Begin to Pour In

Workers in Great Nation-Wide Employment Campaign Ask Employers to Put Million Men on Pay Rolls.

New York City, Feb. 18.—One million employers of labor are being asked this week to give jobs to a million workers throughout the United States.

In fully 8,000 cities committees are combing their communities to find jobs for the unemployed.

The great war against depression, organized by the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor, the Association of National Advertisers and the legion auxiliary, got under way Feb. 15, with a muster of all committees at 8 a.m.

Simultaneously with the start of work of organized committees throughout the land, radio broadcasts on ninety national programs and through 112 independent stations began to hammer away at intervals throughout the day, with 30-second announcements on each program and from almost every station in the United States. This bombardment will continue throughout the campaign.

Complete Story Broadcast.

Just before the zero hour a national half-hour blue network broadcast carried the complete story of the campaign, with addresses by Henry L. Stevens, Jr., national commander of the legion and general chairman of the war against depression; Bernard Lichtenberg, chairman of the executive board of the Association of National Advertisers, and Matthew Woll, representing the American Federation of Labor and chairman of the division of labor in this campaign.

Hardly had the campaign got under way when reports of work found began to reach headquarters. These were reports of new work and not the advance reports of work found that came from committees that went into action ahead of the official zero hour.

Labor Press Big Aid.

In Wallace, Ida.; Bradford, Pa.; West Frankfort, Ill.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Ann Arbor, Mich.; St. Petersburg, Fla.; Holyoke, Mass.; Kansas City, Mo.; Colorado Springs, Colo., and scores of other towns and cities, labor has joined with committees now working in co-operation with the national committee and its subsidiary organizations.

Response from the labor press of America, which was asked to lend its columns and influence to the huge job of putting a million men to work, has been, particularly gratifying, Chairman Woll said.

Illinois Favors Bills For Jobless Relief

Nearly Nineteen Million Dollars Appropriated by State Legislature for Assistance of the needy Unemployed.

Springfield, Ill.—The Illinois legislature passed and Gov. Emerson approved five bills to provide immediate unemployment relief.

The bills authorize the issuance of $18,875,000 state tax anticipation notes, which it was said Chicago bankers would buy. The notes would be paid off either with a bond issue of $20,000,000 or an increase in the state tax rate next year.

The bill establishing the emergency relief commission to administer the fund declares that "because of the degree of unemployment and the necessity of furnishing assistance to the destitute without delay and particularly during the winter months, an emergency exists and this act shall take effect upon its passage."

The fund, which is available until March 1, 1933, will be administered through counties, townships, and any other municipal corporation charged by law with the duty of poor relief and by other local relief agencies.

Chicago's Destitute Increase to 500,000

Chicago.—In Chicago the destitution resulting from unemployment is almost beyond description. The joint emergency relief fund of Cook county, of which Victor Olander, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, is a member, in a statement on the situation, said:

"In Chicago, more than 120,000 families, consisting of about 500,000 individuals, are now on the relief rolls. The number is steadily increasing. Approximately 12,000 homeless and destitute men are being housed in the shelters provided by the joint emergency relief fund.

Relief Funds Too Small.

"In the drive for funds last October and November, a total of $10,500,000 was provided for by private subscription, much of which was in the form of pledges on the part of workers to donate one day's pay a month to the fund.

"It was hoped that this would suffice through the winter, but the cry for help has become so great that it became necessary to ask for the subscriptions in advance of the months for which they were due.

Landlords Evict Jobless.

"A few weeks ago the amount available had dwindled to the point where it became necessary for the relief agencies to cease paying rent for the destitute, with the result that evictions throughout the city began to increase rapidly.

"It is surely time for action by the state legislature, not only in mercy and justice to the hungry and destitute, but for the sake of the good name and indeed the very safety of the city itself."

Cardozo, Liberal, Named for U. S. Supreme Court

President Sends Appointment of Eminent New York Jurist to Senate, as National Approval Is Voiced.

Washington, Feb. 18.—Benjamin Nathan Cardozo, chief judge of the New York court of appeals, the state's highest court, has been nominated by President Hoover to be an associate justice of the supreme court of the United States to succeed Justice Oliver Wendall Holmes, who retired last month. Cardozo is nationally recognized as a great jurist with strong liberal leanings and in the opinion of those who urged his appointment, he will carry out the tradition of liberal thought set by Justice Holmes.

From the moment the retirement of Justice Holmes was announced the demand has been general that the man appointed should be a man of the mental stature of Justice Holmes, one of the same "liberal" views, and one of comparable learning of the law. In the opinion of many who urged the appointment, Judge Cardozo possessed these qualifications.

Quick Action Expected.

The nomination of Judge Cardozo was sent to the senate and referred to the senate judiciary committee, whose chairman is Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, who expressed himself as highly pleased with the appointment. It is expected the committee will act without delay on the nomination and there is no question that it will be promptly approved by the senate.

Senators of both parties vied with each other in praising the nomination, as expressions of approval were received from all over the nation. Senator Blaine, of Wisconsin, said: "Judge Cardozo is a liberal and understands that an eighteenth century constitution, while made for all time, must conform to twentieth century civilization." Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, declared that he was sure the appointment would meet with the "Overwhelming approval of the country." Senator Wagner, of New York, said:

Holds Law Living Force.

"To Judge Cardozo the process of judging is never the routine repetition of sterile precedents. In his mind the law is a living force, growing, developing always, clearing new tracks through the confusing maze of changing conditions to reach the goal of justice."

Judge Cardozo was born in New York in 1870. He studied at Columbia, Yale, New York university, the University of Michigan and Harvard.

He was admitted to the New York bar in 1891 and since then has served both on the state supreme court and the court of appeals bench.

OVER EIGHT MILLIONS VAINLY SEEK CHANCE TO EARN DAILY BREAD

Conference Declares Real National Emergency Has Been Reached.

HUNGER AND DISTRESS DESCRIBED AS WORST IN NATION'S HISTORY

Congress Provides Billions for Business Reconstruction. Must Not Refuse to Help America's Destitute, Says Statement of International Union Chiefs Adopted at Momentous Gathering.

Washington, Feb. 18.—Text of the appeal delivered in person to President Hoover and congressional leaders by more than 100 international union officials last week follows:

A real national emergency has been reached.

It calls for profound consideration and the application of practical remedies.

The destructive consequences of widespread, continuous, distressing unemployment have reached an acute stage.

Hunger and Distress.

Relief of a most definite and adequate nature must be supplied in order to relieve hunger, distress and human suffering.

The economic causes responsible for the creation of this situation have been operating for several years.

As a result industry is to a great extent paralyzed.

The financial structure of the nation is greatly impaired, credit facilities have become inadequate, confidence has been destroyed and a state of mind bordering on hysteria prevails throughout the land.

Workers Suffer Most.

The great working population of the nation and those dependent upon them have suffered most of all.

Financial losses and impairment in credit values are not as disastrous in effect as the losses which millions of working men and women have sustained as a result of unemployment.

Life and living, in the fullest sense of these terms, depend absolutely upon the exercise of the right to work and upon the enjoyment of the opportunity to earn an income required to maintain a decent American standard of living.

Purpose of Conference.

Because the representatives of organized labor are thoroughly conscious of the acute suffering and distress which prevails in all communities, we have assembled in Washington, the capital city of the nation.

Over Eight Million Jobless.

The gravity of the situation made such a deep impression upon the executive council and the representatives of the American Federation of Labor that they deemed it imperative to meet, consider the emergency which has arisen and given expression to the demands of the unemployed, numbering more than eight million, that work opportunities be created and that relief, so urgently needed, be immediately supplied.

Conference Represents Labor.

We meet, therefore, as representatives of labor, clothed with authority to speak for many millions of organized workers affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and to speak for other voiceless workers who, because of their disorganized state, have no medium of expression.

Unemployed Without Resources.

The workers who have suffered much and who have endured hardships and distress for several years have exhausted their savings, have reached the limit of their resources and are facing the future with impaired morale and physical deterioration.

Labor Contributes Millions.

Many members of organized labor who are working have been and are contributing a large percentage of their earnings to assist their fellow workers who are unemployed.

Others are sharing the very limited amount of work available.

In these ways many millions of dollars have been contributed by the members of organized labor toward helping their associate fellow workers who have been unemployed during the last two years.

They will continue to render all assistance possible and to do all that lies within their power to relieve human distress and intense suffering.

But the need is too great.

Local Relief Inadequate.

The number of unemployed is constantly increasing.

More than eight million, three hundred thousand were suffering from enforced idleness during the month of January.

Local relief agencies have found the task too great.

Adequate relief cannot be and is not being supplied.

Men, women and children are hungry, cold and undernourished.

They are appealing for food, warmth and shelter.

Children Suffer Hunger and Cold.

The tragic feature of this uncivilized, inhuman condition is reflected in the fact that millions of children are suffering from hunger and cold every day and that many thousands are unable to attend school because of a lack of food, clothing and shoes.

The entire resources of the nation must be brought into action and must be utilized in order to meet and deal adequately with this emergency.

The local communities, the states and the nation must all do their part, responding in full measure to the demands of the occasion.

Misery Ignores State Lines.

It does not seem reasonable for the federal government to deny relief to men, women and children suffering from unemployment when it is clearly evident that local and state relief agencies are unable to meet the requirements of the situation.

Those who are hungry and are appealing for food cannot draw the fine line of distinction between relief supplied by local and state relief agencies and relief supplied by the federal government.

They know that every community is a part of our national life and as such all are a part of the nation's family.

The indistinct lines which separate communities and states are not discernible in the midst of nationwide misery and woe.

This fact was recognized during the great war emergency and it should be recognized during the existing emergency.

Federal Relief Necessary.

It is upon this basis that we appeal to the congress of the United States for an adequate appropriation of an immediate sum sufficient to meet the demands of the existing economic situation.

We make this appeal in the name and in behalf of the hungry suffering men, women and children whose plight is directly traceable to unemployment.

The masses of the people will feel that congress has utterly failed to measure up to its duties and responsibilities if, while in session as it now is, during a period of great national emergency, it fails to appropriate funds to supply food, clothing and shelter to millions of suffering, starving people.

Billions Given to Business.

The billions of dollars which congress has provided for the purpose of aiding banks, corporations and business institutions will stand out in sharp, deprecating contrast if congress fails to promptly help the needy and the hungry.

The huge sums thus appropriated to aid capital cannot and will not feed and clothe hungry people.

Surely congress cannot afford to subject itself to the charge that it speedily appropriated billions for capital and nothing for the hungry.

Human Needs Come First.

Human values and human needs should be given first rather than secondary consideration.

No explanation can be made to hungry people and their sympathetic friends which would satisfy them as to why congress voted billions to aid banks and corporations and would refuse to appropriate even a moderate sum to be used for the purpose of assisting the states and communities in supplying food, shelter and clothing to patriotic, loyal citizens who are suffering from unemployment.

We do not consider the appropriation of federal relief to supply food, clothing and shelter in

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part V

I came that they may have life
JOHN X:10.

I. Jesus' Social Optimism.

Jesus realized and lived the vital truth that this is God's world, and out of this inner consciousness that this is God's world and men are God's children was developed His spirit of social optimism.

WM. L. MOSS

What is meant by "His spirit of social optimism" can best be explained by saying that He knew every man and woman had an innate, inborn sense of responsibility; that once awakened, this latent sense of responsibility dwelling in men would function as surely as any of the other generic attributes of humankind. Men hated because they had not been instilled with a knowledge of the supreme beauty of love; men killed because they were not sufficiently impressed with the value of every single life in the Father's eyes; men demanded social deference and expected others to serve them because they had not been taught that he who is humble and he who serves is greater than the proud and those who demand that others wait upon their desires because the humble ones and the servers are nearer the pattern of the perfect man. Replace these baser impulses in a man's mind and heart with a feeling of love, mercy and justice and the man will have become fashioned anew—he has undergone a new birth, regenerated is the term by which we describe this transformation in men's lives.

In His ministry Jesus barred no social type from His presence. Works of healing among both the rich and poor, Gentile and Jew, testify to Jesus' spirit of social optimism. He did not believe that any man had gone so far along the road to sin that he could not be brought back to his senses and respectability. Broadly speaking, "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth," but rather in his willingness to do the Father's will and serve his fellowmen. No matter how degraded or indifferent a man might be, Jesus felt he could be raised to a realization of life's responsibilities and develop a willingness to serve.

The question to Jesus was not the condition of the man; it all depended on his receptivity to "faith." This faith Jesus made one with love for the Father.

What Next!

Slag from lead blast furnaces formerly useless, is now converted into heat-insulating "wool," employed as pipe covering for insulating cements and fillers. Advantages claimed for the new product are very low conductivity, light weight, vermin and fire-proof properties.

PAINS QUIT COMING

"When I was a girl, I suffered periodically with terrible pains in my back and sides. Often I would bend almost double with the intense pain. This would last for hours and I could get no relief.

"I tried almost everything that was recommended to me, but found nothing that would help until I began taking Cardui. My mother thought it would be good for me, so she got a bottle of Cardui and started me taking it. I soon improved. The bad spells quit coming. I was soon in normal health."

Employers Should End Unemployment

The scourge of unemployment does not end its disastrous results with the dwarfed lives of the eight million and more jobless workers and their millions of dependents. It extends to every line of business activity through the decreased pay rolls. The wages loss automatically shrinks the market for every commodity and all services.

Labor has adequate remedies for this economic dislocation. Labor demands that those who own and control our industrial, commercial and financial establishments stabilize the situation on the basis of employment for every employable person. This can only be done through the shortening of the work day and the work week. It has been statistically ascertained that the universal seven-hour day and the five-day week would make work for all of our eight million unemployed. They have a moral right to this work. But because those who own and control our business establishments own and control work opportunities, the moral right of the jobless to jobs may be denied, and up to the present has been denied by our industrial, financial and commercial dictators.

Labor's further remedy for the economic dislocation is the demand that the owners and controllers of our business life maintain wage payments sufficiently large to turn all workers into large consumers, with larger purchasing power and still shorter hours as increased efficiency make them possible.

Labor's plan for economic stabilization also does away with the need for either unemployment insurance or unemployment reserves.

In fact, labor cannot contemplate a permanent system of production with one group of workers employed full time with high living standards and another group totally unemployed with living standards based on either near-starvation unemployment insurance, unemployment reserves, or charity relief.

Labor refuses to visualize a system of production operated either solely or largely for the benefit of those who own it. Labor believes that the capitalist system can be humanized for the benefit of society as a whole. Labor declares that the first step in this humanization is the adoption of a work week and work day short enough to put all the jobless to work and the adjustment of the work day in the future so as to provide jobs for all the employable.

Labor admits that this policy is a revolutionary one: But it is a peaceable revolution that will stand out in the annals of mankind as one of the great forward steps taken in the interest of society as a whole.

A tremendous responsibility now rests with the industrial autocrats who, through their ownership of industry and consequently of the opportunities to work, have the power to decree shorter hours of labor and end unemployment.

An Issue of Fact

The matter of direct relief for the unemployed, by congressional action, is being debated as though it were a matter of phrases.

The discussion turns continually on whether or not this action will constitute a "dole."

Comfortable old gentlemen sitting on cushioned chairs may not be able to conceive it in any other form.

But the issue, as faced by the millions of Americans—including those who, for the present, are able to secure a food supply—is an issue of facts.

* * * *

It has become a notorious thing, that the gentleman who represented President Hoover before the senate committee, Mr. Walter Gifford, of the president's unemployment commission, admitted that he had no data on which to base his conclusion that there was no need for federal relief.

But—is it a fact:

That children in Maryland Schools are fainting in their seats from lack of food?

If that is true, the local and state relief systems have broken down there. And the statement was made directly before the senate committee by a Maryland superintendent of schools.

* * * *

Much attention is being paid to "budget balance."'

Is it not about time to learn that budget balances after all may be facilitated in the long run by a balancing of the human factors?

How can a national budget be balanced, when the nation's children faint from hunger?

Coal Mine Accidents

Coal mining continued to take its toll in human lives in 1931, according to the report of the U. S. bureau of mines.

The miners produced 438,000,000 tons. In connection with mining this quantity, 1,430 men were killed by accidents. This amounts to one miner killed for every 300,000 tons of coal. In 1930, one miner was killed for every 260,000 tons mined.

Although the figures for 1931 represent an increase of about 40,000 tons per fatality over the previous year, it is admitted by those familiar with the situation that most coal mine accidents, fatal and non-fatal, are caused by the refusal of employers to install and administer up-to-date and efficient accident prevention systems and devices.

Rock-dusting of mines is claimed by experts to be an almost sure prevention of mine explosions, but despite efforts of the federal and state mine bureaus there are many mine owners and managers who do not use this recognized type of accident prevention.

In the last analysis, the question of profit seems still to dominate the officials of many mining companies. If they can be persuaded that it costs less to prevent accidental deaths and mutilations, they will readily install accident prevention devices, systems and regulations. Otherwise they will permit their employes to be mutilated and killed.

This opinion is confirmed by the comment made by Mr. Scott Turner, director of the U. S. Bureau of Mines, on the alleged gradual awakening of mine officials to the importance of mine safety. Mr. Turner says that one of the elevents in this awakening is a growing realization on the part of mine executives of the possibilities of greater economy in production through the prevention of accidents.

Mr. Turner's observation is an indictment, undoubtedly deserved, of the jungle psychology which animates some mine operators. "Greater economy in production" is an employer's phrase to describe greater profits.

If labor controlled the mines, the safety of the miners would be the most important thing in mining policy. Regardless of whether the cost of production was higher or lower, protection of the miners from accidents would be guaranteed. Regardless of whether profits were larger or small or nothing, labor would see to it that every dollar necessary to safeguard the miners from mutilation or death was expended.

It is very regrettable that many mine owners and mine operators continue to regard their employes as of so little importance that increased profits must be exhibited to them before they will consent to apply the principles of mine safety.

Would Be a Backward Step

(An Editorial in the Nashville Labor Advocate.)

Every now and then the suggestion is made by some self-appointed savior of Tennessee that we return to the old boss-ridden convention system of nominating candidates for office.

This would be a backward step. The convention system was tried in the balance and found wanting.

No one will claim perfection for their present primary system, but it is an advantage over the old convention system that grew so corrupt and so thoroughly the instrument of special interest that the people lost even the indirect right to choose the nominees of their parties.

Short is the memory of the man who has forgotten how many weak and unsuitable men were raised to higher offices and how the convention delegates became the tools of the bosses after they were elected by the people.

The chief fault of all primaries is that all citizens do not vote, and what is worse still, all votes are not counted as cast. Voting machines will eliminate the latter evil.

It is doubtful if the primary plan will ever be entirely perfected, but it is certainly a wonderful improvement over the old convention system.

A distrust in the people and self-interest lies at the back of the return to the old convention plan.

An amusing argument in this connection is that the convention advocates always claim the system as having the approval of the founders of our constitution. This is far from the truth.

Party conventions were unheard of as far as the framers of the constitution were concerned. They, however, did not feel that they had written a perfect document or an ideal form of government, and so they made ample provisions for amendments to meet the changing conditions of time.

The primary system was the answer to the demand to improve the old convention system. It gives the people greater opportunity to choose their officers, and this must not be taken away, Prof. Gus W. Dyer to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Big Six" Cares for Its Own

By AUSTIN HEWSON

President New York Typographical Union No. 6, in the Current Issue American Federationist.

By voting in December, 4 to 1, in favor of continuing its present form of unemployment relief, New York Typographical union ("Big Six") made clear its unswerving determination to forestall suffering among its members during the current depression.

This relief takes the form of an 8 per cent assessment on earnings of printers employed in book and job offices and one day's work a week, which an employed member gives to an unemployed member in the newspaper plants.

When it is considered that printers, paying this assessment over the eighteen months that it has been in effect, have contributed to their fellows money that would have purchased automobiles, suits of clothes by the dozen, radios, vacuum cleaners, electric refrigerators, things that all men's wives want to possess, one gets an idea of the sacrifice these workers have made. One also gets an idea of the explaining that has been necessary to make wives see the need for such self-denial. Be it said to the credit of typographical wives that they have shown thoroughbred class in grasping these explanations. That must be true or this latest vote on the relief plan would not have carried by the largest majority it has gained in the several referendums held. In short, far from weakening in their spirit of helpfulness, members are growing stronger in their will to see this thing through.

The employed members of "Big Six" have given out cash and working time in the amount of $2,276,000 in eighteen months, and will have given out $3,000,000 by March 31, when the term just voted on expires. The union's total membership is 11,000 and its unemployed now drawing monetary relief number about 1,400. Days of work given out by the newspaper printers have passed a total of 114,000, and will reach 142,000 by March 31.

Naturally, unemployed printers greatly prefer working time to cash relief. It is comforting to one's pride to work for the money received. However, in book and job shops, the individual printer can not always be relieved by a substitute with generally satisfactory results because his work is too frequently of a specialized kind; hence the necessity for the assessment on earnings, which is levied only against men who are not in a position to give out a day's employment.

Printers who receive no working time in a given week are given cash relief in the amount of $18 for men of four years' membership in the local union; $16 for men of two years' membership, and $12 for men of one year's membership. If a printer gets one day's work in a week he receives, in addition, as a four-year member, $12 cash relief, or if he gets two days' work, $5. This relief is scaled down for printers of shorter membership terms in the local union.

The fresh manifestation of the union printer's belief that the trade union owes protection to its members even beyond the important matters of wage adjustments and decent working conditions has astonished many students of social economics. While a powerful New York unemployment relief committee has been beating the bushes, in co-operation with established welfare agencies, expert fund raisers and a newspaper and radio ballyhoo of unexampled proportions, to raise $18,000,000 for relief of jobless men in a city of six millions, this group of 11,000 working men have gone quietly and efficiently to work to take care of their own.

In the Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs there hangs an oil painting depicting a group of derelicts shivering in a wintry rain on a Thames embankment bench. The title of this is "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" The International Typographical union bought this picture because it illustrates graphically the philosophy of the organized printer. Typographical Union No. 6, as a local of the International union, sends its aged or sick members to this wonderful home when this is necessary.

The printer began early to experiment with relief measures. Before the year 1800 a number of promising local organizations of the printing craft in America had gone on the rocks in battles between the "alimoners" and the younger members. These early unions borrowed ideas from the craft "burial societies," common in Europe at that time. As not infrequently happened in the early days of insurance, the older members realized the necessity for increased benefits as age advanced upon them and came to view benefit provisions as more important even than improvements in wages and working conditions. Younger members leaned just as far in the other direction, with the result that young craftsmen finally declined to join organizations which took much in the form of dues and promised them little return until the remote time when death or old age would make them eligible for benefits.

Later organizations of printers succeeded in keeping benefit plans within bounds. By the middle of the century scattered printers' unions attained sufficient strength to form a national organization, which became the International Typographical union and has existed continuously since then. New York City gave birth to the first of the printers' unions, with none other than Horace Greeley, renowned publicist, as its first president, and, as the chief publishing and printing center of the country, has played a large part in the history of typographical unionism.

Whether the unemployment relief work undertaken by "Big Six" should be emulated in other craft organizations is a matter to be determined by the leaders and workers in those unions in the light of their circumstances and experiences. It can only be said for the New York Typographical union that its members take great pride and comfort in the results of their humanitarian efforts.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

THE crisis in the history of the Knights of Labor, mentioned at the close of last week's article, came in 1886. An epidemic of strikes spread over the entire United States in the early part of this year, many of which were conducted by the Knights, and it was due to their participation in a few strikes that caused the public to connect them with practically every strike being staged at this time.

As a culmination of the "strike fever" then raging, the employes of the Third Avenue railway in New York City, against the advice of the national leaders of the Knights, went out on strike, and violent clashes with the police followed. The bitterness engendered by this conflict between the railway strikers and the police rapidly spread to Chicago and on May 4, 1886, at a mass meeting being held in Haymarket Square the police, emulating the recent example of the New York law officers, ill-advisedly attempted to disperse the gathering.

The now famous "Haymarket Massacre" resulted.

Terence V. Powderly, Grand Master Workman of the Knights, and the more conservative leaders began to plead with the radical element in the ranks of the Knights to desist from their headlong program of violence and especially to sever their alliance with government-hating anarchists, most of whom were foreigners and of which Chicago was then one of the largest headquarters.

That many of the members of the Knights agreed with Powderly and the conservatives is illustrated by the fact that in 1888 the society lost 300,000 from its membership roll.

CAST-OFF CLOTHING ASKED FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

Washington. — President Hoover's organization on unemployment relief stressed the necessity of increased effort in collecting discarded and new clothing for the jobless in a bulletin for national circulation.

The persistent refusal of American business men to employ the eight million jobless workers has not only resulted in diminishing the supply of clothing available for relief, but is also forcing many communities that previously have not felt the need of supplying clothing to the unemployed to face the problem.

A number of organizations like the Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America, the bulletin points out, have regular departments for collecting discarded clothing, rehabilitating it and selling it at normal prices.

SUMMARY OF REPORT OF DR. E. DUNBAR NEWELL AND ROY J. MORTON, EXPERTS APPOINTED TO DETERMINE THE IMMEDIATE NECESSITY FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF SEWERS IN BRAINERD, BEING THE FIFTEENTH WARD OF THE CITY OF CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

The Brainerd section of Chattanooga, constituting the Fifteenth ward, was annexed to the city Oct. 1, 1929. The section includes approximately three square miles, lying east of Mission Ridge and, therefore, not capable of sewerage to the existing sewerage system of Chattanooga. In the area there are at present 1,225 and 1,290 houses with a population of about 6,000. The topography of the area is hilly, with steep slopes and in general covered with impervious clay and chert material. It is almost entirely residential in character, being closely built up with good to high-class residences. City water is available in all parts of the area, and almost universally used.

Plans Proposed for Brainerd Sewerage.

Immediately following the annexation of the Brainerd area preliminary plans were prepared for the progressive, step by step, construction of a complete sewerage system and disposal works to serve the entire area. This plan anticipated the immediate sewerage of the Brainerd area and permits future extensions to include adjoining areas as necessary if and when annexed. At the present time the disposal works and the main outfall sewer serving parts of old Mission boulevard, Sequoia drive and Brainerd road have been completed. According to detailed estimates by the city engineer the proposed $200,000 bond issue will extend the system so as to serve the more thickly populated area of Brainerd by providing for construction of 9.35 miles of submains and 9.79 miles of laterals, a total of 19.12 miles of additional sewerage.

Present Methods of Waste Disposal.

At the time of annexation there was no public sewerage in Brainerd and at the present time, on the basis of connections made, it is less than 6 per cent sewered. The remainder must dispose of all wastes on the able and in use consist of septic tanks, cesspools and a few outdoor privies. Water flush individual premises. Methods of disposal avail- closets and other plumbing fixtures are generally used, and many of the residences are of a class in which the amount of water used is large. Therefore, there is a large amount of overflow sewage from septic tanks and cesspools. Disposal of this overflow has been attempted, usually by underground absorption methods. In a great many instances, due to failure of absorption systems, or lack of sufficient area or suitable soil for this method, sewage is discharged directly to street gutters or adjoining lots. Satisfactory performance of absorption systems is obtained at all it is usually only by means of frequent and expensive repairs.

Opinions of National and International Authorities Relative to Necessity for Sewerage.

The consensus of opinion among outstanding national and international authorities on public health and sanitation is to the effect that disposal of wastes on individual premises is not satisfactory or economical in thickly populated areas, having public water supplies available, and that failure to provide sewerage in such areas will result in danger to public health, undue expense to the individual owner, failure to obtain full benefit from the water supply and nuisance from odor and bad appearance. Examples of such opinions are cited later in this report.

Opinions of Local Officials and Authorities Relative to Sewerage of Brainerd.

The consensus of opinion among local public health officials, other city officials and interested citizens, who have made an intelligent study of the situation, is to the effect that the insanitary disposal of human filth in all parts of the Brainerd area is a menace to health and an offensive nuisance. City health department officials have stated in writing and orally that many complaints of offensive nuisances in Brainerd are received, even during the winter months, and all are fully justified.

Personal Observation of Committee During Survey of Area.

On Jan. 27, 1932, the committee, signators to this report, made a field inspection of conditions in a large part of the area. Speaking generally, it was found that in many instances underground disposal has failed, despite the fact that expensive repairs are made sometimes as frequently as every six months. The soil of many lawns is saturated with sewage. These filthy wastes flow over the surface of the ground and in the gutters of the streets, readily accessible to flies, mosquitoes and animals. They afford a constant menace to all, particularly children at play. Even in this winter month odor nuisances were apparent and it is reasonable to conclude that during hot weather conditions in many places would be wall-nigh intolerable.

Specific instances of bad conditions found are as follows:

Bellflower Circle.

One bank cleaned out and disposal system repaired three times in twenty-one months. Tank on adjoining lot repaired within past six months. Lots small for individual disposal and about half have to use front lawn because of direction of slope.

Tunnel Boulevard.

Several houses discharge to gutter, either by direct connection or seepage through soil. Lots very small and entirely inadequate for disposal field.

Germantown Road and Sunnyside School.

Sewage from school overflows to small drainage branch, which leads to street gutters. The point of overflow is less than 100 feet from school building, with quantities of sewage solids and offensive odors evident. This drainage follows unpaved gutter several blocks. At least a dozen school children were observed playing in the water of this gutter, soiling their hands, feet and clothes in this contaminated drainage.

Woodlawn Drive.

Several places discharging sewage to street gutter in front of houses either by direct connection or by seepage or overflow. Strong sewage odors evident in vicinity of these discharges.

Miscellaneous Observations.

A number of other streets, names not listed, were traversed in an automobile, with close attention to evidence of insanitary sewage disposal. Only a few privies were observed in any part of the area. In several places there was evidence of discharge, while in a number of others there was evidence of corrections. Brainerd school is now taken care of satisfactorily by a connection with the new sewer.

Conclusions.

The committee has made a study of the necessity for sewerage in the Brainerd area, and on the basis of recorded experiences by those dealing with similar communities elsewhere, a review of records, statements and past experience having a bearing on sanitary conditions in Brainerd, and personal knowledge of sanitation in general and by field inspection of Brainerd in particular, have reached the following conclusion:

Extension of the sewerage system to serve the thickly populated area of the Brainerd district is an immediate necessity in order to obtain (a) protection of public health; (b) economy of sewage disposal; (c) convenience and habitability of residences and (d) maintenance of property values.

The said experts in their report say that there is a present danger to the public health and that this danger cannot be completely eliminated except by the construction of the sewers in Brainerd.

The report of Dr. E. Dunbar Nowell, a physician of this city, and Roy J. Morton, director of the division of sanitary engineering for the department of health of the state of Tennessee, is now on file in my office, subject to public inspection.

This Feb. 13, 1932.

JOHN C. HIBBETS,
City Auditor.

SPECIAL SESSION URGED.

The California State Federation of Labor, at the recent meeting of its executive council in San Francisco, again urged on Gov. Rolph the need of a special session of the legislature to deal with unemployment relief.

NOTICE!

Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council will meet Monday night at 7:30 o'clock, in regular session. All delegates are requested and expected to be present, as matters affecting every local union will come before the meeting for discussion.

The Voice of Labor Speaks.

Quite frequently the voice of labor makes itself heard, politically, and sometimes it is embarrassingly loud. Such was the case in the appointment by President Hoover of Judge Parker to the supreme court. Justification of labor's stand in that matter was borne out recently in a talk Judge Parker made in which he denounced "the political system which allows certain organizations to defeat the appointment of competent men to public offices." And now the voice of labor is being heard in our neighboring city of Atlanta, being directed against Mayor James L. Key. Petitions asking for the recall of the youthful mayor have been filed with the city clerk by the Atlanta Federation of Trades. A. Steve Nance, president of the federation, states the petitions are signed by 5,366 registered voters, while the necessary amount to force a recall election is only 4,997. It yet remains to be seen how successful labor will be in the recall election, but if Atlanta labor has a real grievance against the mayor he might as well follow the example of Mayor Jimmie Walker, who "goes on a vacation" when unpleasant things occur. Only, in the case of Mayor Key, he need not buy a return ticket.

Kentucky Miners Can't Protest.

When an officer was killed in a clash between miners and men who were guarding a struck Kentucky mine, state troops were called out to help run down the men responsible for the killing and to prevent any further clashes between the miners and guards. A news dispatch from Barbourville, Ky., tells us that the state troops are now being used to keep the miners from holding a demonstration to protest against the slaying of an organizer. Evidently the troops are to be used only to protect the interests of the mine owners. The rights of the miners are to be disregarded. They are merely slaves and have no rights.

Mobile Papers Merge.

Probably the majority of the existing unemployment in the printing industry has been caused by the merger and consolidation of newspapers in various cities throughout the nation. The latest of these mergers occurred in Mobile this week when Frederick I. Thompson, publisher of the Birmingham News, sold his morning and afternoon Mobile newspapers to a holding corporation, the Mobile Daily Newspapers, Inc. The afternoon News-Item loses its identity entirely, being absorbed by the Press. And a Sunday edition will be a combination of the former Sunday editions of the Register, Press and News-Item. This merger will put thirty or forty men in the unemployment ranks.

Brainerd and Red Bank Get Fares Reduced.

The Tennessee Electric Power company is conducting an "experiment" with the citizens of Brainerd and Red Bank to see if it is possible for the company to make as much money on a 10-cent bus fare as it does on a 15-cent bus fare. The power company is a public utility, and it is the duty of the company to co-operate with the public willingly and not have to be forced into it. If the independent buses had not been started the power company would probably have never listened to the pleas of the public that bus fares be reduced. The fact that the company has agreed to reduce the fares at all, even as an "experiment," shows that it hates to see those 10-cent pieces going into the pockets of the independent bus operators. A public utility is a public servant, and a large corporation such as the power company evidently intends to remain a permanent servant of the public and as such should try to merit the public's patronage. However, servants need reprimanding sometimes, and the dose of it handed to the power company by the independent bus operators seems to have had a good effect.

Union Printers Help Fellow Members.

An article in a local daily tells us that last week the members of Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89 voted, 42 to 31, to assess themselves 1 per cent on all earnings over $20 a week for a period of three months for the purpose of helping to pay unemployment benefits to members who are out of work. This union has been paying unemployment benefits to its members for more than two years and during that time has paid out several thousand dollars to its unfortunate members. Only twice during that time have the local printers found it necessary to tax themselves for short periods in order to carry on this method of unemployment relief. What happens to the non-union printer when he becomes a member of the great army of unemployed? Do his fellow non-union printers who are fortunate enough to be at work offer to help him live? No! He must get by the best he can. But the union printer helps his unfortunate fellow member, not in the form of charity, but in the form of benefits from his union.

Adios, by heck!

PLANS TO AID IDLE.

Columbia Typographical union No. 101, Washington, D. C., has voted an assessment of 70 cents per member for four months for the benefit of unemployed members. Typographical Union No. 30, Grand Rapids, Mich., has changed the five-day week established two months ago for the relief of its unemployed members and adopted in its place a 5 per cent weekly assessment on all members working forty or more hours a week.

Brown Is Blue

By H. F. B.

Gov. Dick Russell, of Georgia, doesn't go far enough in advocating longer cotton dresses for women and girls. They could continue to wear their old clothes, as us poor workmen are doing, and fairly boom the price of cotton if each of them would wear merely a cotton petticoat!

What's the matter with radio? That's easy! There are merely too many radio announcers, radio tenors (who cannot sing), saxophones, and blues singers, not to mention sales talk.

That's what's the matter with the world today! The constant, never-ending broadcasting of "Blues," till everybody at last succumbed to the effect of the propaganda and got discouraged and blue. Who can blame 'em?

* * *

"Laugh, and the world laughs with you!" Sing the blues, day and night, continuously, and who do you expect to have any confidence and faith in you, or trust you to be able to pull through? It's want of confidence, especially in the banks, which seems to be causing all the trouble.

* * *

And—maybe the banks and the bankers (who sold us many millions in foreign bonds!) have only themselves to blame for that lack of confidence in them! Also did too many of them, in our state, have too much confidence in some financiers we might mention! Hence hoarding here, Ha!

* * *

This is not a mere depression! It is a d—d deep, deep hole in the ground, and we are in it—and how!

* * *

P. S. Tell us a joke, for Hoover's sake, that we may at least smile in our misery, if we may have forgotten how to laugh!

Examples of "jokes" (?) The republican party really believes that our fair country is still prosperous! And Henry Horton believes that the state of Tennessee has not been damaged by his administration. (Now laugh, darn you!)

When is a war not a war? Ans. When Japan undertakes to "protect" herself from the extremely dangerous aggression of the Chinese in Shanghai, and make them buy Japanese goods, whether they like it or not! Ask me an easy one.

The American dollar goes much farther than it did. And faster, much faster. We find it utterly impossible to even keep in sight of it!

* * *

I lose my self-respect, initiative, pride, etc., etc., just as much when I have to go to the city fire hall and tell 'em I am hungry as I would if I got $1.30 per week from the government after six weeks' or months' investigation, and I am not dead of starvation when I get it!

Japan seems much like the republican party—it has bitten off more than she can chew!

That's all. I hope you liked it!

Estate Tax Proposed To Yield Half Billion

Congressman Ramseyer Joins with AFL to Tax Large Fortunes and Check Wealth Concentration.

Washington.—Representative Ramseyer, of Iowa, recommended an estate tax to produce $500,000,000 of revenue in the hearings held by the committee on ways and means of the house of representatives.

He said an estate tax is the most equitable one developed and tends to check the strong tendency toward concentration of the nation's wealth in the hands of a few who did little or nothing to earn it.

Supported by A. F. of L.

The estate tax was strongly stressed by the 1931 convention of the American Federation of Labor, and urged by William Green, president of the federation, in a recent statement to the chairman of the committee.

In support of his position in favor of a heavier estate tax, Representative Ramseyer said that about one-fifth of the national wealth, or $8,000,000,000 to $9,000,000,000, devolves each year. His tax plan, he claimed, would raise about $300,000,000 more for the federal government than does the present estate tax.

British Tax Three Times Larger.

If rates proportionate to the British estate taxes were imposed, the revenue would be about $1,600,000,000 a year.

He said he presented his plan as a permanent source of revenue, not an emergency measure. He urged that the estate tax go at least as low as $50,000 estates, with rates ranging from 1 per cent to 45 per cent.

ATLANTA LABOR PROTESTS WILKERSON'S APPOINTMENT

Atlanta, Ga.—Strong protests against the appointment of Judge James H. Wilkerson to the bench of the United States circuit court of appeals will be forwarded to President Hoover by the Atlanta Federation of Trades and Atlanta Lodge No. 1, International Association of Machinists.

Resolutions opposing Wilkerson's confirmation by the senate on the ground that he is antagonistic in his attitude toward workers, and an advocate of the use of injunctions in labor disputes, were adopted by the machinists' organization and were given unanimous indorsement by the Federation of Trades.

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

MORE ABOUT

EIGHT MILLIONS

this great emergency to millions of starving men, women and children as a dole.

Distress in Large Cities.

The local relief agencies in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit have found the task too great.

For instance, in New York 250,000 families are in immediate need of relief while 100,000 are receiving assistance.

In Philadelphia the number depending on relief has risen from 3,000 in December, 1930, to 48,000 in December, 1931.

Philadelphia estimates its need at $6,000,000 beyond that raised and there is no more money in sight.

Funds raised from private sources will be exhausted by May 1.

In Chicago relief funds will be exhausted by the 15th of February.

Eviction cases in that city average 250 per day.

In Cleveland the local relief funds are practically exhausted, while the need for help has substantially increased.

Millions Suffer in Isolated Towns.

While the larger cities are overwhelmed with the problem of meeting minimum relief requirements and have funds raised for that specific purpose there are millions living in isolated towns and villages remotely situated from the larger cities who have no organized relief agencies to assist them.

Community Chests Inadequate.

Only about 40,000,000 persons, or 32 per cent of our population, live within reach of relief organizations such as community chests.

Sixty-eight per cent live in small towns or country districts where no organized relief agencies exist with the exception of the county poor boards.

Needy Outside of Relief Zones.

There are some 60,000,000 persons residing outside the zones where relief agencies exist.

The vast majority of them are working people.

Many of those living in these isolated sections reside in mining districts, oil field communities, textile mill villages and other small villages where the banks have failed, where small industries have collapsed and where the need for help is intense.

Protest Meetings and Hunger Marches.

A significant development of the very serious situation which exists is clearly evident in the larger cities where large crowds of unemployed accumulate, where protest meetings are held, in the hunger marches which have been and are taking place, in the violence which occurs, in crime and in the accumulating wave of discontent and social unrest which is sweeping over the country.

Plight of Millions Is Shocking.

Therefore, we, the representatives of labor, fully informed of these deplorable conditions, receiving reports from our personal representatives who are in these sections and having first-hand information with reference to the economic and social needs of working people, appeal for help and assistance for them as well as for those who live in the larger cities.

The plight of these millions of people is shocking.

Drastic Means Imperative.

It is steadily and rapidly growing worse and unless some drastic means are taken to alleviate the situation the nation will suffer heavily in the destruction of physical, moral and mental values.

Congress Should Give Relief.

It is our solemn judgment that the time has arrived when the congress of the United States spond to the appeals of the hungry, assist in feeding men, women should arise to the occasion, reand children during this great emergency, just as our nation did when the cry for help came from starving people across the sea.

Always demanding the UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD is evidence that you are a real live member of organized labor.

RELIEF ALONE NOT ENOUGH, SOCIAL WORKERS DECLARE

Leaders in American Life Called Upon to Make Effort to Correct Basic Economic Evils by Sponsoring National Planning Program Designed to Increase Both Job Security and Masses' Buying Power.

New York, Feb. 17.—"Relief alone is but an unsatisfactory palliative for the economic and industrial evils which now afflict us," more than 2,700 social workers declare in a joint statement issued by the Family Welfare Association of America, whose 238 member agencies assisted approximately 4,000,000 individuals in 1931.

The 2,700 local board members and social workers pledge their best efforts towards the relief of unemployment, but with the reservation that "We are not content with palliative measures of relief, necessary as they may be, unless they are accompanied by a concerted and thoughtful attempt to rectify basic conditions."

Widespread distress in a land of plenty can only be met through careful planning on a national scale along lines appropriate to American life, the statement says.

"Therefore," the statement continues, "while we pledge our best efforts toward the relief of distress during the difficult period before us, we call upon the civic and industrial and financial leaders of America for concerted effort and wide participation in planning measures which, under proper safeguards in the public interest, may ultimately bring greater security in employment and a more adequate distribution of purchasing power among the masses of the American people."

According to Mrs. John M. Glenn, president of the association, a few of the responses to the statement revealed apprehension that family welfare agencies might be drawn into propaganda for specific measures of reform. A still larger number, however, felt that the resolution was not strong enough, and that specific remedial measures should be proposed.

Commenting upon these reactions, Mrs. Glenn said: "We have intentionally confined this statement to an expression of social philosophy, first because there would be no unanimity of opinion within our own group as to the specific economic and industrial measures which may be necessary; and, second, because the development of such measures is primarily the responsibility of other groups.

"This statement merely recognizes our obligation to keep the public continually informed of the disastrous effects of unemployment upon family life, with a view toward stimulating public interest in preventing in the future an economic situation which, for millions of people, is as great a disaster as the world war."

PAY CUTS TAKE BIG TOLL FROM INDUSTRY'S POCKETS

High Wages Flowed Back Into Capital Investments, But Hard Times Shake Out Little Investors, Depressing Security Values and Retarding Return of Prosperity.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, Feb. 17.—Killing the goose that laid the golden eggs is not a modern adage by any means, but old age has not relieved it of any of its intrinsic worth. Today it is just as applicable to some of Uncle Sam's economic troubles as it was on the day when it was first coined.

If business and industrial interests would recognize the truth that indiscriminate and heedless wage and salary cuts—made merely to keep up with the economic fashions of the day—is in fact "killing the goose that laid the golden eggs" of prosperity in the past, they would be much nearer to recovery from depression than they are by any of the signs that are visible now.

The simple fact that men out of jobs may be willing to work for less money than men who are employed is not a sound reason in business or economics for arbitrary slashes in wages or salaries. Somebody must pay the price for such heedless shortsightedness, and the economic truths of the past indicate pretty clearly just where the toll will eventually be taken—out of the pockets of business and industry itself.

Toll Taken from Business.

He who dances must pay the fiddler, said another wiseacre, and he who slashes wages and salaries without rhyme or reason must remember he is taking toll from every phase of his business—from its capital investment and fixed and permanent improvements down to the consumption of his goods and products in the markets of trade.

One of the lullabys we heard oftenest during the ten years of after-war prosperity was to the effect that a great silent revolution was taking place in the ownership of property, with a broader distribution of wealth—brought about by the creation of new millions of stock and bond holders.

Bankers and brokers chanted the chorus that more than eight billions of dollars in new securities were being sold in the United States each year, on the average, from 1919 to 1929.

For the first time, they sang, the small investors—those of small means and dependent upon salaries and wages—were being invited to come in and share in the ownership of these securities. And countless numbers of them did come in.

High Pay Made Prosperity.

There was more tickling and tingling music. Responsible financial interests told us that "the billions of dollars of government, state, municipal and corporation obligations, bonds and notes are not now owned and their income enjoyed chiefly by banks and a few wealthy individuals."

We were told "they are owned and the income received from them chiefly by millions of individuals who are the holders of bonds, life insurance policies, and savings bank accounts and stocks."

In other words, the wages of wage-earners and the salaries of unorganized employes were flowing back into the business and industry of the country in the form of capital investments for permanent and fixed improvements.

Between these uncounted "millions of investors" and their billions of dollars of investments lay the fundamental prosperity of the country; made possible for the first time by wage scales and salary levels that permitted people of moderate wealth and means to participate in the broad distribution of wealth and ownership of property.

Wages Returned as Capital.

The sale of securities on such vast scales each year was possible only because of the financial ability of small investors to participate in them—small as to individual purchases, but tremendous in the aggregate.

Good wages and good salaries did not go merely into more clothes, better furniture and new automobiles. They were returned also as capital to business and industry for use in a permanent and fixed manner.

The business depression has changed this condition. Part-time employment, or no employment at all, has compelled untold numbers of small investors to throw their securities on a depressed market and sell at greatly reduced prices. The financial start for them, which would have led eventually to independence and enabled them to retire in old age on the benefits of years of toil, has been swept away.

Little Fellow Shaken Out.

The little investor has been shaken out. And his holdings, dumped into the hands of banks and large investors, is one of the strongest factors in the depressed price lists of the security market.

Sluggishness in these securities today constitutes one of the serious difficulties in overcoming the effects of the depression. To accomplish the return of normal conditions, they must find a broader distribution, or in other words, find their way back into the hands of original purchasers.

Every wage and salary slash retards and delays this result, and to that extent prolongs the business depression. Sound prosperity must include a broad distribution of wealth, which takes in the wage-earner as well as the large investor.

In a small town was a lad who had the reputation of not being very bright. People there had fun with him several times a day by placing a dime and a nickel on the open palm of his hand, and telling him to take his pick of the two. A kind-hearted woman asked him one day, "Don't you know the difference between a dime and a nickel? Don't you know the dime, though smaller, is worth more?"

"Sure, I know it," he answered, "but they wouldn't try me out on it any more if I ever took the dime."

CENTRAL BODY MEMBERS MUST TAKE NEW PLEDGE

Will Be Required to Qualify for Vote.

MUST ALSO PROMISE TO SUPPORT OTHERS

Agreement to Patronize Union Label Included in Obligation of Delegates.

Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council will after April 11 be required to present to Central body a current poll tax receipt, unless exempt from payment of such tax under the provisions of an amendment to the by-laws adopted last Monday night on final reading. The delegate must further promise to qualify himself and vote in all municipal, state and federal elections. The assurance that the member will patronize union-labeled products is also to be exacted in the future, the new law requiring an obligation to promote "at least seven union-labeled articles."

The changes read as follows:

"(a) Delegates must patronize a minimum of seven union labels during their term of office.

"(b) Delegates must present at each election to this council a current poll tax receipt unless exempt from payment of such tax."

"... I also pledge myself to patronize at least seven union labels and to qualify myself to vote in all municipal, state and federal elections."

"GET TOGETHER MEETING" SET FOR MARCH 14.

The meeting tentatively decided upon following the highly successful meeting of that nature on Dec. 28, 1931, to be held on Monday evening, March 14, at Central Body hall, and George W. Perry, chairman of a special committee named to work with the entertainment committee, announced that a speaker of national reputation will be the guest of the labor on that occasion. A splendid program is in the making, Mr. Perry said, and refreshments will be served for several hundred guests.

DOLLAR SHOALS PLAN INDORSED.

Secretary Matt Gerlach read letters from Central Bodies of Nashville and Jackson, stating that the labor movements of these Tennessee cities had formally approved a resolution adopted by the Chattanooga body indorsing the stand of Senator Dillar in the controversy with local representatives of the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce, who criticized the senior senator after his failure to induce him to change his convictions on the Norris bill providing for government operation of Wilson dam.

Musicians' Federation Backs Living Music Day

New York.—The "Living Music" day plan sponsored by the American Federation of Musicians has been accepted by 150 newspapers in the United States and Canada, according to a statement by officials of the federation here.

The general plan of Living Music Day, the International Musician explains, "is to tie up the newspaper, local musicians' union and leading merchants in a sales campaign.

The newspaper prints a living music day supplement, the merchants advertise therein concerts in their stores on the date chosen, and the musicians' union supplies the bands and orchestras for the concerts. The local union benefits from the general publicity given to living music. This publicity runs in news columns of the newspaper, in the advertisements of merchants, and also in the results from the public attracted by the concerts.

It would be very difficult to devise a more effective exploitation for living music, even at a large expense, and the cost to the union of this plan is confined to the few hours of work contributed by the members."

Hotel and Restaurant Employes' Convention Is Called for August 10

Cincinnati.—The twenty-sixth general convention of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' and Beverage Dispensers' International Alliance will convene in Boston, Mass., August 10, it was announced by Edward Flore, general president of the alliance.

"The depression in business and the unemployment situation within our ranks," Mr. Flore said in explaining the call for the convention, "are more acute today than at any previous time, and the need for added revenue to successfully carry on our field work and the application of social legislation to care for our sick and unemployed members are greater today than at any time within the history of our international union. We must provide for the future if we are to successfully carry on."

ILLINOIS HOUSE ASKS CONGRESS TO ADOPT LABOR RELIEF PROGRAM

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 24.—In a resolution introduced by President R. G. Soderstrom, of the Illinois Federation of Labor, representative in the Illinois general assembly from the Thirty-ninth senatorial district, the Illinois General assembly asks congress to adopt the unemployment relief program of organized labor. Soderstrom asked suspension of the rules so that action could be taken on his resolution without delay. The rules were suspended and the resolution adopted immediately by unanimous vote. The resolution follows:

Whereas, There exists in America at present a condition of unemployment which is unprecedented in the history of our country and many of the millions of our patriotic and loyal citizens who are suffering from unemployment are without sufficient food, shelter or clothing; and,

Whereas, the American Federation of Labor has made a comprehensive study of the problems of unemployment and has submitted a legislative program to congress which is designed to relieve this condition; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the Fifty-seventh general assembly at the third special session thereof, That the president of the United States and the senate and house of representatives of the present congress be memoralized to enact legislation in so far as reasonably possible to carry out the program designed for unemployment relief which was recently submitted to congress by the American Federation of Labor; and be it further

Resolved by the house of representatives, That this preamble and resolution be forwarded to the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives of the present congress; and to each senator and representative therein from the state of Illinois.

8,300,000 Jobless, 12,000,000 Need Help; Children Underfed, A. F. of L. Business Survey Says

40,000,000 Living Below Minimum Health Standards, Sickness and Contagious Diseases Increasing, Local Relief Inadequate—Thirty-five Hour Week Necessary to Put Jobless to Work.

Washington, Feb. 24.—Men, women and children are being sapped by unemployment to the point of catastrophe.

State and local relief funds are utterly inadequate to meet the distress of the jobless workers and their dependents.

It is absolutely necessary to shorten the hours of labor so as to put every unemployed person to work.

These three points are emphasized in the current issue of the Monthly Survey of Business published by the American Federation of Labor.

"Already the serious human consequences of unemployment," the survey says, "are apparent in American families: Loss of courage, initiative, responsibility; bitterness and disrespect for law and religion; desperation sometimes to the point of stealing, murder, suicide; mental disorders. These human catastrophes will last long after the depression is over. We have no records to show the situation in the country as a whole, but reports from different states sound the warning and show the trend.

Undernourished School Children.

"Twenty-nine per cent of all school children are undernourished in Pennsylvania and undernourishment is increasing in all counties, according to the statedepartment of health.

"Patients in New York hospitals increased 20 per cent from January, 1929, to May, 1931, and there is every evidence of neglected illness because people cannot afford medical care, according to data supplied by the United Hospital fund.

Disease and Mental Breakdowns Increase.

"Reports of practically all contagious diseases show definitely increasing trends in Pennsylvania; at tuberculosis clinics, new patients admitted monthly have doubled since 1929, and the tuberculosis death rate will show the first decrease in years (Pennsylvania secretary of public health).

"Mental breakdowns are more numerous. Over 7,500 cases were admitted to New Jersey institutions in 1930-31, showing an increase nearly four times the normal rate. Family life is being destroyed. Nearly 10,000 dependent children were admitted to New Jersey institutions in 1930-31, an increase of over 27 times the rate in normal years, according to figures made public by state department institutions."

Human Resources Impaired.

"This startling evidence of human wreckage," the survey continues, "came out in the senate committee hearings on unemployment relief. Apart from the suffering involved, it shows that our human resources are being seriously impaired. This is of greatest importance to business and to our entire national life, for it means a less vigorous citizenship to carry on our activities and a greater public expense to care for those who have broken down."

8,300,000 Out of Work.

On the question of inadequacy of state and local relief the Survey says:

"Our own figures show that about 8,300,000 persons were out of work at the first of January. Counting their families and those suffering from part time work and low wages, we estimate that well over 40,000,000 American citizens are living below minimum standards for health today.

12,000,000 Need Assistance.

"Some 3,000,000 families (12,000,000 persons) are in immediate need of relief. Only one to one and a half million families are receiving help from either public or private agencies, according to an estimate of the Family Welfare association and the relief given averages only $4 to $5 a week for a family of five—not enough to buy adequate food.

State and Local Relief Inadequate.

"Welfare agencies are overwhelmed and admit that adequate relief is totally impossible. The majority of the unemployed are being supported by relatives, friends, neighbors, dragging down the living standards of the poor.

"Even the meager resources cities have raised by private subscription will be gone in many cases before the year is half over. Chicago raised $10,000,000 to last until October; it will be gone before March. Philadelphia raised $5,000,000 to provide for the unemployed till November; it will be gone by May.

"In the country generally public funds furnish 70 per cent of all relief; but in this year municipal and state funds in many cases will not be ready or adequate, local tax returns have fallen off, and laws in many states prevent the use of state funds.

Federal Funds Necessary.

Meanwhile relief need increases as family resources are exhausted and each day brings more families to charity. The need will continue long after business recovery begins."

The Survey points out that from October to December, 1931, relief payments in 56 cities increased at the rate of $450,000 a day, and declares that federal funds alone will check the human catastrophe resulting from the failure of state and local relief to provide necessary funds.

Work the Only Remedy.

"American wage earners want work, not relief," the Survey continues. "To keep men steadily at work, creating wealth and receiving wages, is basic to human welfare and economic prosperity in the years to come.

Business Refuses Shorter Work Week

"Although the depression has lasted two years, little has actually been done to make the fundamental economic adjustments which alone can provide work. Comparatively few firms have shortened their standard work week.

Machines Destroy Million Jobs.

"From 1920 to 1929 one million jobs were discarded by the introduction of new machinery and efficiency measures. Work hours were not adjusted so that the million workers could be re-absorbed into productive work.

"In the present depression, efficiency measures have been adopted to reduce the increased unit cost of operation. Failures and mergers have also eliminated jobs.

35-Hour Week Necessary.

"We shall come out of the depression with more unemployment than ever. The only possible means of providing jobs for all is to shorten work hours.

"Although the average work week in the United States at present is between 48 and 49 hours, we estimate that if all those out of work had jobs there would be only 35 hours a week for each wage earner."

"To bring the millions of jobless workers back into productive activity by establishing a shorter standard workweek, is an urgent business problem," the Survey concludes.

Unions Shorten Hours.

"Up to the present, however, trade unions are the only organized group which has realized this essential point and made a drive for it.

"For example, union building trades men reduced their average work week by two hours from 1929 to 1931. In 1929, 25 per cent had the five-day week, in 1931, 69 per cent. Union work hours averaged less than 44 per week in 1931, five hours below the general average."

MOLDERS' UNION VOTES AGAINST 1932 CONVENTION

Cincinnati.—A referendum vote of the members of the International Molders' Union of North America decided against holding a convention of the union in 1932 by a majority of 2,362.

HERE'S A MARK TO SHOOT AT

W. F. Strickland Has Enviable Record for Attendance at Local Union Meetings.

Now, folks, while we're on the subject of loyalty and faithfulness, let's give a thought to W. F. Strickland, financial secretary of Local 79, Soft Drink Workers, since 1909.

In reporting the list of new officers of his local, Mr. Strickland "admitted" that he has been a member of the organization since 1906, and further stated that the last regular meeting which he failed to attend was early in 1909—twenty-three years ago. The old-timer did not explain why he missed that session, but The Labor World assumes that he had a broken leg, or the palsy, or something. However, boys and girls, that's a record to be proud of, and those of us who are wont to send in an excuse that we have "a headache," which in some cases means purely and simply a grouch, should read the story of "Bill" and make some new resolutions. The picture above was not taken this year, but neither is it a relic of 1906—just somewhere between those years—Bill says not long. Mr. Strickland is agent for "Bruck's," marketed by the Seminole Bottling company.

Following are the "new" officers of Local 79:

President, O. B. Kelso.
Vice-President, Walter Mann.
Financial Secretary, W. F. Strickland.
Recording Secretary, Roy Lee.
Treasurer, Leo Lee.
Sergeant-at-Arms, Charles Weinsburg.
Trustees, V. Divver, Dick Burks, Tom Ellis.
Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council, Leo Stewart, Ed Steiner, Roy Lee, Paul Aymon, Leo Lee.

STAGE SET FOR PRESS DINNER

Great and Near-Great to Be "Panned" by Newspaper Boys Monday Night.

The great and the near-great in local affairs are scheduled for a more or less severe "panning" Monday night, when the first annual gridiron dinner of the Chattanooga Press club will be staged at Hotel Patten.

Preparations for an enjoyable affair have been under way for many weeks, and R. L. Park, director of various "skits" to be staged in burlesque of current local events, announces that everything is in readiness for the "panning." Judge Nathan Bachman has agreed to act as "roastmaster," which fact of itself is assurance that several hundred guests will be well entertained.

The press club is composed of members of the editorial and reportorial forces of the daily and weekly newspapers, and has been functioning for several months. L. G. Walker, of the Times, is president, and Rufus Terral, of the same paper, is executive vice-president.

CALIF. BUTCHER WORKMEN GO BACK TO AMALGAMATED

Chicago.—Patrick E. Gorman, president of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, announced an adjustment with certain California locals who withdrew from the organization a number of months ago. The adjustment brings 2,000 California Butcher Workmen back into the Amalgamated.

CHARLOTTE LABOR SAYS FEDERAL PAY CUTS WON'T HELP NATION

Charlotte, N. C., Feb. 24.—The ailments of the nation at this time will not be stemmed nor cured by cutting the pay of federal employes, believes the Charlotte Central Labor union. The labor organization, which is one of the most active in the state, is not only opposed to enactment of any pay cutting bills by the United States congress, but it is taking up the fight with vigor.

A request that such legislation be voted down has been dispatched to Senator Cameron Morrison, of this city; Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of Raleigh, and the Tar Heel representatives in the house.

"We feel," the telegram said, "that such proposed legislation represents a prospect of injustice and hardship that is at once undeserved and unwarranted. Such legislation holds out no tangible hope of improving the economic position of our people or of our nation over the longer period of the future, and, as for the immediate period, it is uneconomic and presents assurance of still further disturbance in the nation's trade and industry through what would be a decreased purchasing power and an increased turnover of federal employes with consequent inefficiency."

HUGE U. S. LOANS ABROAD BIG FACTOR IN DEPRESSION

Generous Uncle Sam's Lending Spree Has Set Up Other Nations as Active Competitors and Deprived American Manufacturers of Markets and American Workers of Jobs.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, Feb. 24.—Economic troubles of the American people these days are due more probably to their unstinted and unparalleled generosity since the world war than to anything else.

Uncle Samuel in that time has been the Community Chest of the world. He has ladled out his money and credited as lavishly as the fabled Coal Oil Johnny. A pan-handling world has come to his door and he has seen it on its way flush with funds and rejoicing.

But today his position is different. Cramped and depressed, shivering with unemployment, his wages and salaries and buying power cut and slashed, his industry curtailed, his stores loaded with unsold goods, and taxes mounting, he is paying magnificently through the nose for his lavish generosity.

Huge Sum Due Us.

Figuring out why the depression came and why it won't go away still occupies a lot of people. And seldom do any two of them figure to exactly the same conclusion. Yet, if there is any single reason why the depression is here and why it keeps us company for so long, it is found probably in the figures of how much other countries and other peoples owe us, singly or as a nation.

The most dependable figures indicate that the stupendous sum of $28,000,000,000 is due us from other nations. This sum is divided into $15,000,000,000 of private loans; $1,500,000,000 of short-term loans, and $11,500,000,000 of post-war debts.

This is equal to $227.60 for every American inhabitant or $1,138 for the average American family. If we had this sum in pocket today, singly or collectively, the probability is there would be a speedy upturn from the depression, if indeed the depression had ever taken place at all.

Competitors of U. S. Set Up.

Uncle Sam's lending spree has been a veritable back-fire of trouble for American industry and American trade. It has set up other nations as active competitors of his in the production of goods. Countries which never before had an industrial development have come to American shores, and through a coterie of willing internationl bankers in New York have unloaded their bonds and other evidences of indebtedness—good, bad and indifferent—on American investors.

In this unstinted extension of credit without strings, the very markets upon which American manufacturers have depended for much of their prosperity, and their ability to keep their factories going and their workers employed, have been swept from under them.

The lending of these funds has enabled the peoples of other countries to engage in factory building on a tremendous scale, and to not only themselves produce goods which they had previously obtained from American sources, but to flood other markets of the world with products—turned out in every instance at cheaper wages and labor costs—in competition with American goods.

Dollar's Power Gains Abroad.

During this spree of generous lending no one gave much attention to what the dollars were doing in new hands. No one noticed that a dollar of credit in a country of cheap labor was more valuable, and its productive power much greater, than in the United States, where high wage scales existed.

The ratio between a dollar's productive power in the United States and these countries is anywhere from two to ten. Thus, loans which seemed relatively small by this country's standards were augmented five or ten times in productive power in the countries to which the money went. This was due to lower wage scales, longer hours of factory operation, and not infrequently to cheaper transportation costs.

International bankers have not recognized this fact in their mad scramble to make these loans. They have steadfastly closed their eyes to the rapid expansion in productive power which these dollars underwent in crossing the ocean, and exerting a leveling influence in their new homes which spelled depression and destruction for business and industry in America.

Machine Displaces Men.

While this thing was going on—and it represents the very genesis of the depression today—American industry was engaged in developing what it liked to call "the machine age." This was the invention and installation of machinery that did the work of five, ten or twenty men, which increased the ranks of the idle and curtailed the buying and consuming power of the country.

Building up competition abroad with American credit, and speeding up production and curtailing manpower at home has brought Uncle Sam, and the rest of the world for that matter, into the throes of a depression which refuses to wear itself out.

American business men are very sensitive about some things. A suggested slight change in tariff rates, a slight movement upward or downward in freight rates, or a small proposed sales tax on their goods sets them all a-shiver and starts them on a headlong rush to Washington.

But a hundred million dollar foreign loan, which may expand in productive power to a billion dollars in its new home, and set up a competitive force that will destroy a substantial part of their markets, leaves them cold and untouched.

Wisconsin Starts $7,000,000 Idle Relief

Madison, Wis.—The first allotments of state unemployment relief aid under the emergency relief law totaling $2,903,350 were certified by the state industrial commission for payment.

The state treasurer sent checks to twenty-three counties which have the county system of administering relief, and to 1,164 towns, cities and villages in other counties.

First relief allotments were on the basis of $1 for each inhabitant under the 1930 census. Later allotments out of the $7,000,000 state fund will be in proportion to relief costs in 1931.

BOSCOE URGES 5-DAY WEEK TO SOLVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Minneapolis, Minn.—The importance of shorter hours was stressed by J. B. Boscoe, president of the Minneapolis Central Labor union and business representative of the Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America, in a radio address under the auspices of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor.

Mr. Boscoe said in part:

"The shortening of work hours is so logical that it needs no argument. The universal establishment of the five-day week would in itself go a long way towards solving the unemployment problem.

"We have industries still working the nine and ten-hour day and the 50 and 55-hour week, and even have those which work the 11-hour day and the 60-hour week.

"In the days of machine production the working hours per day and per week must be accommodated to the increased productivity of the man power, or else the machine will eliminate the human family rather than being the tool of the human mind to bring greater comforts to society."

Akron Unions Support Bricklayers in Fight Against Wage Slash

Akron, O.—The Akron Central Labor union voted unanimously to uphold the Bricklayers' union in any action taken against the efforts of Mayor C. N. Sparks to cut bricklayers' pay on public work from $2 to 50 cents an hour.

Union officials claim Mayor Sparks has exhibited his antagonism toward union labor since he failed in his attempt to slash city laborers' pay from 50 cents to 40 cents an hour.

GIVE APPROVAL TO ORDINANCE FOR SANITATION

Central Body Backs Efforts of Plumbers.

NEW LICENSING LAW DECLARED NECESSARY

Proposal Is Almost Duplicate of Those in Effect in Sister Cities.

Unqualified indorsement of the proposed creation of a city board to license plumbers was given by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night following discussion of the proposition, which is fathered by local master and journeymen plumbers.

The purpose of the proposal, it was stated, is to protect property owners and renters against incompetent workers who might endanger the health of the entire community by improper installation of sanitary safeguards, and to assure that proper care is taken in guarding against all forms of danger from faulty construction and repair of such modern safeguards.

The ordinance would provide for the setting up of a board consisting of two master and two journeymen plumbers, to act with the city plumbing inspector in the examination and licensing of plumbers, and is almost a duplicate of ordinances now in effect in Nashville, Memphis and Atlanta, it was said. Chattanooga, it was explained, is practically the only city of similar size in the south which does not have such protection.

Local plumbers recalled that there formerly existed a state law which covered the situation, but several years ago it was attacked and found faulty by the courts. Since that time, it was said, it has been the practice for any "jackleg" workman who has the illusion that he is able to do plumbing work to attempt the installation of sanitary safeguards, with alleged doubtful and dangerous consequences. Certain real estate agents handling cheap rental property, where the tenant is powerless to protest, and some large property holders, it was declared, have been the chief offenders through employment of colored men or common laborers to do this very important work.

Mayor Bass and the city commission have received scores of letters indorsing the proposal, which will probably come up for discussion at the regular session of that body Tuesday.

A committee from Central Body will appear before the board in support of the ordinance, and it is believed no serious opposition to its passage will develop.

Carl Robel Dies; Was Official of Tailors' Union for Many Years

Napa, Cal.—Carl B. Robel, former official of the Journeyman Tailors' Union of America, died here recently.

Mr. Robel joined the Tailors' union in 1899. He was elected to the general executive board from Chicago in 1906. He was chosen general treasurer in 1918 and served in that capacity until the office was combined with that of general secretary in 1923. He was then again elected to the general executive board, on which he served until 1931, when he retired on account of ill health.

Mr. Robel was born in Germany. He is survived by his wife and a sister, who live in California.

Union Wages For Veterans' Hospital At American Lake

Tacoma, Wash.—Inspector Hines, in charge of the construction of the Veterans' hospital at American Lake, informed O. N. Torgeson, business agent of Carpenters Union No. 470, that wages on the job would be the prevailing rate of $8 for carpenters and $5 for laborers, which is the union scale. Inspector Hines, it was stated, acted under immediate orders from Brig.-Gen. Frank D. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs in Washington.

Mr. Torgeson said the matter had been hanging fire since last November, and expressed his gratification over the settlement. At least 50 per cent of local labor will be employed on the job, with preference being given to married men and veterans.

OLANDER BECOMES MEMBER OF ILLINOIS RELIEF BOARD

Springfield, Ill.—Gov. Louis L. Emmerson appointed Victor A. Olander, of Chicago, secretary of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, a member of the emergency relief commission which administers the $18,750,000 fund appropriated by the state legislature to relieve destitution incident to unemployment.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part V

Cleanse first the inside of the cup and of the platter.
MAT. xxiii:26.

To continue our study of what constitutes Jesus' "spirit of optimism" let me refer my readers to some of His thoughts about the Kingdom. As Jesus taught it, the Kingdom of God is a great unfolding process of righteousness, and is to be worked out, in this world, not the next, through individuals. Do you notice I explicitly state the Kingdom is to be brought about through "individuals" and not just "people?" What is the authority for such a statement? It will be well for us to look to Jesus' own words for an answer.

WM. L. MOSS

1. "For their sakes I sanctify myself (Jn. xvii:19). This was His own individual preparation regardless of how others acted. You notice, I hope, He does not say "I sanctify you" and leave the whole job up to others, nor does He say "God sanctified me," thereby throwing the work of actually bringing about the Kingdom on God's shoulders. Jesus unmistakably says in these particular words that He Himself is prepared inwardly to do His part. He has determined on a personal contribution to the work of bringing about God's great Kingdom of brotherhood among men.

2. For others He had the same message of self-preparation. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness" (Mat. vi:33). He does not say here that we are only to see that others seek the kingdom, but are to seek it ourselves. "Cleanse first," He said, "the inside of the cup and of the platter" (Mat. xxiii:26), for "what doth it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his soul" (Mk. vii:26) are other guideposts that show us with what importance Jesus regarded the self-preparation of the individual for citizenship in the Kingdom of God. "The words I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life" (Jn. vi:63), said Jesus, and since neither spirit nor life are tangible objects, things to be seen and handled, this means the same as if He had said "What I teach you must accept spiritually"—(inwardly)—"and let it become a part of your very being"—(expressed outwardly in your daily life). Although there are other references I might make use of, space permits of only one more: "The kingdom of God is within you" (Lk. xvii:21). In these seven words He summed up the whole matter.

Jesus did not just see all about Him a world filled with just "people," but He saw God's children, all of whom were individuals possessing personalities.

Bill—Didn't I see you wearing a bathing suit at the fancy dress ball last night?

Doris—Gee, you must have left awfully early.

INDIGESTION

"My work is confining, and often I eat hurriedly, causing me to have indigestion. Gas will form and I will smother and have pains in my chest.

"I had to be careful what I ate, but after someone had recommended Black-Draught and I found a small pinch after meals was so helpful, I soon was eating anything I wanted.

"Now when I feel the least smothering or uncomfortable bloating, I take a pinch of Black-Draught and get relief."

Justice Cardozo

President Hoover's nomination of Benjamin N. Cardozo, chief judge of the New York State court of appeals, to be an associate justice of the supreme court of the United States to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, received universal approval.

Judge Cardozo is recognized as being the one man whose ability to perpetuate the principles of justice so long affirmed by Justice Holmes cannot be questioned.

The supreme court interprets the laws enacted by congress. It also interprets the constitution itself. Whether the laws or the constitution minister to the social welfare and protect the rights of the people depends very largely on whether the members belong to the liberal or conservative school of thought.

In discussing liberty and equality Judge Cardozo recently said:

"De Tocqueville was impressed with the belief that the love of equality is stronger in most minds than the love of liberty. But the opposition is unreal. Equality is the necessary condition of liberty, or at any rate of social liberty as contrasted with liberty that is unsocial or anarchial. At the root of the preference of equality, there is thus a sound core of intuition. 'Liberty without equality is a name of noble sound and squalid result.'" (L. T. Hobhouse in "Liberalism.")

With this fundamental conception of the close relationship between equality and liberty as Judge Cardozo's guide, our citizens may be sure that he will carry to the supreme court the eminent traditions of Justice Holmes.

The Fight Not Ended

The Costigan-La Follette bill for federal relief for the unemployed has been beaten in the senate, but unless there is a quick change for the better in the economic situation, the fight for direct federal relief must go on. Organized labor has pledged unqualified support to direct federal relief for communities which are unable to take adequate care of their unemployed and will not permit the defeat of the Costigan-La Follette measure to end the movement for federal unemployment aid.

Labor will not soon forget the senators who voted against federal relief. Among those who helped to defeat the Costigan-La Follette measure were some who have been accounted friends of labor. They must do some tall explaining to justify their vote. A close eye will be kept upon them in the future and their legislative record must show a big improvement before they can again be considered "right" with labor.

Now Is the Time

The beginning of progress for workers is their trade union, says a call for a militant campaign of organization issued by the joint conference of the American Federation of Labor Executive council and representatives of national and international unions held recently in Washington.

A truer word was never said. As the call points out, regardless of other activities of labor, to press an organizing campaign of unlimited scope is the primary duty of the hour. Only as the great mass of the workers put forward their claims through effective organization, has progress come.

"The hardships of the past three winters are incontrovertible arguments for extension of union membership and wider programs of action," the conference declared, calling upon every trade unionist in the land to join in the campaign.

The value of trade union organization is exemplified right now in the strike of the New York dressmakers. Confronted with a demand for wage cuts and increase in hours, the dressmakers, 30,000 strong, have struck not only against the employers' demands but for better wages and working conditions. Even in a time of depression, they are fighting for higher standards. They could not lift a hand in their own defense if unorganized. Their militant stand is an inspiration to every trade unionist to push union organization to the utmost.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

HAVING given in the last few issues of The Labor World brief outlines of the histories of the Order of the Knights of St. Crispin and the Noble Order of the Knights of Labor, as representative of the labor secret societies of their day, summaries showing why they disintegrated will conclude our study of such secret orders.

The St. Crispinites signed their own death warrant. The society was an highly idealistic one and the thousands who flocked to it in response to campaigns for members did not bother to assimilate its doctrines and preachments for the elevation of that part of mankind that came under its influence. Instead, their eyes were centered on its chief tenet, which read as follows: "No member of the Order shall teach, or aid in teaching, any fact or facts of boot or shoemaking, unless the lodge shall give permission." Since secrecy, hatred, internal jeauousy and internal petty politics ruled the lodges this plank in the society's constitution was a manifesto to the world that it had decided on self-extermination.

The Knights of Labor had a phenomenal growth and at the apex of its career boasted 1,000,000 members, but the rowdy, the imprudent, the selfish, the lawless and the anarchial-minded soon gained control of the organization. Its history was climaxed by the Chicago Haymarket riots. Preceding these riots the period had been one of recurring industrial strikes, and against the advice of Terence V. Powderly and his closest associates the Knights took official charge of most of these strikes. As the anarchists were playing a big part in the strikes, using ruthless and death-dealing violence in practically all of them, there developed on the part of the public an antipathy toward and dread of anything that resembled an industrial dispute. It was as a result of these labor activities of anarchists in our eastern cities that newspapers and employers' organizations began to carefully nurture and enlarge upon the supposed antipathy of the "American public" to labor strikes.

But regardless of the setbacks labor and its ill-fated secret orders were receiving at this time the curtain was slowly rising on a new day for American unionism. Out of the mists of misunderstandings, doubts, missteps and anarchial tumults that ruled in the late 1800's there was slowly emerging the figure of a young man of Dutch-Jewish parentage who was to leave the permanent stamp and impress of his astute and statesmanlike mind on the great organization which he, above all others, helped to mold along sane and workable lines. As time and events proved, this young cigarmaker became the best known and ablest leader American labor has ever had. It is due to his wise counsels, indefatigable labors and superb strategy that the American toiler—organized and organized—has achieved whatever heights of respect he occupies today.

St. Paul Relief Fund Empty, Extra Million Asked to Feed Hungry

St. Paul, Minn.—St. Paul has exhausted her unemployment relief fund and has issued a call for another million dollars to ward off starvation. The Minnesota Union Advocate says "a demand will be made on the wealthy of the city to supply the shortage."

In reply to the agitation against the so-called "standard" package furnished by the welware board to the destitute, the board has added an open order for a variety of certain kinds of groceries which may be purchased at any store that agrees to the prices established by the board. It is claimed that 256 additional needy families have received 1,507 more orders for $282 less as a result of standardizing the grocery supplies furnished.

TEACHERS' PAY CUT HIT BY SPRINGFIELD UNIONS

Springfield, Mo.—Delegates from the Springfield Central Trades and Labor assembly met with the city school board to protest against a proposed ten per cent salary reduction for school teachers.

President A. T. Woods, of the State Federation of Labor, who led the group, told the board that if the budget of the schools must be cut the retrenchment should be made in other directions sufficient to maintain the present living standards of the teachers. "Every time wages are cut, business gets worse," Mr. Wood said. "I do not care what economies we may practice, but it is not fair to the teachers to cut their salaries."

WISCONSIN ENACTS FIRST JOBLESS INSURANCE LAW

Madison, Wis.—The Wisconsin legislature enacted the first compulsory insurance law passed by any state.

Maximum benefits will be $100 a year paid in not more than ten weekly installments of $10 or 50 per cent of the workers' average weekly wage. An additional dollar benefit each week may be received if the worker attends school during the period of his unemployment. Workers eligible to benefits are limited to resident employes who lose their jobs involuntarily.

The law becomes effective on July 1, 1933, and will not take effect at all if by that date 175,000 employees in the state are covered by unemployment reserve funds set up voluntarily by Wisconsin employers.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Big issues crowd the air. The constant drumming of demands upon the average person is like the steady yammer of the radio—finally it almost deadens sensibility to the clatter.

And yet—and yet—those issues cannot be dodged, nor can they be forgotten.

International peace — disarmament, foreign debts — reparations—prohibition—unemployment.

Unemployment comes home first to the average American. It is on every hand, carrying millions deeper into swamps of despair each week.

He who is without buying power—money—is in desperation.

Those who are employed are caught as firmly in the grip of unemployment as are the unemployed. No person can dodge the consequences of seven millions of unemployed.

* * *

This civilization must mend quickly, or go beyond any easy or rapid mending.

Today it is torn with terrible gashes.

Added to unemployment are bankruptcies of industries, banks and cities.

Bankruptcies of cities is just another form of citizen revolt against high taxation. The people are unwilling to pay the price for what they have had and in most cases what they have had hasn't been worth the price assessed.

The end of this city bankruptcy business is not yet.

Governments are not doing themselves any too proud these days.

Some day, perhaps, industrial democracy will come forward to take its place by the side of political democracy, each doing its share.

Then we shall see more of efficiency, more of justice.

It took a long, weary time to instill the ideal of political democracy into enough minds to weld a force strong enough to put it into operation.

Consciously and unconsciously the ideal of industrial democracy, or democratic practice in industry, if you will, grows strong among men.

In due time—in due time.

Meanwhile we suffer for want of faster progress, though in the years hence men may marvel that progress was so rapid.

The thing called perspective is a very interesting thing. Generally it is enjoyed only by those who have had a good meal and who know where to get the next one.

* * *

In the issues of the day there is a magnificent scrambling of the industrial and the political.

The equipment for handling them is more or less one-sided—half built.

But time passes and all things happen with the passing of time.

Something will eventuate.

After a time, when the boiling and the stirring have been finished, it will be found good.

Even if this civilization does not move as it ought to—finally sound building will be done and the race will move onward.

Destiny takes little account of a single day, or even of the misery of a generation.

Destiny counts only the long road. It sees the main direction, not the detours.

But that is no reason for the men and women of today to be any more foolish than they have to be.

QUIET OBSERVATIONS

By H. F. B.

What do you know about signs of spring being like prosperity—just around the corner? And it looks as if spring is going to get here first by a long jump! For the "signs" are visible, now, every day! First, you notice that the elm trees are full of seed and the sparrows are busily eating them! When elm seed get ripe enough for birds to eat, you can bet spring isn't far away! (These are Nature's signs, not man-made signs, like baseball talk and preparations!) Then you find that jaybirds have arrived from their winter's sojourn in the infernal regions, or some other warm place! They're picking around in the trees, hunting bugs, and the mild winter has made the hunting good! And, by the same token, we're going to have a hot crop of insects, bugs and worms this summer. Better oil up your spray guns! And then I discover a feminine cardinal grosbeak flitting around among the trees, and I know, darned well, that spring isn't far behind her! It all looks good and I don't feel as blue as I did. 'Nother good sign of spring!

Oh, brother! (and sisters!) aren't you glad that all this—what the weather man calls "precipitation"—that we have suffered this winter (?) hasn't fallen in the shape of snow and sleet? If it had, old Chattanooga would be about nine feet deep in snow at present, and I, for one, would be brozen stiff! The Lord sure has been tempering the wind to us poor shorn lambs and billy goats this year, and we should be duly thankful. Be a good idea for you, if able, to donate or lend a few dollars to the farmers and stock raisers in the snowbound northwest, if you want to continue to get beef and meat cheaply. Radio station KWKH (Old Man Henderson) will tell you about it, and receive and disburse your money. Don't all speak at once! but try to help. They need stock feed! Cattle are starving by the thousands, they report!

* * *

I thought that all dogs, over four months old, in this city were required to have license tags. I regret to observe that there are a big plenty of grown dogs here that have no license tags! Does it follow that, because a dog is on leash when on the street that he is not required to have a license? I see one now and then that's as big as a sizable pony being led around by a lady only one-half as large as he is who has no tag. There's another, on West Ninth street, not quite so large who is not even on leash when on the street and he has no tag. Maybe the cops are afraid of dogs. I don't know, but the city is losing money on the tags, I know that!

* * *

With as many hungry people as I happen to know are in this city, doesn't it seem queer to you, as it does to me, that there are so many nice, plump-looking pigeons foraging all over town without getting into a pigeon pie? Pigeon pies are good. So if you happen to see me with a couple of the critters in my pockets heading for home, you needn't be at all surprised. I was inquiring of my landlady only yesterday if she could cook a pigeon and she said "yes." If it was ancient, she could par-boil it a few hours and make a pie. If more modern, she might broil it! Again, I say, it does look queer, with the darned things almost under your feet on the streets! What's more, I happen to know a way to get these birds without creating undue commotion about it! and I'm not so choice in my grub as formerly! Whom do they belong to, anyway? They look good to eat, I must say!

Yours for anything to eat!
H. F. B.

ST. LOUIS OFFICIALS VETO PAY REDUCTIONS

St. Louis, Mo.—Walter J. G. Neun, acting mayor, and Louis Nolte, comptroller, declared there would be no salary reductions of the city employes of St. Louis.

"The city is operated economically," Mr. Neun said. "Salaries of employes are not too high, and the financial condition of the city is good."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Gotham Printers Reject Proposed Wage Reduction

Cut of 20 Per Cent "Preposterous" and Will Not Be Considered, Typographical Union No. 6 Heads Declare.

New York City, Feb. 24.—Typographical Union No. 6 ("Big Six") will not consider the demand of the Printers' league for a 20 per cent wage reduction in book and job shops, Austin Hewson, president of the union, has told the employers. The demand was denounced by President Hewson as "simply preposterous."

Hewson's reply was the first one made by any spokesman for the six unions whose 15,000 members have been served with demands for wage cuts of between 20 and 30 per cent. It was said to embody the sentiment of the other labor organizations.

President Hewson's reply, on behalf of his union, was made on the following grounds:

"The union has a five-year agreement with the Printers' league, which does not expire until Sept. 30, 1932.

Printers Help Idle.

"The working printers have already contributed $2,500,000 in the last eighteen months for the relief of their members and the 1 per cent pay roll deduction granted by the employers to the local relief committee has not been used to help the idle typographical union members.

"The analogy for adjusting a wage contract cited by the employers is not parallel with present conditions, for when the union demanded and received a wage increase in 1917 despite the existence of a contract the war labor board found that printers at that time 'were not receiving sufficient income to support their families.'"

"Open Shop" Move Seen.

The employing printers, supported by the National Association of Book Publishers, are believed to be moving for a concerted "open shop" drive under the guise of seeking wage reductions.

In addition to Typographical Union 6, New York Printing Pressmen's Union 51 and Mailers Union 6 have rejected the employers' demands, though the pressmen have indicated a willingness to confer with the employers and have asked President George L. Berry, of the international union, to represent them.

Paper Cutters' Union 119 and Paper Handlers and Sheet Straighteners' Union 1 have agreed to confer with the employers on the proposed pay cuts.

First Few Days Of Work Drive Nets 30,000 Jobs

Nation Stirred by Great Employment Campaign in Which Organized Labor Is Taking Active and Effective Part.

New York City, Feb. 24.—With approximately 30,000 unemployed taking jobs as the result of the first three days' vigorous attack on "old depression," in the campaign sponsored by the American Legion, American Federation of Labor, Association of National Advertisers and the legion auxiliary, and conducted by volunteer workers over the country, in helping to put a million men to work, the campaign has stirred the nation.

From Tuesday noon to Wednesday noon of the third day of the united effort, 13,051 jobs were found for the unemployed, according to reports by wire and mail to the general committee's headquarters at the Hotel Biltmore.

Grand Job Total 29,930.

The previous total of positions found was 16,879. The grand total for the first three days of the onslaught against idleness is 29,930.

The latest report covers eighty-four communities in twenty-seven states. The previous report covered sixty-six communities in twenty-nine states. According to tabulations New York led all reporting states in number of jobs found, 6,047.

Matthew Woll, chairman of the labor division, and other members of the general committee were greatly enthused by the reports to headquarters despite the fact that approximately only one-half of the states have reported their activities.

Labor "Enlists for War."

Chairman Woll said that organized labor's interest and activity in the various communities reporting showed that labor "had enlisted for the war," and while it was, of course, "vitally interested from a job standpoint, it realized that the entire country was interested in defeating a national menace."

Mr. Woll, in a radio speech, said the best news heard in the United States for three years "is now coming hourly to general headquarters of the war against depression."

"From hamlets, towns and cities, the telegrams are pouring in telling a story of reviving hopes, of human hearts made glad, of children who will go back to school clothed and fed, of fathers and mothers from whose hearts pain has been erased by the proud possession of a new job."

Mr. Woll pledged that the members of organized labor in America would hold their places in "this united army of Americans until we have seen the end of unemployment."

What Next!

A brick that was light enough to float was recently demonstrated by Dr. Charles F. Burgess, of New York, who invented it. The brick is one-fifth the weight of an ordinary brick, of high heat-insulating quality, porous, yet resistent to water and strong enough to support its weight if built into a tower five times the height of the Empire State building. It is said the new brick will enable a brick layer to lay two bricks with the same effort now required to lay one.

LEGION PAPER GOES NON-UNION

Central Body Protests Shift of State Publication From Union Shop at Memphis.

Chattanooga Trades and Labor council has joined central bodies and printers' unions throughout the state in protesting the shift of the official publication of the Tennessee branch of the American legion from a union shop at Memphis to a non-union outfit at Nashville. Trades unionists of Tennessee, it is held, have in the past co-operated in every way with the veterans' organization, many members of organized labor being affiliated also with the legion, having found much in common with the program of the vets, and it is recalled that the present administration had the unanimous support of unionists in all sections of the state.

Publication of the official organ in a non-union shop, delegates to Central Body pointed out, is therefore more to be deplored, particularly when it was taken from a "fair" concern at Memphis.

A committee named at a recent session adopted the following resolution expressing the sentiment of local workers with respect to the change:

Whereas, the American Legion on numerous occasions has extended the hand of fellowship and co-operation to the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated organizations, and has on various occasions requested of the American Federation of Labor to support the legion in its programs; and,

Whereas, the American Legion and the American Federation of Labor are both striving to uphold a high standard of living for our American citizens; they both honor and fight for all the principles that sustain American freedom—socially, politically and industrially; and,

Whereas, the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, a branch of the American Federation of Labor, knowing the close friendship that exists between these two great organizations, is shocked and disturbed to note that the Tennessee organization of the American Legion has removed its state publication from a union publishing house in Memphis and has placed it in a non-union plant in Nashville, and we believe and hope that this action is because of thoughtlessness rather than from deliberate intent; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council does hereby call attention to the state officers of the American Legion that this central body is informed that their publication is printed under unfair and un-American conditions, and that we request them to maintain the past friendly and co-operative relations that have existed between organized labor and the American Legion; and, be it further

Resolved, That the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council hereby calls upon all members of organized labor in various American Legion posts to present suitable resolutions condemning the nonunionizing of its publication and calling for its replacement into some union plant; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the state officers of the legion, the various Typographical unions of this state, and the various trades and labor councils of the state.

Cedar Rapids Unions Condemn Pay Slashes Of County Employes

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—The Cedar Rapids Federation of Labor denounced the action of the board of supervisors in reducing the pay of county employes whose salaries are not fixed by law and demanded that the wage cut order be rescinded.

The federation took the position that slashing the pay of clerks and stenographers $5 a month is a penurious method to reduce the tax burden and that the total savings when divided up among the taxpayers is an insignificant sum.

BLACKLEGS AND SCABS.

Darwen, Eng.—In connection with the controversy over wages and hours between the Weavers, Winders and Warpers' association and the mill owners, Mr. Joseph K. Bailey, editor of the official journal of the association, adds the following definitions to the terminology of the labor movement:

"A 'blackleg' is an individual who undertakes employment at less than trade union rates or under working conditions not in accordance with trade union agreements.

"A 'scab' is an individual who takes the place of a worker who is on strike."

EMPLOYES' MEALS A FACTOR IN COMPENSATION PREMIUM

Washington.—The court of appeals of the District of Columbia held that for the purpose of determining the premium due on a workmen's compensation policy the total remuneration of employes of a resaturant owner includes the value of meals furnished to the employes by the employer.

Although other elements of an employe's "keep" were not under consideration, the court pointed out that "wages," upon which benefits under the act are based, include the "reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging, or similar advantage received from the employer."

Of course, the man who blows his own horn always thinks the rest of the band is playing the wrong piece... There's just one consolation about both death and taxes. When you finish one you're through with the other... The most envied bride in a younger set is one who has a sufficient number of dishes to serve three meals a day for three consecutive days without washing a single dish... Man sweats in a woolen coat so milady may keep serenely cool in almost nothing.

Toronto Appoints Fair Wage Officer

James Watt Will Watch Ctiy Contractors to See That Hours and Wages Regulations Are Not Violated.

Toronto, Can.—The city council of Toronto appointed James Watt to the position of fair wage officer, an office recently authorized by the council.

Mr. Watt will exercise strict supervision over persons holding contracts for city work and see to it that regulations regarding wages, hours and conveniences are obeyed. He is given full authority to inspect the books and other records of the contractors, as well as the premises where work is performed.

As fair wage officer he will also make an annual report relative to hours and wages on contract work with recommendations as to changes. In preparing new wages and hours schedules, he is required to confer with representatives of both employes and employers.

TRADE UNIONISTS OPPOSE EMPLOYING STATE HOSPITAL PATIENTS ON PRIVATE WORK

Little Rock, Ark.—The Little Rock Central Trades and Labor council strongly opposed the policy of the superintendent of the State Hospital for Nervous Diseases of permitting inmates of the hospital to work for private profit in preference to free labor. The action was caused by information that patients of the hospital were working on the grounds of the Little Rock Baseball association.

The resolution adopted by the council declared that "we again go on record as being unalterably opposed to the use of inmates of state institutions in competition with free taxpaying citizens for private profit and call upon the public that believes in a square deal for its citizenship to assist in stopping this practice."

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

Warning to Taxpayers

After February 29th, unpaid taxes bear interest and in addition a penalty of one-half of one per cent a month. Taxes may be paid at my office until March 31st, whn lists will be delivered to officers for collection at the cost of the taxpayers.

ALVIN, SHIPP, County Trustee.

This refers to the 1931 Taxes and complies with Section 1573 of the new State of Tennessee Code.

To All Delinquent 1930 State and County Taxpayers

The law compels me to turn the uncollected 1930 tax over to the Delinquent Tax Attorney for suits not later than March 1, 1932.

Ordinarily I would be ready to do this about the middle of February, but in order to save as many taxpayers as possible the additional cost of the Delinquent Tax Attorney's fee and court costs, I am holding the books open for collection of this tax in my office right up to March 1st.

Respectfully,

ALVIN SHIPP, County Trustee.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

STUDENT PRINCE TO OFFER TREAT

Outstanding Light Opera Booked for Memorial Next Wednesday Night.

Lovers of the spoken drama will be given a treat by the management of the Memorial auditorium on next Wednesday night, when "The Student Prince," one of the most successful light operas produced in recent years, will be presented with a large cast, which it is declared includes all the principals of the original New York cast, as well as other features of the production which made it the outstanding stage attraction of the past decade.

The company is declared to include more than 100 members, featured by the famous students' chorus. Tuneful melodies of "The Student Prince" have been sung and whistled throughout the world since the original performance, and Chattanooga theatergoers will unquestionably take advantage of the opportunity to enjoy this fine operetta.

Reservations from local citizens and orders for large blocks of seats from out-of-town indicate a capacity audience, according to Manager Addis, of the auditorium, and it is suggested that those who desire choice seats phone for them as early as possible.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Are airplane pilots organized as trade unionists?

WOULD GUARANTEE WORK FOR SUBSTITUTE POSTAL CLERKS

Washington, Feb. 24.—Several bills offering relief legislation for substitute postal employes are now before congress. These bills are designed to alleviate the great burdens now borne by substitute postal employes and if passed would guarantee the substitutes thirty hours a week, sick leave and vacation with pay.

Substitute postal clerks have in the past two years suffered severely because of the present economic conditions. Most of them are married men and have several who are dependent upon them for support from the very inadequate remuneration they receive. They do not receive sick leave or vacation privileges. In normal times substitute clerks were appointed to the regular force after a brief substitution period. Under present conditions they must "sub" indefinitely with little hope of being appointed to the regular force.

The Hogg, Kelly, Oliver and Sweeney bills would give him a guarantee of at least thirty hours a week, sick leave and vacation with pay, the justification of which can hardly be denied.

The public can help the substitute postal workers by writing to their senators and representatives, urging them to do everything possible to pass the bills just mentioned.

Medical Payment Plan Life Insurance Urged

Patients Pay Three Billion Dollars Annually for Medical Care — Committee Studying Cost of Keeping Well.

Washington.—The heavy costs of medical care in the United States might be ameliorated through a system of regular payments like life insurance payments, according to a suggestion by the committee on the costs of medical care, of which Secretary Ray Wilbur, of the department of the interior, is chairman.

The report, which was submitted to the committee by Miss Mary Dublin, points out that insurance companies estimate that $3,600,000,000 is invested annually in life insurance, which is comparable with the $3,000,000,000 spent annually for medical care, according to the estimates of the committee.

Miss Dublin claims that the insurance expenditure, "because of its orderly method of payment, is probably easier to bear than about the same amount spent annually for medical service."

The committee on the costs of medical care, Secretary Wilbur said, is nearing completion of an extensive five-year study of the problem of "the delivery of adequate, scientific medical care to all the people, rich and poor, at a cost which may be readily met by them in their respective stations of life."

Newly Rich in Texas.

A clerk in a country store in a little town in east Texas sold a lease on his 40 acres for $10,000. One of his friends asked him what he was going to do, now that he was rich, and he replied, "Well, I put the check in the bank and they won't do anything about it until it clears. If I get the money, I'm going to quit work and try to get caught up with my catfishing."

Wisconsin Commission Studies Job Insurance

New Law Gives Workers Whom Employers Refuse to Hire a Maximum of $100 a Year.

Madison, Wis.—The state industrial commission drafted plans in accordance with the unemployment insurance law recently enacted, for insuring Wisconsin workers whom employers refuse to employ.

The compulsory state insurance system becomes effective on June 1, 1933, unless employers privately insure by that date 175,000 employes. The commission determines what insurance systems employers may adopt.

An industrial study of each individual plant and a general study of unemployment insurance standards will be the first steps in getting employers to set up voluntary unemployment compensation systems.

$100 Annual Maximum.

Prof. John R. Commons, of the University of Wisconsin, told the commission that the maximum benefits should be larger and could be provided either by increasing the employers' contributions to the fund or by requiring employes to contribute a part of their wages.

Both labor and employer representatives agreed that the commission should appoint an advisory committee to aid employers in determining what type of insurance plans may be adapted to particular kinds of industry.

Henry J. Ohl and J. J. Handley, president and secretary of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, attended the conference called by the industrial commission to plan for the administration of the law.

MICH. LABOR FEDERATION DEMANDS FIVE-DAY WEEK

Kalamazoo, Mich.—The forty-third convention of the Michigan State Federation of Labor here stressed the five-day week as an economic necessity to provide work for the jobless. The general sentiment of the delegates that only by placing dollars in the hands of the workers could the depression by ended was emphasized in half a dozen resolutions. Cuts in pay scales for federal employes were severely censured.

PEN MEETING SCHEDULED FOR MONDAY, MAR. 4

t-Together Session Next for Central Body.

OMMITTEE PLANS A FINE PROGRAM

rrangements for Entertainment Well in Hand, Says Chairman Perry.

Encouraged by the splendid reaction to an open meeting and "get-together" session held by Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council on Dec. 28, when the large auditorium was filled to overflowing by trades unionists to hear outstanding speakers and enjoy a program which ended with the serving of refreshments, special committee named to arrange for that affair is planning to duplicate the occasion, with added interest, on Monday, March 14, and it is promised that the guest of honor will be a labor official who will bring a brief message of vital importance to every trades unionist in the city.

George W. Perry, chairman of the special committee working with the regular standing entertainment committee, George Forbes, chairman, said Wednesday that the coming session will be long to be remembered. A program of musical numbers and "stunts" is in the making, he declared, and an abundant supply of sandwiches, soft drinks and cigars is assured, even though the attendance should overtax the large Central Body auditorium.

The plan is, committee members said, to have possibly three or four local unionists and one visitor deliver short talks, and it is promised that no lengthy or tiresome addresses will be scheduled.

George Lakey, first vice-president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, was invited to attend, and a message received Thursday morning stated it would be impossible for this international official to be present. However, an equally prominent trades unionist will be on hand, committee members declared, and the entire evening will be filled with pleasures both enjoyable and profitable.

l Introduced to Make Saturdays Legal Holidays

Washington.—Representative Fred Britten, of Illinois, has introduced unemployment relief bill to make Saturdays a legal holiday. Britten stated this would add 4,000,000 workers to pay rolls.

The bill would authorize the president to initiate the Saturday holiday by advising governors of states of the action of congress if the measure is approved.

Britten said the bill was introduced at the suggestion of Max Epstein, of Chicago, who has made a study of the five-day week.

R. WILSON NAMES BOARD TO STUDY CONVICT LABOR

Montpelier, Vt.—Gov. Stanley C. Wilson announced the appointment of a commission created by the 1931 legislature to study the problem of employment of convicts in the state prison and the disposal of prison-made goods.

The commission was created because of the enactment by congress of the Hawes-Cooper law, effective in January, 1934, which will take away the rights of prison-made goods in interstate commerce and make such goods shipped from one state into another state subject to the local laws of the latter.

L. McDONALD PRODUCTS NO LONGER UNION-MADE

New York City.—The United Garment Workers of America is again calling the attention of organized labor and retail dealers to the fact that R. L. McDonald Manufacturing company, of St. Joseph, Mo., no longer uses the union label on its products, consisting of the following brands: Railroad King, King Bird, Safety Engineers and Red Seal Cadet overalls and jackets, Red Seal work pants and pants, Unicorn and McDonald dress shirts and coat blouses.

The United Garment Workers asks the public to demand the union label and points out that every purchase of goods with the label is a blow at sweat manufacturers, sweatshops and prison workhouses. "Co-operate with the United Garment Workers by demanding our union label on all your shirts, overalls, shirts and collars," the union urges.

Report Atlanta Labor To Repair Local Store

Considerable resentment was evidenced this week when a report spread through labor and other circles that restoration of the store building occupied by Schwartz Bros. ready-to-wear concern at 814 Market street, recently damaged by fire, would be done by workers secured in Atlanta.

Building trades spokesmen said that immediately when the report was heard the management of the Schwartz store was waited upon by a delegation representing these various trades and Chattanooga Trades and Labor council. It was learned, The Labor World was told, that an Atlanta contractor had been given the job, but the "consolation" was offered that some local workers would also be employed.

The Schwartz store is an old institution in Chattanooga, having prospered for many years by the patronage of local citizens, and it is the opinion of trades unionists that the management of this concern might in all fairness do everything in their power to help the local unemployment situation when the opportunity is offered.

Adjustment of Working Hours Seen As Only Relief for Jobless Millions

More Than 40,000,000 Persons Now Living Below Minimum Standards of Health, President Green Declares — February Report Shows No Improvement in the Unemployment Situation.

Washington, March 3.—The nation must look ahead to a long period of high unemployment unless hours of work are reduced, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, warned in making public the federation's February report on trade union unemployment.

"The only fundamental solution of unemployment is to shorten working hours. . . Since there is not enough work to go around, jobs must be created by sharing work," President Green declared. More than 40,000,000 persons are now living below minimum standards of health, he said.

A large part of the present shortage of jobs is due to the displacement of men by machines and modern efficiency methods, Mr. Green said. He estimated that 8,300,000 workers are still idle. This is identical with the federation's unemployment estimate for January.

"During the decade from 1919 to 1929, 1,000,000 jobs were lost, and in the present depression, efficiency measures have eliminated even more," Mr. Green said in his statement. "At present our conservative estimate shows that there actually are no more than thirty-five hours of work a week for each wage-earner if all who want to work are to have jobs.

"The only fundamental solution of unemployment is to shorten working hours. From now on we must look ahead to a long period of high unemployment unless hours of work are adjusted."

"February brought no general change in the unemployment situation. Although employment improved a little seasonally in a few industries, this was offset by layoffs on farms where several thousand lost their jobs in February. According to our estimate, the number out of work at the 1st of February was the same as in January—8,300,000. Our weighted figures show 23.0 per cent out of work in industry at the 1st of February compared to 23.1 per cent in January. Because millions of wage-earners have been unemployed for a very long time and their resources are exhausted, the number dependent on relief is increasing daily. It will keep on increasing long after the spring brings a slight increase in employment. Owing to unemployment, part time work and wage cuts, we estimate that over 40,000,000 persons are now living below the minimum standard for health.

"In certain trades, unemployment reached a new peak this month—printing, metal trades and railroads. In building 62.5 per cent are out, in metal trades 36.8 per cent, and in printing, which in normal times has less than 5 per cent unemployment, 17.8 per cent are now out of work. In several other trades unemployment is still very high; musicians, 49 per cent; water transport, 47 per cent; manufacturing, 43 per cent.

"Although a slight spring pick-up in some trades is already evident, it is not likely to improve the situation very much according to business forecasters. The largest improvement thus far is in clothing and textiles, where 26 per cent of those out in January went back to part time work at least in the first part of February. In manufacturing, water transport and street transport (teamsters and chauffeurs) there has been a very slight seasonal gain in employment.

"The report for cities this month shows unemployment slightly less in thirteen and worse in nine; no change in two.

"It is significant that in every trade group where employment has improved this month part time work has increased. This indicates that many of those who went back to their jobs found only part time work awaiting them. Since there is not enough work to go around, jobs must be created by sharing work. Apparently this is being done to a somewhat greater extent, for part time work increased in eleven of our fourteen groups, and the general average for the country rose from 19 per cent on part time in January to 20 per cent in February.

"A large part of the present shortage of work is due to the displacement of men by machines and modern efficiency measures. During the decade from 1919 to 1929, 1,000,000 jobs were lost, and in the present depression efficiency measures have eliminated even more. At present our conservative estimate shows that there actually is no more than thirty-five hours a week for each wage-earner if all who want to work are to have jobs. The only fundamental solution of unemployment is to shorten work hours. From now on we must look ahead to a long period of high unemployment unless hours of work are adjusted."

Drive for One Million Jobs Backed by President Green

All Local Unions Are Urged to Give Their Full Support to Campaign to Employ the Idle—Work Is the Real Remedy for Unemployment, American Federation of Labor Chief Declares.

Washington, March 3.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, urged all local organizations representing organized labor to give complete co-operation to the campaign for jobs for a million workers conducted by the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor, the Association of National Advertisers and other organizations, with headquarters in New York City.

President Green said:

"The drive against unemployment, which is being made by the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor, the Association of National Advertisers and associated organizations, is attracting widespread attention.

"Thousands of men and women are being found employment.

"The success thus far gained justifies the conclusion that within a short time more than a million unemployed workers will be placed at work.

"The nation is being given an object lesson as to what can be done through a practical, systematic drive against unemployment. Finding work for those who are idle is the real remedy for unemployment.

"The American Federation of Labor is proud to be associated with this practical, constructive work which is being carried on in such a successful way.

"All the subordinate local organizations, representing organized labor, in the states, cities and towns of the nation are being called upon to give their full co-operation and support to the movement launched by the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor and the organizations associated with them in the war against depression campaign.

"The officers of the American Federation of Labor are doing all that lies within their power to make a complete success of this drive to secure jobs for one million workers."

VOLUNTARY PAY CUT.

Elective public officials cannot be forced to accept reductions in their salaries, but they may do so voluntarily, according to an opinion by the attorney-general of Michigan, Paul W. Voorhies. The ruling was given to Charles C. Bechtel, of the Detroit bureau of governmental research, who inquired whether the Wayne county board of supervisors can reduce the salaries of elective officials.

'Miss Labor World'

BETTY ROBERSON

The Labor World got a break when the winsome and vivacious little lady pictured above was selected to represent this paper at the gridiron dinner Monday night. In theatrical parlance she "knocked 'em cold" when she told the 300 assembled guests, among other things, that "We won't have two-piece underwear—it's not a union suit."

NOTABLES PUT ON GRIDIRON

Press Club "Roasts" Civic Leaders at First Annual Banquet.

Approximately 300 civic, political and industrial leaders sat for some two hours with mingled dread and hilarity as the great and the near-great of local affairs were burlesqued by members of the Chattanooga Press club at its first annual gridiron dinner in the ballroom of Hotel Patten Monday night. No one of the guests was certain of immunity from the good-natured darts of the newspaper boys, and a degree of nervousness was evidenced in every corner of the big hall.

Following the dinner, Judge Nathan Bachman, "roastmaster," introduced George Morris, of Memphis, as the principal speaker, and when the more or less serious business was completed the press club members took charge, opening the program with a tuneful and entertaining specialty staged and directed by Miss Kathleen Caldwell, music by Dick Park and scoring and orchestration by "Sandy" Summers.

Then the skits, and for a matter of possibly two hours some score or more citizens were "roasted to a turn." The only consolation offered the victims was the fact that Rule No. 1 of the press club is that "no reporters are present" at the annual gridiron dinner.

The press club is composed of some forty members of the editorial and reportorial staffs of the local newspapers.

Notice, Plumbers and Steamfitters

Members of Local 43 are requested to note the change in meeting place, from 11 East Seventh street to Central Labor hall, 829½ Market street. Regular meeting Friday night and all future meetings will be held in the third floor hall adjoining the main auditorium.

FRANK WATSON, President.

O. E. COOK, Secretary.

Local Plumbers Lose Valued Supporter

Local Plumbers and Steamfitters lost a valued friend and supporter this week when W. D. Swaim, one of the best-known master plumbers in Chattanooga, ended his own life at his home. Mr. Swaim was for many years an active member of Local 43, until he retired to enter business for himself. Since he had joined the ranks of the employers, members of the union declared, he had been a consistent friend of the organization, and many friends deplored his rash act.

Suitable resolutions expressing the feelings of the membership are to be introduced at the regular session of Local 43 Friday night.

Local Unions to Have Part in Big Label Drive

Chattanooga trades unionists will have a major part in the nation-wide campaign for the union label and shop card which will begin early in April under direction of John J. Manning, secretreasurer of the Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor.

The campaign locally will be planned at a later session of Central Body, when committee will be appointed from that body to co-operate with similar committees from various local unions. Already several locals have announced their purpose to conduct an aggressive drive throughout the city in the interest of labeled goods.

All national and international unions affiliated with the department have been requested to take part in this campaign by requesting their local unions to appoint committees to conduct an active campaign.

Central bodies have also been requested to take part in the campaign.

"If this campaign receives the co-operation it deserves, it will help to relieve unemployment among trades unionists and will increase the business of fair employers," John J. Manning, secretary of the Union Label Trades Department, said in announcing the campaign. "All members of organized labor and all friends of organized labor should take an active part in the April Union Label Campaign."

T. R. Cuthbert, chairman of the standing label committee of Central Body, is assembling data and preliminary plans for the campaign to present to Central Body at its next regular meeting.

Wilkerson Condemned as Unfit For Member of U. S. Circuit Court

Senator Norris Declares That Injunctions Against Railway Shopmen and Chicago Musicians Destroyed Labor's Rights, and Established Involuntary Servitude by Imposing Compulsory Work.

Washington, March 3.—A scathing denunciation of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson's labor injunction record was made by Senator Norris, of Nebraska, in his discussion of the bill limiting the power of federal judges to issue injunctions in labor disputes.

President Hoover nominated Judge Wilkerson to be a member of the U. S. circuit court of appeals for the Seventh judicial circuit. Wilkerson's nomination was referred to the senate judiciary committee, of which Senator Norris is chairman, for investigation as to his fitness for the position.

"Judge Wilkerson was appointed as district judge by President Harding, under the advice and at the suggestion of Atty.-Gen. Harry M. Daugherty," Senator Norris said.

Injunction in Railway Shopmen's Strike.

"Hardly was the ink on the commission dry before the same attorney-general applied to this judge and secured of him a sweeping injunction applying to many thousands of railroad employes.

"This injunction was issued at a time when the dispute between the railroads and their employes was in a fair way of settlement, and contained many of the obnoxious provisions which are almost invariably included in labor injunctions."

Injunction Against Chicago Musicians

"Another illustration of a conscienceless injunction issued by Judge Wilkerson," Senator Norris continued, "was the injunction issued in the case against the Chicago Federation of Musicians and others.

"This injunction was issued on the first day of September, 1928, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

"The then existing contracts of the musicians with motion picture houses expired the very next day, Sept. 3, which was Sunday, and new contracts had not been agreed upon.

Negotiations Pending.

"Negotiations had been pending for some time between these musicians and the theater houses, but no definite agreement had been made.

"The musicians were asking that certain conditions be included in the new contracts of employment, which the employers and receivers for some of these houses were resisting.

"At this time, while these negotiations were pending and the day before these contracts expired by their own terms, these theaters commenced this action against their employes, and without any notice to the defendants the judge issued another one of his famous restraining orders.

Union By-Laws Abolished.

"In this injunction, among other things, the defendants were restrained from enforcing certain provisions of their own by-laws.

"It seems that these musicians, in their own organizations, had various stipulations in their by-laws; and this judge, upon the filing of the complaint by the plaintiffs, and without any notice whatever that such an application was pending, issued an order restraining the defendants from in any way, directly or indirectly, enforcing the provisions of the by-laws.

Strike Call Prohibited.

"In other words, the injunction restrained the defendants from making the demands which they were making in their negotiations with their employers. In some instances, in effect, it required these musicians to amend their by-laws. It restrained them, also, 'from ordering, commanding, directing, or causing any strike.'

"It likewise enjoined the defendants from leaving or threatening to leave the employment of said receivers, either by way of strike or otherwise, unless with the consent of said receivers.'

"The injunction also restrained the defendants 'from imposing upon or levying or ordering against any member of said union any fine, penalty, suspension, erasure, expulsion, or assessment of whatever character for failure to leave the employment of said receivers, for refusal to refrain from seeking or accepting employment of said receivers, for refusal to obey any command, order, rule, by-law, provision, direction, hint, suggestion, or request of whatsoever character of said union or any officer, committee, or member thereof that he leave or refrain from seeking or accepting such employment, or for refusal to do, perform, aid, assist, counsel, command, direct, or acquiesce in any act forbidden by this order.'

"In this wonderful injunction there is just one ray of hope. The injunction did contain a provision that the defendants should have a right to appear in court and petition the court for a modification of this drastic order. What a wonderful and merciful thing that was.

Compulsory Work Imposed.

"The injunction was issued at 10 o'clock on Saturday morning.

"I presume before it was served it was probably late in the afternoon of Saturday.

"The court was not in session, of course, on Sunday.

"The contracts expired on Sunday by their own terms and, by the terms of the decree, these defendants were restrained from quitting the employment of the plaintiffs unless the plaintiffs consented.

"If they continued to negotiate on new contracts, they were restrained in such negotiations from even asking their employers to put certain things in the contract for which the defendants had been contending.

"They were compelled to remain in the employment after the expiration of their written contracts and were not even allowed, in trying to get new contracts, to ask that anything should be put in those contracts which the employers did not want put in.

Wilkerson's Decree of Human Slavery.

"I wonder if anyone will contend that such an order issued by Judge Wilkerson is not, in effect, an order of involuntary servitude?

"Can anyone claim for a moment that it is not a decree of human slavery?

"This calls to our attention not only that we should enact proper legislation on this subject but that we should likewise be careful in passing upon any nomination which the president may make in the appointment of a judge to sit in judgment upon the law we shall make.

"Not only is it necessary that the proper law be passed, but it is equally important that no person should be elected to administer the law as judge whose bias and prejudice and whose inclination might lead him to find a loophole of some kind by which such unconscionable injunction could be issued."

UNEMPLOYMENT MEETING IN PHILADELPHIA, MARCH 5

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Philadelphia Central Labor union has arranged for a mass meeting at the new convention hall here on Saturday afternoon, March 5, to "demand adequate relief for the unemployed."

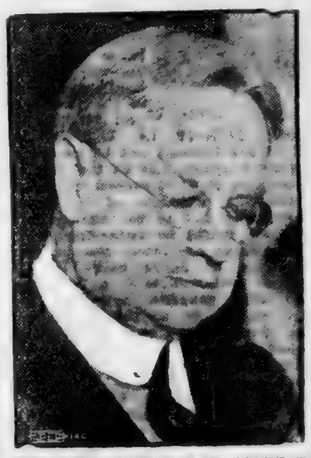
Frank Burch, secretary of the union, said the speakers would include: Gov. Pinchot, of Pennsylvania; United States Senator Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado; William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor; Dr. John A. Ryan, of the National Catholic Welfare council; Jacob Billikopf, of the Jewish Welfare Federation, and John A. Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor.

NORRIS FLAYS "YELLOW DOG" AND INJUNCTION

Veteran Commoner Delivers Vitriolic Address.

BILL PASSES SENATE BY ONE-SIDED VOTE

Only Five New England Senators Support Un-American System.



SENATOR GEORGE W. NORRIS

The Norris bill to curb the power of injunction judges passed the senate on Tuesday of this week by an overwhelming vote of 75 to 5. The measure was passed following a week of hectic debate, during which time representatives of the reactionaries resorted to every known parliamentary method to defeat its purpose. A number of amendments were successively rejected, and the final ballot found only the small handful of New Englanders voting "No."

Washigton, March 3.—In his opening speech in the senate on the anti-injunction bill which bears his name, Senator Norris, of Nebraska, chairman of the senate committee on the judiciary, gave a vivid description and vitrolic condemnation of the "yellow dog" contract which the injunction bill outlaws.

He charged that by the use of the "yellow dog" contract employers set up a dictatorship which abolishes the rights of labor and makes veritable slaves of the workers.

Employer Dictatorship Established.

"In a great many of the injunctions which the courts have issued in labor disputes," Senator Norris said, "the basis for the injunction was a written contract of employment, signed by the employe when he accepted employment.

"This contract has become almost universally known as the yellow-dog contract.

"It requires the employe, as a condition of obtaining employment, to agree that he will not join a union while he is in the employment, or, that if he is then a member of a union, he will dissociate himself from it; that he recognizes the right of the employer to discharge him without notice; that he will not quit his employment without giving sufficient notice to his employer to enable him to hire some one to take his place.

"The employe in most of these contracts agrees in advance to accept such conditions of labor, hours of labor, and so forth, as may from time to time be decided upon by the employer.

Abolishes Rights of Labor.

"Not all of these contracts are the same.

"Other and similar conditions from those noted are sometimes added, but, in a general way, they all have the same effect.

"These take away from the laboring man the right to have anything to say about any of the conditions connected with his employment.

"The hours of labor, conditions under which the labor is to be performed, the right of the laborer to quit employment whenever he becomes dissatisfied, the amount of pay which he shall receive, the right of the employer to reduce the pay at any time without notice, and so forth—all these things are turned over entirely and solely to the corporation or individual owning or operating the business.

Imposes Servitude.

"The employe waives his right absolutely to free association and fair representation in connection with his wages, the hours of labor, and any other conditions of employment.

"In other words, he surrenders his actual liberty of contract and to a great extent enters into voluntary servitude.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part VI

We must not permit ourselves to be led by what we learn of Jesus' spirit of social optimism to think of Him as an unassertive, passive teacher of men. There is a type of Christian who believes our Lord lived a life that seemed to speak, "Judge not that ye be not judged." They have never pictured Him in their minds other than as a sort of elusive, shadowy being whose occasional outbursts recorded in the four gospels (Mt. 23:13-33, Mk. 11:15-19, Lk. 11:39-44, Jn. 2:12-17 are typical) can be construed as pure exaggeration on the part of the writers or were sudden and to us inexplicable outbursts of "righteous indignation" not to be inquired into that they might be understood.

WM. L. MOSS

Then there are many who in their conception of Jesus make Him a physical unfortunate — a weakling filled with maudlin optimism and too weak to do anything else but smile blandly down on everybody and see only good in people because His predestined role called for Him to be such a spineless creature. He is supposed to have been a being who could only see the bright side of life. But the world is not all light—nor is it all shadow. Human life is made up of both suffering and happiness. The real, sincere life has a wealth of all kinds of experiences. To say that Jesus was willing to see only one side of life, the happier side, is to assert no less than that He lived a one-sided existence. The gospels themselves prove otherwise!

The Jesus who was physically able to journey on foot the length of Palestine several times in a few months, who lived and taught not indoors but out under the sky, who regarded every man and woman as worth saving for the sake of their soul, could have existed a little over nineteen hundred years ago. But a Jesus who was sickly, anemic, exceedingly passive and who continually quivered and shook from nervous irritability brought on by constantly dwelling on His inevitable suffering on Golgotha is a preposterous figment of men's imagination and could not have ever existed because these physical infirmities alone would have prevented Him from drawing men about Him as followers.

What Next!

Some new bridges are now being welded instead of bolted, a highway bridge recently finished in Pilsen, Czechoslovakia, being reported to be the largest all welded bridge in existence. No rivets or bolts whatever were used in its construction. The bridge crosses two railroad tracks, has a span of 161.4 feet and a width of 27.4 feet. The total weight is 145 metric tons, which is said to be nearly 21 per cent less than that of a riveted structure designed for the same stresses.

Restless, could not sleep

"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would have to lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.

My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

Party Pledges on Labor Injunction

Trade unions have long been recognized as legitimate organizations.

But their functioning power for the mutual benefit of their members and the advancement of labor generally has been constantly and increasingly restricted by the unlimited power exercised by judges to issue injunctions prohibiting the unions from using the very rights which are necessary for efficient operation.

The Norris anti-injunction bill under consideration by the United States senate is designed to remedy the injustices imposed on labor by this abuse of the injunction process.

The senate is controlled by the republican party. The house is controlled by the democratic party. It is therefore appropriate to direct attention to the recent platform declarations of these parties on the question of injunctions in labor disputes.

The republican national convention of 1928 adopted the following plank:

> "The party favors freedom in wage contracts, the right of collective bargaining by free and responsible agents of their own choosing, which develops and maintains that purposeful co-operation which gains its chief incentive through volunteer agreement.
>
> "We believe that injunctions in labor disputes have in some instances been abused and have given rise to a serious question for legislation.

The democratic national convention of 1928 adopted the following plank:

> "We favor the principle of collective bargaining and the democratic principle that organized labor should choose its own representatives without coercion or interference.
> "We recognize that legislative and other investigations have shown the existence of grave abuse in the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.
>
> "Injunctions should not be granted in labor disputes except upon proof of threatened irreparable injury and after notice and hearing; and the injunction should be confined to those which do directly threaten irreparable injury.
>
> "The expressed purpose of representatives of capital, labor and the bar to devise a plan for the elimination of the present evils with respect to injunctions must be supported and legislation designed to accomplish these ends formulated and passed."

The enactment of the Norris anti-injunction bill will redeem these pledges made four years ago.

With the republican party in control of the senate and the democratic party in control of the house the matter becomes a nonpartisan question.

There should be prompt action on the Norris bill.

Everybody's in It

The great strength of the nation-wide united action for employment campaign sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, American Legion and other organizations lies in the fact it is the campaign of a United America—it is everybody's campaign against unemployment. At last this issue is being met as the nation would go about winning a war. A war would not be the war of any single group. It would be the concern of the nation, with all playing a proper part. This is the basis upon which this great campaign against employment now is being waged.

A million employers are being asked to add one or more to their pay rolls. One will act because a million others are doing the same thing at the same time for the common good. The steady flow of reports showing jobs found, which means wage-earners going back to work and to the earning of wages, proves that the campaign is sound and that it is marching on to victory.

Organized labor can join in such a campaign as this because it is sound in principle, because labor is concerned in every movement that is genuinely helpful to workers, organized or unorganized, but principally because this campaign is succeeding.

The Six-Hour Day Works

Paul W. Litchfield, president of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company, has given final approval of the six-hour day as a means of reducing unemployment. The six-hour day was approved after several other plans had been tested in the big Akron plant of the company. It was considered the best, Litchfield said, because it was found to provide work for some 3,000 men who otherwise would have been idle.

"I am convinced," he said, "that if the short-hour day were adopted generally and wherever possible, it would put millions of men in a position where they would be self-supporting."

A new thing has always brought the cry, "It won't work." Employers have raised this cry of the six-hour day, which is advocated by organized labor. But the six-hour day is working, as the head of the great Goodyear company testifies. Employers would do well to take note of this fact and ponder over it.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

OUR account of the history of Unionism in the United States closed last week with the year 1886, which we might properly term the year marking the end of the reign of secret societies founded exclusively for the purpose of embracing within their memberships only laboring men and women. Now, in order to carry forward the history of a new development in the national character of labor unions, we must go back from 1886 to 1881 and pick up the thread of our story there, bringing it forward along the line of the new order of development rather than along the lines we have been pursuing the last few weeks in this column.

In 1881 there existed two secret societies modeled along the pattern common to that period, the Knights of Industry and the Amalgamated Labor Union, the latter composed largely of disaffected Knights of Labor. A convention was called by these two labor secret societies to meet at Terre Haute, Ind., to be held on Aug. 2, 1881, the avowed purpose of the convention being to organize a new society to supplant the Knights of Labor.

But at this convention a new leaven was seen to be working. In the gathering at Terre Haute a nucleus of laborites who had been sufficiently fed up on the "secret society" idea in their labor organizations took on renewed life and began to make themselves heard.

Within a few hours after the convention had been called to order this "trades union element," for such it really was, had the upper hand. In private conversations and in speeches before the convention they held up the British Trade union as a model to be adapted to American conditions, and pointed to its successful annual congresses. Furthermore, the trades union element (as differentiated from the secret society element) warned the convention of the need of intensive local organization (the actual power of the present-day American Federation of Labor), they stressed the necessity of trade autonomy and made impassioned pleas for comprehensive team work. From the discussion of these needs of American laboring men in their trades unions insofar as they related to a national organization there grew a plan for a second convention. Three months later, in November, 1881, this second convention was called to order in Pittsburgh.

In common with the American Federation of Labor, as well as history itself, we will make it a part of the records of this series of articles by stating that American federated unionism was born Aug. 2, 1881, in Terre Haute, Ind. There is no other date nor city that can rightfully covet the honor.

A—Organization of conductors began early in 1868, when a group of conductors on the Illinois Central formed the Conductors' union at Amboy, Ill.

BUILDING PERMITS DECREASE.

The bureau of labor statistics, United States department of labor, has received building permit reports from 345 identical cities of the United States having a population of 25,000 or over, for December, 1931, and January, 1932. The estimated cost of all buildings for which permits were issued in those 345 cities in January, 1932, was $50,909,971. This was 18.6 per cent less than the estimated cost of building operations for which permits were issued during December, 1931. There was a decrease of 4.9 per cent in the number of buildings for which permits were issued comparing these two periods.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

An automatic bath for locomotives has been installed in the New York Central railroad yards at Harmon, N. Y., the railroad announces. An electrical device directs a stream of hot water cleaning solution over the entire locomotive and on emerging from the bathhouse, it is resplendent and ready for public appearance again.

The new device completes the cleaning work in thirty seconds to two minutes, in addition to eliminating the labor of two or three men, the railroad says.

This is doubtless in harmony with the trend toward "efficiency," but what is to become of the men "eliminated" by the new device? On this point the railroad has nothing to say, any more than do other industries when they announce with a flourish of trumpets the inauguration of new "labor saving," men "eliminating" devices and processes.

With the heading "Dog Gets Costly Burial," the newspapers recently reported that Pell, a German police dog belonging to a wealthy Long Island man, was buried in an expensive satin-lined coffin in the exclusive dog cemetery at Scarsdale, N. Y. "Pell's master received many floral tributes from friends who had known the dog," the newspapers said.

The unemployed must love to read such news. What a thrill of joy it must give them to know that while they and their families may starve, dogs of the wealthy are assured of a costly burial! How it must make them believe that, after all, this is the best of all possible worlds!

A writer in a popular weekly has been using a lot of valuable space in an endeavor to prove that when Woodrow Wilson was desperately ill in 1919. Mrs. Wilson largely conducted the affairs of state and was in reality president.

Well, what of it? The Labor World rises to ask. The U. S. seemed to run along pretty well, even if Mrs. Wilson was at the helm. As a matter of fact, the world would not come to an end, nor the nation either, if there was no president for a week or two. The belief that the world would topple and fall into ruins if there was not a president on the job every minute of the day has been assiduously fostered, but it is without foundation. It is a hangover from the days of kingly power, when the common folks believed the world would cease to revolve if they had no king. The world wags right along, regardless of presidents, kings and other high-placed persons, which is good for these same placed persons to remember. To recall this now and then would tend to a becoming humility of mind on their part.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Big Drive Shows United Action Brings Success

With Labor to Forefront, Great Nation-Wide Work Effort Is Making Unemployment of Vital Concern of All.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

New York City, March 3.—Maps showing a new battle front are being posted on walls throughout the country. Red and black pins are being moved back and forth showing a new daily score.

The war is the organized war against depression. The attacking force is united action for employment, in which 20,000,000 Americans are massed in a movement sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, the Association of National Advertisers and the legion auxiliary.

As the great battle forces went into the second week they looked back upon a bob-tailed first week in which 70,000 workers had been taken off the unemployed line and put on pay rolls, earning wages.

The black pins of depression are being steadily pushed back, while the bright red pins of employment and restored buying power more into new positions.

Labor in Leading Role.

Organized labor is playing a leading role in many cities and co-operating in local committees in hundreds of communities, working shoulder to shoulder with the other organized forces of community life.

The campaign is not a legion campaign or a labor campaign. It is what its name implies—a united action campaign. This war is an attack on unemployment on a war basis.

That a million workers now unemployed can be restored to employment is now certain. That much can be done. The hope is that if this spearhead of unemployment can be turned by a tremendous frontal attack, the momentum will carry armies of others back to work. But, be that as it may, those in charge of the great national campaign, which smashes all records for voluntary civilian mobilization for a purely civilian task, hold that the whole effort will have been richly worth while. Whatever problem then remains can be attacked with the knowledge that united action can get results.

Reds' Tactics Adapted.

The cold truth is that this campaign is adapting the hideous mass action of the revolutionary fanatics to the constructive purposes of American democracy.

Moreover, this campaign is making unemployment a common concern in all walks of life as nothing else has ever done.

Bankers and manufacturers and railroad executives in places of employment where men have been fired by the thousands are now enlisted in working organizations to hunt employment. If they find that they are under the necessity of finding work for the very men they have fired, regardless of the reason for the firing, they are getting a new look at the problem and a new sense of responsibility.

An example: Twenty-five railroads have assigned executive officers to assist in the campaign for employment and these have been assigned right back to their own territory, where they know the problem, but where they will now face it from a new angle.

To Rally Other Forces.

Effort is now being made to rally forces that have not thus far gone into action. The division of labor is seeking to bring the full strength of labor into the united action movement. Letters have just been sent by Chairman Matthew Woll to all A. F. of L. organizers, to all national and international unions and to all state federations and central bodies that have thus far failed to report active work under way.

It is urged that if the organized bodies in any community fail to bring about formation of a local committee that the task be assumed by some individual or by a voluntary group. It is pointed out that the entire movement is voluntary and that leadership must be secured by action.

United Action Vital.

Director of Organization Carl Byoir constantly points out the voluntary character of the movement and the fact that only through united action can the problem be met.

The number of co-operating organizations is astonishing, demonstrating an almost universal agreement with the plan of action. In these great organizations there are enough members to put up an effective committee into every American community. All of the organizations were this week called upon to demonstrate co-operation by action—the formation of local committees to carry on in each community an organized, systematic campaign for jobs for the unemployed.

TRIBUTE TO BRAMWOOD.

In a tribute to John W. Bramwood, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical union from 1896 to 1908, who died Jan. 19 in Indianapolis, the Typographical Journal says:

"His demise at the age of 75 removes another of the rapidly disappearing army of the old guard who so valiantly withstood the shocks that were the portion of the International Typographical union in earlier days. His was the privilege to live to see the organization attain its present influence and prestige which he and others of his time had set as an objective. A builder is gone, but the structure he helped to erect will ever stand as a monument to the foresight and faith of such as he."

THE BAD, BAD BOY!

I saw a pin upon the floor,
I saw a boy within the door,
I saw the boy, he saw the pin,
I saw his face, his fiendish grin;
I saw him stoop with look intent,
I saw the pin when it was bent;
I saw him put it on a chair,
I saw its point was in the air,
I saw a man all tired out,
I saw him looking all about.
I saw him take a seat, and then
I saw the man get up again.
Was this boy good as some you meet?
Don't ask the man who took a seat.

INDUSTRIAL BALANCE ONLY REMEDY FOR DEPRESSION

Nation Suffering from Effects of Two Dangerous Poisons and Cure Is Increase of Consuming Power and Decrease of Output to Meet Actual Needs.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, March 3.—Large doses of two painful and dangerous poisons have been injected into the economic structure of this country in the last three years. The result is that the patient is weak, his nerves shattered, and he is in need of rest and recuperation.

The first of the poisons was malignant inflation, which was not confined to finances and the currency system, but entered into the industrial structure, the production of goods, the prices of commodities, the output of raw materials, and caused over-expansion in every other line of business.

The other poison is that of the deflation of the last year, which is just as dangerous and devastating as the poison of inflation.

Between these two extremes is a middle ground, which economists call "normalcy," and the country is striving now to reach it.

Inflation's Evil Effects.

The poison of inflation continued its spread over a period of several years, from 1919 to 1929, and developed into rampant and unwarranted speculation, and top-heavy conditions, in investments and securities, and into over-expansion of industry as well. Its most harmful and dangerous aspects were attained in the spread to the industrial structure.

If the retreat from inflation could have been checked at the line of "normalcy," the outcome would have been more satisfactory, and the depression probably would be a thing of the past now.

But the trouble with these things is that they are not so easily controlled. The swing is always from one extreme to the other, with untold harm to the whole country.

Balance the Remedy.

How to get on the middle ground of "normalcy," and stay there, is the question. Manifestly, to accomplish that end, industrial production must be balanced with consuming power. This means bringing the machinery of production under control, and restricting its output to the power and willingness of the country to consume.

As the first step, consuming power must be raised to a normal level. This means the return to employment of the 15,000,000 or more workers who are wholly or partly idle, or working in temporary jobs that are foreign to their chosen trades and vocations.

The next step is to reduce the output of the industrial machine to the actual needs and demands of consumption. That means a reduction in the operating time of factories and industrial establishments.

Leaders and spokesmen of organized labor say that this solution is to be found in the six-hour working day and the five-day working week. There can be no question as to the soundness of this proposal and of its inevitable realization. Unquestionably it holds the quickest and shortest solution of the matter.

For ten years after the war the country was keyed up to a war-time scale of production. The war-time machine was adequate to meet the needs of the country when a great many men were engaged on the battlefronts. But with these men back home, there has been no place for them in the industrial set-up, unless it was for the first two or three years, when the excessive demand in the devastated and exhausted regions of Europe for goods and commodities gave employment to them.

The consequence is that for almost thirteen years there has been a steadily rising ratio of men displaced in industry, or in other words, a steadily rising range of unemployment. Its growth and force has been augmented by the continued introduction of labor-saving machinery, chemicals and new processes in the production of goods.

Railroads Show Trend.

Perhaps the most striking illustration of this trend is found in the railroad industry, which is nation-wide in its scope, and past the era of expansion. In 1923 the railroads were employing 2,000,000 men, but at the height of the period of inflation, in 1929, this number had been reduced to 1,700,000.

Larger engines and cars, and longer trains were taking a toll in employment, notwithstanding the constantly growing volume of traffic that was moving on the rails.

But today the number of men employed by the railroads is 1,300,000, a net loss in eight years of 700,000. Not even the most optimistic railroad official believes that more than 300,000 of these displaced men will ever again find employment on the railroads.

Output Rises, Jobs Decrease.

The trend is significant with all industry. As the rate of production has been maintained, or increased, the employment of workers, who are the buying and consuming power, has steadily declined. The result today is that the productive machinery is adequate to meet the full normal consuming power of the country, but the buying power is so greatly reduced by unemployment that this machinery is forced into little more than half-time operation.

The answer is clear: The activity of industry must be brought down to fewer hours of operation, and production stabilized and evenly distributed on that basis.

Miners' Need for Food Near Crisis, Churches Told

Federal Council Official Predicts Untold Suffering and Sickness in Coal Districts Unless Adequate Aid Is Given Quickly.

New York City, March 3.—"The desperate need of food among miners' families in the soft coal areas is rapidly approaching a crisis," declared James Myers, industrial secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, in a special emergency appeal through the religious press to the churches of the whole country.

Mr. Myers, who has recently returned from a tour of inspection of the Quaker child feeding stations, gives it as his opinion that "while the Quakers are doing an effective piece of child feeding and have distributed many tons of clothing which has been received from nearly every state in the Union, their funds and supplies are insufficient for the heavy strain of the mid-winter crisis, which is nearly upon them.

"Not only children, but thousands of mothers and fathers as well, are in need of food. Unless these needs are met and met quickly untold suffering will result, and no one need be surprised if acts of desperation and violence occur. The situation constitutes, to my mind, the most acute relief problem and the most critical social problem in the United States today."

The American Friends service committee (Quakers), which has the indorsement and co-operation of the Federal Council of Churches, is thinking not only in terms of immediate relief, but is carrying on studies and experimental projects in rehabilitation and reconstruction, including adult vocational training, placement service, farm placement, gardening projects, recreational activities, camp rehabilitation projects.

A program of education is also being attempted to inform public opinion and arouse the public conscience to the need of an adequate reorganization and intelligent planning of this industry. A committee is preparing a discussion outline on the problems of the bituminous coal industry. A play has also been written, entitled "Shoes—An American Tragedy," designed to present in simple but dramatic form the need for shoes and clothing among the children. Copies of this play and of the discussion outline may be obtained from the office of the Federal Council of Churches.

Pointing out that five cents provides one nourishing meal, the Federal council asks that money be sent quickly to Miss Olive van Horn, treasurer of coal areas relief, Federal Council of Churches, 105 East Twenty-second street, New York City. All funds will be forwarded to the Quakers for relief in the field. Clothing should be sent direct, prepaid, from the east, to American Friends service committee, "For Miners," 1515 Cherry street, Philadelphia, Pa., and from the west to American Friends Service committee, Morgantown, W. Va.

Overall Workers Strike Against Wage Reduction

Employes of Big Greensboro Plant Begin Fight Against Bedaux System on Bicentennial of Washington's Birth.

Greensboro, N. C., March 3.—"I will never employ any help that belongs to a union in my plant," said Milton H. Zauber, secretary and general manager of the Blue Bell Overall company of this city.

It was in more prosperous days than these that Zauber made that statement, but he meant it. Never in the years that the wiry little man has had a big say-so in the policies of the concern that enjoys the prestige of being the south's largest manufacturer of working clothes has any trade union been able to get a foothold in the plant.

But it did not require membership in a trade union to show the nearly 1,300 employes of the big plant that inauguration of a version of the Bedaux efficiency system and a flat hourly rate of pay rather than the piece work schedule of the past that they were in for a trimming. The mill officials have assured the men and women who make overalls that they will like the new system when they once get accustomed to it. But they have checked up what they have been earning with what they are able to make under the Bedaux system and insist that their pay has been cut just about in half.

So Zauber, the man who would avoid all the evils of dealing with trade unionists organized to protect their fundamental rights, found himself with rush orders and a force that rose up in arms and observed the bicentennial of George Washington's birth by walking out in protest against wage cuts and a Bedaux efficiency regime.

Employes of the Ebroclo Shirt company, which employs between 200 and 300, mostly women, also staged a general walk-out. The shirt plant is a branch of the big overall plant.

BILL TO BAR INCORPORATION COUNTERFEIT TRADE UNIONS

Albany, N. Y.—A bill drafted by the New York State Federation of Labor to prevent the incorporation of counterfeit trade unions has been introduced in the legislature. At present the secretary of state must grant the certificates of incorporation if the application is approved by a supreme court justice. Labor's bill prohibits the use of the title words indicating a labor union except by a bona fide labor organization and provides that applications for such incorporation by societies or groups claiming to be bona fide wage-earners organized to collectively bargain with employes must be submitted to the state industrial board for approval before an incorporation certificate can be granted.

Let's Get Together And Pull Together!

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Workers Must Sign to Get a Job.

"I know it can be said, and always is said, that the man seeking work does not have to sign this contract; that he does not have to work under the conditions named in the contract, because he has the right to refuse to enter into any employment contrary to what he believes to be right.

"But all this, as a practical proposition, is no defense whatever.

"If the man applying for labor refuses to sign this contract, he can go on to some other corporation doing the same kind of business and apply for a job.

"But when he does he will be confronted with the same 'yellow dog' contract.

"As he goes from place to place in his attempt to get work in his chosen field he will always be presented with the same conditions.

"For instance, if the man hunting a job is a coal miner he presents himself at the office of the corporation, asks for a job, and he is at once presented with the 'yellow dog' contract and told to sign on the dotted line.

"If he declines to sign and goes to the next coal mine, he is presented with the same contract, and so on throughout the entire coal field.

Makes Slaves of Employes.

"The result is that by the combination of large corporations in a particular line of business, the laboring man must accept unconditionally the terms laid down by the employer.

"He is absolutely helpless under such contracts.

"His family cannot have food to eat or clothes to wear unless he gets a job.

"If he gets a job he must surrender his liberty.

"He must, for the time being, become a slave. He cannot associate with his fellows.

"In connection with his fellows, he cannot present a grievance to the employer.

"He has agreed to make no such demand.

"If conditions become unbearable his only remedy is to go alone and face the big combination or perhaps millions of wealth.

Sign Contract or Starve.

"He must singly present any grievance he has.

"He must abide by the decision which is thus given him. He has no appeal.

"He has no opportunity to join with his fellows and make his demands effective. In effect, if he must live and support his family and clothe his children, he must surrender his liberty.

Bill Outlaws "Yellow Dog."

"These conditions have grown up because of the combinations of great aggregations of wealth. The poor man, standing alone, is absolutely helpless. This bill declares that such contracts are 'contrary to the public policy of the United States, shall not be enforceable and shall not afford any basis for the granting of legal or equitable relief by any court of the United States.'

"Many of the injunctions which have been issued in the past in labor disputes have been based wholly, or in a large part, upon such contracts, and upon the assumption that they are valid.

"As I have briefly outlined, this bill sets up a public policy.

"One of the objects of this proposed legislation is to outlaw this unconscionable and indefensible contract, and some action by congress in this respect is absolutely necessary, because, as I have said, many labor injunctions have been sustained on the theory that such contracts are legal.

"By the abolition of these unconscionable contracts, this bill sets on the mountop a beacon of human liberty," Senator Norris went on.

"It gives to those who toil, to those who are poor, to those who by the sweat of their faces contribute to the happiness of humble homes the enjoyment of that freedom and that liberty which is necessary in every free country for all of its citizens and not by one class of its people.

"It gives liberty to the downtrodden and the poor, and in this respect puts them on an equality with those who live in luxury and plenty.

"Human liberty after all . . . just as precious to the man who toils in the darkness of the bottomless mine as it is to the man who controls a nation or who owns unlimited wealth.

"It gives hope to the little children of those who have no hope. Liberty is blotted out.

"It brings joy and peace to the humble hearth, the weather beaten cottage.

"It fills the heart with pride and with love of country and of all mankind."

A local man told a story the other day which is worth repeating. Two boys were returning from Sunday school and were discussing an important subject. "Do you think there's a God?" asked one little fellow. "Naw," said the other. "It's just like Santa Claus; it's your dad."

FLOOD CONTROL WORK SHOULD BE PUSHED, HOOSIER GOVERNOR SAYS

Chief Executive Advocates Prompt Action—Strongly Opposes Pay Cuts, Praises Union Men's Efficiency —State Conservation Head Urges Taxing of Machines.

By JOSEPH A. WISE.

Indianapolis, Ind., March 3.—Gov. Harry G. Leslie, of Indiana, in an interview with International Labor News Service at the statehouse in this city, said that the federal government would do well to push flood control work throughout the Mississippi valley without further delay. He said he believed that the congress of the United States should repeal the amendment to the act of May 15, 1928, which spread an appropriation of $340,000,000 over a ten-year period. By repealing the amendment, the governor said, the whole remaining part of the appropriation could be made available immediately.

Colonel Richard Leiber, director of the department of conservation of the state of Indiana, to whom Gov. Leslie referred me for more detailed information, declared that the recurrent flood conditions in the Mississippi valley presented "an emergency as great as war," but that the people generally of the nation do not realize this fact.

Gov. Leslie discussed several other topics during the interview of an hour in length.

"I am unalterably opposed to the widespread wage slashes of 10 and 20 per cent," he said. "Great pressure is being brought to bear to have me call a special session of the legislature, at which it is proposed to enact legislation which will lead to the cutting of the salaries of school teachers and other public servants. The school teachers and many other classes of public employes are having sufficient difficulty in getting along on their present pay.

"We have more union men on the state pay roll now than at any time in history. I am not hiring these men because they are union members, but rather because of their efficiency. It is a matter of economy. These men know their business and in their selection of material with which to do their work they effect a big saving. Right here in the statehouse we are no longer littered up with a lot of old junk that no one can find use for."

Effective Relief System.

Discussing unemployment and relief, Gov. Leslie said:

"I can take care of any case of distress at any point in Indiana within two hours over the telephone sitting right here at my desk in the state capitol. I have a representative in each of the ninety-two counties of the state to take care of the needy, and each one of these county representatives has a representative in each township. It is a mere matter of organization and having the funds to carry on the work. We have the money and Indiana is one of the four states in the Union which is completely out of debt."

Col. Leiber said that he employs hand labor in preference to machines in grading and draining the great state park system and forest preserves in Indiana, and that he finds this to be of advantage to the state in many ways.

Tax Machine, He Urges.

"Some may want to call me a bolshevik or even worse," said Colonel Leiber, "but I believe that we should tax the machine rather than the man. If a machine displaces fifty men, then why not tax the machine the machine the same amount that has been assessed against the fifty men? We can't go on forever building Frankensteins."

Col. Leiber said that the building of levees, dams and reservoirs is only one phase of flood control work. Utilization of land, he said, is equally important, if not more so, and should be co-ordinated and go along with the construction work that the public mind generally associates with flood control. His discussion of the subject covers such a broad field and is of so much interest that it cannot be adequately dealt with until next week.

Relief Spending In 1931 Fourfold Figures for 1929

Russell Sage Foundation Report Shows Great Increases of Aid Expenditures of 81 Big American Cities.

New York City, March 3.—Relief expenditures in eighty-one large American cities for the full year 1931 were approximately four times as great as those for 1929. This finding is the result of a comparative study of expenditures of both public and private relief agencies in these cities made by Ralph G. Hurlin, director of the department of statistics of the Russell Sage Foundation.

Reports from over 500 public and private relief agencies show actual relief grants to families in the eighty-one selected cities amounting to over $167,000,000 in 1931 as compared with only $42,370,000 in 1929. Public agencies spent about three-quarters of these sums, with a slight falling off in this proportion in 1931.

Real Increase Even Greater.

Dr. Hurlin points out that the proportional increase in unemployment relief is much greater than these figures indicate, since they include public aid to widowed mothers, the needy blind, and the needy aged, which has not increased so greatly as a result of unemployment. Omitting these, the amount of emergency relief for 1931 becomes $132,000,000, or nearly five and one-half times the corresponding amount for 1929.

A month by month analysis of the relief in 1931 reveals striking increases in the last three months of the year. December established a new high level of relief expenditures in almost every city. There was an increase for the total group of cities of 40 per cent over the already high total of November, and if the record of the two previous years is repeated, large further increases may be expected during the remainder of the winter, the peak being usually reached in March. In this general and pronounced increase in relief expenditures it is notable that five cities, Cleveland, Detroit, Norfolk, Memphis and Fort Worth, record a decrease for December, 1931, as compared with the preceding December.

Work Relief Idea Gains.

Comment is also made in the report upon the wide use of work relief in the present winter. This type of assistance, which consists in giving the relief applicant a nominal wage for useful work performed usually in parks or other non-profit-making enterprises, was used scarcely at all in previous depressions. It has been adopted in many cities during this emergency and in December was an important feature of the relief program in thirty-four of the eighty-one cities included in the Sage Foundation's study. The proportion of the relief budget expended for wages of this sort is reported to have risen from less than one-tenth of 1 per cent in 1929 to approximately 25 per cent in 1931.

In New York City, which has supported the most extensive projects of this sort so far undertaken, public and private work relief bureaus distributed $3,108,000 in work relief wages during December alone.

COST OF FAMILY RELIEF REPORTED IN BIG JUMP

Washington, March 3.—Family relief expenditures in sixty-five cities in the United States increased 327 per cent during the past three years, according to a report just issued by the children's bureau, United States department of labor. The amount spent in these cities in 1931 was $46,200,000 as compared with $22,900,000 the year before and $10,800,000 in 1929.

Expenditures rose sharply during the last quarter of 1931, with $6,300,000 spent in December alone—an increase of 38 per cent over November and more than double the amount provided in September for the care of the needy in their own homes, the bureau reported.

General Reduction Found in Toilers' Living Standards

Welfare Council Investigators Report Need of New York City Unemployed Greater Than Ever Before.

New York City, March 3.—The present depression has resulted in a general reduction in standards of living for wage-earners, the Welfare council reports. Effects of unemployment are described in the report, which is based on investigations made by 900 experienced social workers and public health nurses who have made a total of nearly 1,000,000 visits to the homes of the poor in the last two years.

The report quotes the investigators as saying the current depression has produced greater distress than they ever have observed before.

The general conclusion of the report is that there seems to be little room for doubt that there has been a general reduction in standards of living all along the line of moderate and low income groups, except for the chronically unemployed and dependent, who may have fared somewhat better than usual.

"In general, families accustomed to living at the margin dropped below," the report says. "Families who have never before been dependent were reduced to the level of the usual run of cases under care of the agencies. Foreign-born families who had by years of industry and effort raised themselves to a much better position were obliged to drop back to the level at which they started in America, or even lower."

The comments of the investigators on conditions of families a year ago as compared with the observed standards of living during normal years are summarized as follows:

"With few exceptions those who had any basis for comparison say they saw much more distress last winter, both in extent and in degree, than they had ever seen before, and that standards of living had fallen noticeably in the last two or three years."

CO-OPERATIVE STATE URGED.

Opening the annual convention at Saskatoon of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, President A. J. Macauley called for the establishment of a new social order based on production for use and not for profit.

The traditional political parties, he declared, are bound, gagged and fettered by an alliance with the predatory and selfish aims of the vested financial interests. For this reason organized farmers, in co-operation with organized labor, should be prepared to accept the responsibility of setting up a "new social economic administration in the political arena," composed of their own representatives, which would enact legislation to bring into effect a "co-operative commonwealth."

Labor to Demand Keystone State Care for Jobless

Great Philadelphia Meeting Is Called to Insist Pennsylvania Do as Senator Reed Declared It Can.

Philadelphia, March 3.—"Pennsylvania can fend for her own," Senator David Reed told the United States congress. Senator Reed led in the fight which defeated the La Follette-Costigan bill to provide federal aid for the unemployed.

Organized labor in Pennsylvania now demands of the Pennsylvania republican machine, and its servant, Senator Reed, that it demonstrate that this state actually will do what the senator says it can do.

The central labor union of Philadelphia, on receipt of news that the La Follette-Costigan bill had been defeated in the senate, completed plans for a monster all-Philadelphia demonstration at convention hall on Saturday afternoon, March 5.

Convention hall will seat as many as 13,000 persons, and it is the determination of the central labor union to pack the great meeting place with citizens of Philadelphia who will demand of the political powers that be in Pennsylvania that relief be provided for the hundreds of thousands of starving victims of unemployment.

Labor Head to Speak.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and United States Senator Costigan, of Colorado, will be among the principal speakers at this gathering.

At a meeting held in the Labor Lyceum, a whole series of committees were elected, including representatives of virtually every local union in this city, all of which will work together to put over the monster protest meeting and make it the most significant event in local labor history in the past decade.

"The central labor union is pushing through plans for the monster demonstration at Convention hall to protest the action of our political rulers in kicking the La Follette-Costigan bill out of the back door of the senate on the grounds that the states could look after their own," declares Adolph Hirschberg, president of the central labor union.

States Must Make Good.

"Now it is up to the states to come through and provide an alternative proposal which will meet the urgent and overwhelming needs of the situation. Although the Talbot bill has been declared constitutional by the Dauphin county courts, the money it authorizes for distribution will not be available until after the appeal to the state supreme court is settled.

"In any case the amounts provided for in the Talbot bill will not be sufficient. It is obvious that another special session of the Pennsylvania legislature will still have to be called to raise still further funds for relief needs. Pennsylvania must fend for her own as her representatives say she can. If Pennsylvania can do this and won't, she must be made to do so. The very existence of the commonwealth is jeopardized when little children are permitted to starve and endure horrible privation."

ALL SET" FOR OPEN MEETING CENTRAL BODY

mittee Promises Interesting Program.

T-TOGETHER TO BE HELD MONDAY

, Eats, Speeches and her Features Planned for Guests.

"All set," was the announcement made jointly Thursday by ge Forbes, chairman of Central Body's entertainment committee, and George Perry, chairman of a special committee arged with the duty of arranging a program for the big open ting and get-together session be held in the auditorium of tral Body hall Monday night.

Instructed to prepare a program which would be both interesting and entertaining, the joint committees have apparently done their work well. Departing somewhat from the arrangements prior for the previous similar ting, staged Dec. 28, the committee will offer a program consisting, for the most part, of "local talent." W. E. Cheek, secretary-treasurer of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, will be the only out-of-town guest, and even Mr. Cheek's acceptance had not been received at press time.

However, that the evening's activities will contain features that should interest every taste is indicated in the announcement, which includes, besides several short talks, musical numbers and the appearance on the scene, by special arrangement, of a well-known magician, who, it is claimed, will perform feats of magic which rival those of Herrmann, Blackstone and others. Richard Aymon, well-known local pianist, is scheduled for a number or two, and further musical diversion will be furnished by equally well-known vocalists.

The speaking program includes brief addresses by the Rev. Paul Hannon, who thrilled the guests with the last "party" with a few well-chosen words; W. E. Cheek, who will have somewhat to say for the Tennessee Federation of Labor; Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers of America, who will discuss the progress of his craft in Tennessee, and Paul J. Ayers, whose sincerity and philosophy has become well known during the past few years.

The meeting will be called to order by President Ortwein at 8 o'clock and a short business session will be held, after which President Ortwein will turn the meeting over to George Forbes, who will preside at the festivities.

During the course of the program the guests will be served with hot coffee, sandwiches, cold drinks, etc., and an abundant supply of these refreshments is expected for all trades unionists who attend.

The meeting, it is announced, is open to any member of a local union, and the committee hopes that all expects to serve a capacity crowd.

...ribution of 40,000,000 Bushels Authorized to Relieve ...ger and Distress.

...e of the wheat may be used to feed stock in northwestern states, where the drought last year, but the bulk will go as food to destitute persons.

...Red Cross, or organization designated by it, may mill the wheat, except in cities of over 25,000, bake it into bread. No profit is allowed in the proceeding.

...B. Payne, chairman of the agriculture, told the house agricultural committee that 1,850 of its 3,000 counties are now engaged in relief work in every county of the nation during the last several months have been feeding 1,000,000 people. The wheat remains available until July 1, 1933.

Advisory Board To Guide Prison Industries Asked

New York Committee Proposes Continuation of Prison Workshop Policies Aimed to Rehabilitate Convicts.

New York City, March 9.—Organization of representatives of industry, labor and the public into a continuing advisory body to assist in the direction of prison industries in New York, was recommended in the report of the New York state advisory committee on prison industries, submitted to the legislature by the commission to investigate prison administration and construction.

Besides helping apply to prison industries the business methods proved successful in free industries, the advisory body would help insure their continuance along lines best serving the economic and social welfare of the people of the state.

The report upholds the principle, established since 1896, that the goods produced in the prisons of the state be distributed to its own institutions and departments and those of its political subdivisions and prohibiting the sale of these goods on the open market in general competition.

The labor members of the advisory committee on prison industries, appointed by Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, are:

Hugh Frayne, general organizer, American Federation of Labor; E. J. Volz, president, International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America; John Sullivan, president, New York State Federation of Labor; Rose Schneiderman, president, Women's Trade Union League.

Other members represent the manufacturers, agriculture and the public. George Gordon Battle is chairman.

Legislative Support Asked.

Mr. Battle, in asking the support of the legislature for the development of the prison industries along the lines laid down by the final report, said:

"It would seem a matter of practical business, when harassed by lack of funds for appropriation, not to hamper in any way the one government agency whose efficiency spells not only a social benefit for the prisoners but a definite economic asset for the state. The prison industries have returned to the treasury of the state millions of dollars and would have returned many millions more if it had not been for the waste motion, inadequacy and confusion which we desire to do away with."

Development of the prison industries to produce "rehabilitated men" as "the most desirable product of the prisons of New York state," constituted the fundamental principle upon which are based the individual committee reports on business administration, market and standards, production methods, maintenance activities, farm activities, industrial training and wages. The committees representing organized labor, organized industry and the public, after giving thorough consideration to the prison industries "in relation to the economic welfare of the people of the state as a whole," emphasized "the development of the industries in relation to the effect upon the economic, social and moral welfare of the 9,000 men and women in the state's penal institutions. The 2,000 of these prisoners who every year return to their home communities constitutes the product of the prisons which is of greatest concern to our social and economic system. Men cannot be buried in prison. Productive utilization of the time spent in prison will prepare them for their release."

General Electric Cuts Jobless Relief Fund

Balance of $367,000 in $960,000 Fund Makes Reduction Possible.

Schenectady, N. Y.—Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric company, announced that employes of the company who, since Nov. 1, have been contributing 2 per cent of their average full-time earnings toward the relief of part-time workers and the unemployed within the company, would have but 1 per cent deducted from their pay as of March 1.

During the four months the employes have contributed about 5480,000, which has been matched dollar for dollar by the General Electric company, making a total of $960,000. In the same period $593,000 has been paid out to employes, leaving a balance in the fund of $367,000.

"While the estimates of the monthly amounts to be paid out for March and April, the last two months under the six-months plan adopted last fall to assist employes during the winter, are greater than for the preceding four months, the indications are that with the surplus on hand contributions of 1 per cent during these two months will be sufficient to meet the employment guarantee," Mr. Swope said.

The $960,000 contributed to this fund does not include about $1,000,000 collected and distributed among employes in the ten months preceding Nov. 1, under the Swope unemployment insurance plan adopted Dec. 1, 1930. Half of this million dollars was contributed by employes and the other half by the company.

'Yellow Dog' Outlawed, Injunction Judges Hit By Nation's Congress

Climaxing a fight which has continued over a period of many years, the house of representatives on Tuesday followed action by the United States senate in overwhelmingly approving an anti-injunction bill which, though far from perfect, constitutes the greatest step toward curbing the activities of equity judges who have without "let or hindrance," and at the behest of labor-hating industrial despots, issued court orders which deprived American workers of almost every right guaranteed under the constitution of the United States.

The senate vote, announced last week, was 75 to 5, and the house members approved the bill by a score of 363 to 13, the only spokesmen remaining against the proposal being Beck, of Pennsylvania, and (of course) "blatant, bleating Blanton," the gentleman from Texas who, if memory serves correctly, was severely censured a few years ago for publishing obscene remarks in the Congressional Record.

Provisions of the bill as finally passed are not known locally in detail, but Chattanooga trades unionists are jubilant over the announcement that the law will:

Outlaw the iniquitous "yellow-dog" contract, the championing of which cost at least one gentleman the honor of serving as a judge of the supreme court of the United States;

Declare the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively with employers;

Prohibit the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes without a hearing, barring a situation where established criminal courts cannot or will not function;

Grant jury trials to those charged with contempt, and the right to demand a new trial judge.

Local trades unionists take the position that if the above features are so framed as to stand the test of the courts and the whims of trial judges, the greatest victory in decades has been gained for the masses of American labor.

"Lame Duck" Bill Sent to States For Ratification

Final Passage by Senate of Norris Proposal to Abolish Short Sessions of Congress Ends Long Fight.

Washington, March 10.—With the approval by the senate of the conference report on the Norris "lame duck" amendment will be put before the states for ratification. The amendment is supported by organized labor.

The proposal to abolish the "lame duck" session of congress, introduced by Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, received the senate's final approval on March 2 by a vote of 73 to 3 and was sent to the state department for submission to the states. It must be ratified by the required thirty-six states within seven years.

Action on the amendment marked victory in a nine-year struggle during which it passed the senate six times previously. It was blocked regularly, however, by the insistence of the house upon a definite adjournment date for congress.

The measure eliminates the "short session" of congress extending from the first Monday in December until March 4, and establishes sessions of indeterminate length to begin each Jan. 3.

At present "lame ducks"—members of congress defeated for re-election in November—may continue to legislate throughout the short session.

Under the amendment members would take up their duties on Jan. 3—two months after their election—instead of waiting thirteen months until the following December.

Terms of the president and vice-president would begin on Jan. 20 instead of March 4.

N. Y. Printing Pressmen Pay $1 a Day for Jobless

New York.—James Conway, president of Printing Pressmen's Union No. 51, announced that every member of the union was assessed $1 for every day he works to swell the fund for the relief of unemployed members.

The increase from the present assessment of about $2 a week was made necessary by the rise in unemployment among the pressmen. Mr. Conway said that 885 out of the 3,600 members of the union, all of whom work in job and book printing plants, are on the unemployed benefit list.

More than $1,120,000 has already been distributed through this union since the beginning of the depression, Mr. Conway said, and he commended the action of the 2,200 members who approved the increased assessment.

Mr. Conway also declared that the union labor campaign fostered by the eighteen units of the allied printing trades in the city was meeting with great success and that hundreds of small job printing plants were being organized because the people of the city were becoming "union labor conscious."

The cost of living in Germany at the close of 1931 was relatively higher than in any other European country, according to a report from United States Consul John H. Bruins, Hamburg.

LABOR BALKS AT NEW PLAN FOR PAY CUTS

Uphold Salaries of City Employes.

POLICE, FIREMEN HAVE A CHAMPION

Central Body's Board Calls Proposal for "Voluntary Cut" Subterfuge.

Proposal that members of the Chattanooga fire and police departments "voluntarily" accept reductions in pay below the scale as set by legislative act has brought comment and criticism from various sources, and executive board of Central Body has prepared a resolution for introduction at Monday night's session protesting against the suggestion as a matter of principle. It is held that, aside from the futility of wage cuts as an aid to the present depression, the scale for city employes mentioned was set by the legislature for the very purpose of forestalling the rise or fall of these salaries at the whim of anyone who happens to hold a city office.

It is thought that the question will put an extra amount of "pep" into Central Body meeting Monday night, as the resolution adopted by the executive board will be placed before the delegates for their approval or disapproval at a short session prior to the open meeting and get-together scheduled for that date.

The executive committee's opinion, released for publication this week, was expressed as follows:

Whereas, there has been some publicity given to the suggestion made by certain interests that the city firemen and policemen accept a "volunteer" cut in wages, and,

Whereas, their wages are fixed by legislative enactment at $160 per month and cannot be legally changed except by the legislature, and,

Whereas, we feel that these men should not be asked to buy presentable uniforms and other equipment and support a family on anything less than their present salary, and,

Whereas, these men are required to face more dangers during these trying times and are now doing their bit to aid during the depression by operating the soup kitchens, investigating the appeals for charity, distributing and collecting the coin boxes for relief, directing traffic at the schools to safeguard the lives of our children and many other added duties, most of this work being done after their regular hours of duty, therefore, be it

Resolved, their record for efficiency, their loyalty to duty, their great responsibility together with the sacrifice now being made should be considered by the city commissioners and taxpayers and that we, the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, condemn, in principle, this so-called voluntary cut in wages as a subterfuge to evade the law and an injustice to loyal, efficient and underpaid public servants.

Work Campaign Finds Jobs For Nearly 140,000

Labor Bending Every Effort to Aid Great Drive, Which Has Spread to All Sections of Nation.

New York, March 10.—The swing of the campaign to find jobs for a million men moves on upward, reports to the headquarters of the united action for employment campaign at the Biltmore hotel reveal. Tabulations show that jobs have been found for 137,715 persons since the big drive started, up to noon of March 2. The campaign is under the direction of the American Legion, American Federation of Labor, Association of National Advertisers and the legion auxiliary.

With activities grouped around local labor unions and American Legion posts, the campaign has rapidly spread until it encompasses the whole country. Reports have been received from forty-two states of the Union telling of job-finding activities. Central labor unions from hundreds of industrial centers in reports to Matthew Woll, chairman of the labor division, show that organized labor is bending every effort in its co-operation to help break the depression which has so long gripped the nation.

Industrial Plants Reopen.

The Ford Motor company is reported as having put 1,700 men to work in Minneapolis, 400 in St. Louis and 400 in Hamilton, O. The Laughlin China company, of East Liverpool, O., will reopen and place 425 men to work. A Birmingham (Ala.) iron company has reopened and placed 2,020 men on the pay rolls. In Buffalo and Erie county, New York, 2,940 men have been put to work, the majority of which are being paid from a fund contributed to pay for "made" work.

In Chicago, many employers of labor are using the "stagger" system in work hours in order to keep their full forces at work. Even the lowly but popular broccoli is helping, as the demand for this vegetable is such throughout the country that the truck growers at Morehead City, N. C., have put 600 men to work harvesting the crop.

Drive Booms Public Work.

The drive, also, has brought about an increase in public work, especially road building, which has taken on new importance in from seventeen to twenty states. In agricultural sections, as spring work approaches, hiring of farm labor has helped to take the slack out of employment in many sections.

In seventeen communities reporting to headquarters almost $11,000,000 has been pledged to pay wages of labor for "made" work.

Chairman Woll, of the labor division, said he was gratified at the showing made by organized labor and believed that the million mark in jobs found for the unemployed will be exceeded before the drive is over.

Tax Rich More, Canadian Lower House Demands

Commons Passes Resolution in Protest Against Government's Wage Cutting Policy, Denounced as Bad Example.

Ottawa, March 9.—After increasing interest rates on Dominion loans and incidentally forcing the provinces to pay as high as 6 per cent on new loans, the Bennett government has cut by 10 per cent the pay of all federal employes except judges and the Royal Canadian Mountel police. The credit and integrity of Canada must be protected at all costs, Premier Bennett declares.

Even the farmers' representatives in parliament denounced the government's new policy of wage cutting as stting a bad example and curtailing purchasing power while the crying need is an increase of purchasing power.

By way of protest against the government's concern for the welfare of the monied interests, the United Farmers sponsored a resolution declaring that in the opinion of the house of commons the government should at once increase taxes on the bigger incomes. It is probably significant of the feeling aroused that the house adopted the resolution. Whether the government will take heed remains to be seen when the budget is brought down.

Wealth Badly Distributed.

Simultaneously with the government's revelation of its policy of rigid economy, the Dominion bureau of statistics, a government body, announced that the national wealth was 30 billions and the national income six billions. The population being ten millions, the per capita national income is $600, or $3,000 per family of five.

But the national income is so badly distributed that despite the expenditure of $150,000,000 on public relief works during the last two winters, it is estimated that there are over 500,000 out of work, and many more only partially employed.

Now Bennett repudiates his promise to end unemployment, declaring that Canadian prosperity must await world recovery. There are signs of impatience with this attitude.

Higher Wages Would Help.

Why, it is being asked, should hundreds of thousands suffer because the farmers cannot sell wheat at a profitable price in foreign markets? If there had been anything like an equitable distribution of the national income, there would have been such a demand for quality foodstuffs in the home market that many farmers would have turned from wheat production for foreign markets to the production of quality foods for the home markets; and the present dislocation of the national economy would have been avoided. If the Canadian urban workers received higher wages they would be able to buy better quality farm products and the farmers could curtail grain growing and produce better food for the home market.

$132,000,000 Bill Makes 55,400 Jobs

House of Representatives Authorizes Federal Loans to States for Road Work.

Washington.—The house of representatives authorized the appropriation of $132,000,000 for emergency highway construction to relieve unemployment.

Of the total amount, $10,000,000 will be allocated to the states in the form of loans to be deducted from future authorizations for appropriations in the federal-aid system, and $12,500,000 will be used for road construction in national forests, national parks, Indian reservations, etc.

The house accepted the amendments offered by Representative La Guardia, of New York, restricting the use of the fund to projects on which prevailing wage rates are paid and prohibiting their use for projects employing convict labor. Another amendment restricted the use of the fund to projects employing American citizens exclusively.

It was estimated during the discussion of the bill that the $132,000,000 would give employment to all the way from 18,000 to 1,000,000 jobless workers.

One tabulation, said to be official, said the enactment of the measure would give direct employment to about 37,000 persons, and indirect employment to about 18,400. This estimate was made on the basis of one-half a person employed in the manufacture of road materials and machinery to each person directly employed on the highways or in their maintenance.

Secretary of Agriculture Hyde denounced the bill as an unwarranted extravagance, and administration leaders predicted that the president would veto it if it should pass the senate.

OPPOSITION TO LEWIS RE-AFFIRMED.

Opposition to International President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America, was reaffirmed on Feb. 27 by the Illinois district of the organization in voting to continue enforcement of an injunction restraining him from interfering in Illinois union activities.

BEN WILLIAMS MAKES PLEA FOR UNION MINERS

Asks Workers to Demand Tennessee Coal.

SAYS HIGH-GRADE PRODUCT IS OFFERED

Will Start Local Campaign in Interest of Industry in State.

"If all the trades unionists in Tennessee would demand and accept only union-mined coal, the organized mines of this state would be forced to operate at capacity, and the result would be a great factor in the organizing of every coal mine in Tennessee," said Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers of America, upon his return from Nashville, where he has been conducting a campaign in support of the Tennessee product.

"Furthermore," Mr. Williams continued, "a demand by the general public for coal mined in this state would not only insure full-time operation of all mines, but would require more than it is possible for all the mines to produce, and would put an end to the depression so far as it affects Tennessee mine workers and operators. If the people in the various communities could see conditions under which our own miners work, I believe such a sentiment would immediately become widespread, and the consequent reaction would be a boon to business of all kinds.

"Chattanooga, for instance, is a natural market for Tennessee mines, and the quality offered is on a par with coal mined in distant states, but indifference and short-sightedness of local citizens results in the dealer being forced to offer a product produced in many cases miles beyond our borders."

Coal mines along the Tennessee Central railroad, he said, are all 100 per cent union, with the exception of one small works, which discharged thirty-two men for expressing their belief in the principles of collective bargaining. Mines working under agreement with the workers include the Briar Hill collieries, operating the mines at Crawford and Twinton, in Overton county; the Davidson Coal company, at Davidson, Fentress county; Fentress Coal company, at Wilder, Fentress county.

Mr. Williams declared that in some Tennessee mines, although operating only part time, miners are being paid as low as $2 per day, and a job which will bring as much as $3 is an exceptional case.

The miners' official declared he will endeavor to start a campaign locally among members of organized labor and their friends for a demand for union-mined coal. He added that he was delighted with the results of his recent work in Nashville along this line, stating that he is receiving much encouragement in the state capital.

Senate Refuses Aid For Convict Roads

Votes, 45 to 24, to Deny U. S. Funds for Highways If Built by Prisoners.

Washington.—The senate voted to retain in the agricultural appropriation bill the provision against the use of federal-aid highway funds on projects involving convict labor.

The convict labor limitation was inserted in the bill in the house of representatives by an amendment offered by Representative La Guardia, of New York. The senate appropriations committee struck out the amendment in the bill as reported to the senate. The senate overturned the recommendation of the committee and put the anti-convict labor proviso back by a vote of 45 to 24.

The restriction affects four states.

Lamont's Son to Rule Soviet Cattle Industry

Denver, Colo.—Robert P. Lamont Jr., son of the secretary of commerce left here for Moscow, Russia, to consider a scheme of the union of soviet social republics for the development of the cattle industry. He owns a 15,000-acre ranch near here.

The soviet union, Mr. Lamont said, wants its cattle breeding problem handled in a scientific way to increase the number of cattle so as to raise the per capita consumption of live stock to 100 pounds a year, which would place it on a parity with the United States.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter III
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part VII

When we consider the mental and political conditions of the people among whom Jesus grew to manhood, their thwarted hopes, their traditions trampled underfoot by foreign conquerors and their own incapacity to disengage their politics from their religion it is amazing how clear to His mind was the supreme truth that that is the Father's world and that life is a means and not the end. Ordinarily, we of today also refuse to look at life as did Jesus. The thought that the social questions men's relations with each other are apparently hopeless of solution fills the average person's mind with a pessimistic social outlook. But any such view of the social question resolves itself into one of opinion. For our minds grasp what Jesus' real viewpoint was.

WM. L. MOSS

Jesus was the first teacher of humankind to contribute a new point of view to man's opinion upon life—the view from above. He refused to accept the belief common then and just as prevalent today that men are chained to life as an animal is chained to a stake. The chained animal's horizon is fixed and is never more than what he sees day after day as he walks around and around the stake tugging at the chain. Many people look upon life as nothing more than this for themselves as well as for their fellowmen. Any such view of Life is the direct antithesis of Jesus' viewpoint. He knew life's conflicts and confusions are a part of the purposes of the Father and that He has made them a part of life not to pull us down but that we might conquer them and be truly fitted for the best in life. The average life is impulsive, teeming with motives, fickle, with fragmentary interests and characterized by short-lived and specialized enthusiasms. On the other hand, Jesus looked upon life with perspective and hope. Merely the question of a difference in viewpoints between life as Jesus found it and the way we find it? The world in which Jesus moved and had His being was no different than the world in which we live—men may cross a little differently, the style of architecture may have changed since then, but life's problems, life's meaning and life's experiences are the same. So today, as He looked upon life we need, that is to say, to look upon it from above. As Prof. [illegible], of Harvard university, has said: "The landscape is more truly viewed from the hilltop than from the gutter-ditch below."

What Next!

Now coal is being canned. A Pennsylvania coal company is packing its product in galvanized iron containers of various sizes, with a seal placed on to guarantee its contents.

BILIOUS

"I have used Black-Draught . . . and have not found anything that could take its place. I take Black-Draught for biliousness. When I get bilious, I have a nervous headache and a nervous, trembling feeling that unfits me for my work. After I take a few doses of Black-Draught, I get all right. When I begin to get bilious, I feel tired and run-down, and then the headache and trembling. But Black-Draught relieves all this."—H. C. Hendrix, Homerville, Ga.

The Labor Injunction at Work

Conservatives afflicted with respect for the brutality of certain types of employers and belief in the infallibility of the judicial wisdom of injunction judges frequently express surprise at Labor's unqualified condemnation of the injunction system for its destruction of the fundamental rights of American workers.

A sample picture of the use of one injunction recently issued will at least give the conservatives something to think about.

On January 28, 1932, the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucky granted an injunction, asked for by a coal concern called Straight Creek Coal, Inc., against William Garland and others, coal miners and tenants of the company.

Referring to Garland and the others, the injunction said:

> "And each of them is here and now and hereby enjoined and restrained until the further orders of this court are made known herein from remaining on the property of the complainant or in any houses thereon. And each of them is now enjoined to remove from said premises with all his or her effects within 10 days from and after the 26th day of January, 1932."

This is a plain case of a Kentucky mining company desiring to evict some of the miners occupying company houses. The law gives tenants certain rights and outlines certain procedure by which owners can secure possession of their houses. But instead of using this procedure the coal company and the judge threw out an injunction.

Senator Blaine, of Wisconsin, recently discussed this injunction in the U. S. Senate. He said:

> "This is a sample of injunctions issued in labor disputes.
>
> "The laws of the State of Kentucky provide for evictions, unlawful detainer actions may there be entertained, civil actions may be prosecuted to enforce the rights of employers, and yet those employers resorted to this unusual measure of coercion.
>
> "They set at naught the laws of the State of Kentucky.
>
> "Indeed, the employers who are engaged in obtaining some of these injunctions have no hesitation in asking a court to set aside the Constitution of the United States.
>
> "Here there is a horrible situation.
>
> "These men and women are Americans through whose veins courses the blood of their ancient ancestors.
>
> "They are driven out in the very midst of the chill of winter, not according to law, not according to the remedies provided for the employers, but driven out notwithstanding the law and notwithstanding the constitutional guaranties of those citizens.
> "This is but a single instance showing the character and degree of abuse that has been exercised in obtaining relief through the injunction process."

There are many injunctions in labor disputes on record in which the anti-union employers and judges have outraged Labor's constitutional rights even more seriously than in the one cited by Senator Blaine.

With the record available, it is tragic that there are still American citizens who stand by the labor injunction and protest against Congress exercising its authority to curb the power of judges to issue them.

It is doubly tragic that five members of the Senate and thirteen in the House, perfectly familiar with the atrocious use to which these injunctions are put in outraging Labor's rights, voted against the Norris injunction bill and thus favored the perpetuation of the labor-injunction system.

"Lame Duck" Congresses

The agreement by the U. S. Senate and House of Representatives on the phraseology of the Norris "lame duck" resolution to amend the Federal Constitution by changing the dates when the terms of the President, Vice-President, and members of Congress shall end, and when the Congress shall meet, constitutes next to the last step to end the so-called "lame duck" sessions of Congress.

Under the Norris amendment the terms of members of Congress will begin on January 3, the Congress will convene on that date annually, instead of thirteen months after the November elections, as at present, and the President and Vice-President will be inaugurated on January 20.

According to the present Constitution, the terms of members of Congress, the President and the Vice-President begin on March 4.

The term "lame duck" is used to describe the short session of Congress which at present meets in December following the November election and lasts until March 4 of the next year. Many of its members are often not elected to the new Congress, but enact laws for three months after they have been retired and their successors chosen.

Senator Norris, of Nebraska, began his fight to bring about the abolition of lame duck sessions of Congress fourteen years ago. The resolution was passed by the Senate six times and twice by the House of Representatives, but always with irreconcilable differences of sufficient importance to nullify its purpose.

The amendment must be ratified by three-fourths of the State Legislatures. It is generally admitted that the legislatures will approve it. It will not be possible for the legislatures to ratify it in time to affect the Congress elected next fall. But the Congress elected in November, 1934 will take office on January, 1935, and the President and Vice-President, also elected in November, will be inaugurated on January 20, 1935.

Senator Norris is to be congratulated on his victory for this important change in our system of representative government. The wonder is that our statesmen and citizens have permitted "lame duck" Congresses to legislate for the Nation for over 140 years.

Mine Explosion Kills 32 Miners

An explosion in the Bossevain mine of the Pocohontas Fuel Company at Pocohontas, Va., killed thirty-eight miners.

Their untimely death was a tragedy in itself. It was a double tragedy because it was probably a needless one.

Officials of the United States Bureau of Mines and other mining experts have definite information that rock dusting will prevent coal mine explosions.

Many mining companies, however, think it will be less costly to run the risks of explosions than to install the rock dusting system.

It is evident that measures of a compelling character are necessary to bring the recalcitrant mine owners and operators into line with the most approved systems for preventing mine explosions.

The lives of the coal miners and the welfare of their families are too valuable to permit individualistic mine owners to duplicate the risk which resulted in the Bossevain tragedy in order to save for the stockholders the cost of explosion preventing systems.

The Big Sinners!

Chickens may be away from home a long time, but that doesn't change their habit of eventually coming home to roost. Look back at the figures for the 1920 depression. They show that the BIG BULK of unemployment was among the BIG, basic industries.

It is exactly that way today. Big, mechanized industry, that takes fullest advantage of new machinery, new processes and new materials, has been the worst sinner in firing men.

If big industry were to take back half the men it has fired in the depression years, THERE WOULD BE NO BIG DEPRESSION. Yet, it is the so-called BIG fellows who go around preaching as if in them reposed all knowledge. Big business, big bankers, big book-writing economists — THEY KNOW WHAT'S WRONG. They ought to. They MADE the wrong.

SPEED THE DAY

By JOHN J. MANNING

Trades unionists who are Union Label boosters are those who are endowed with intelligence. Intelligence that foresees that labor's greatest weapon is the Union Label.

Those opposed to us realize the power of the Union Label to a greater extent than most of the members of organized labor realize this power.

To test this just say "Union Label" to the proprietor of any non-union shop and watch his face. He may try to cover his fear and hatred with clever talk but—watch his face.

Watch the face of the unfriendly merchant, who despises organized labor, the next time you ask for union-labeled merchandise. Watch his face when you inquire if his employes belong to a labor union.

His glib tongue will give you arguments galore but his face will reveal to you what his tongue is trying so hard to conceal.

After this test any trade unionist with an ounce of spunk or intelligence will join the Union Label boosters.

Union Label boosters are forever on the job for your label and for mine. It is their self-imposed mission to increase the union shops and to decrease the non-union shops.

When this mission, and its bearing on the welfare of the wage-earners of the family, is explained to the women who do the most of the purchasing for the family, they will not buy anything without the Union Label. No shop will be patronized that does not display a Union Card, and the Working Button will be demanded.

These loyal women will teach the little children to walk in their footsteps, and all will be Union Label boosters from the youngest to the oldest in the family.

Speed the day!

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

By a vote of 75 to 5, the United States senate has voted against any more injunctions against labor unions, except on the same terms as injunctions are granted to other petitioners; and against the "yellow dog" contract. In the house the majority was similarly impressive.

Only five senators voted to continue the old conditions. Even Reed, of Pennsylvania, was carried along with the tremendous force of the tide now setting in a new direction.

But the five senators—they were from Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Connecticut. Massachusetts and Rhode Island were the only New England states not represented in that unhappy minority.

One of these five is the author of a famous reference to certain other senators as being the "sons of the wild jackasses"—from the "backward states."

Are we needing another definition of "backward states?"

An industrial state, whose politicians do battle to keep the shackles of an industrial feudalism riveted on the limbs of its workers, ought to qualify in a sisterhood of backward states.

Passing strange—that the union men of the nation find their chief political friends among the men from the farming states! But it fits in with the new economics, in the light of which the farmers now see in the highly paid trade union members the best customers of their products.

* * *

Announcing that a nation-wide campaign for the union label, shop card and working button will be conducted during April, Secretary John J. Manning, of the Union Label Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, says:

"If this campaign receives the co-operation it deserves, it will help to relieve unemployment among trade unionists and will increase the business of fair employers."

The co-operation that Mr. Manning advocates is easy to give. Every trade unionist can help. By simply insisting on union made goods, trade unionists provide work for other union members and strengthen the labor movement as a whole. Of course this support should be given not only during the April campaign, but during every month of the year.

Gentlemen, Now What?

Congress defeated the La Follette-Costigan bill. It offers nothing else. In times like these a lot of wishes go overboard on the chance of getting any kind of help. That was the best bill congress seemed likely to enact. It killed that—and does neither anything better, nor anything worse.

Organize New Unions!

From all sides the word comes that "THIS IS THE TIME TO ORGANIZE." To which the logical answer is: "WELL THEN, GO AND ORGANIZE!" If anything is needed today, it is MORE UNIONS!

United Action for Employment

Endorsement of the movement by the Executive Council of the A. F. of L., President Green's active participation, officially, and Vice-President Matthew Woll's active part as chairman of the Division of Labor, should send every trade unionist into the UNITED ACTION FOR EMPLOYMENT Campaign. Any movement that can find jobs at the rate of 10,000 a day is worth getting into. GET IN AND HELP!

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Mooney Lauds Spirit Of Alfred Hoffmann

Famous Prisoner Expresses Hope Hosiery Workers' Organizer Will Soon Be Free—Labor Pushes Pardon Petition.

Stroudsburg, Pa., March 3.—Organizer Alfred Hoffmann, of the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, under a two-year sentence in the county jail here, has received a letter from the San Quentin penitentiary in California written by Thomas Mooney.

Hoffmann's organization has been particularly active in recent years in the movement to win a pardon for Mooney. The full fashioned hosiery workers in conjunction with the labor movement of Pennsylvania are now conducting a drive to win Hoffmann's release from the Monroe county jail, where he is confined on charges that he conspired to attack certain strikebreakers at the Mammoth Hosiery mills here last May.

In his letter to Hoffmann, Mooney said:

"I glory in your militancy and spirit and hope that you will soon be free to resume your activity on behalf of the toiling masses who certainly need men of your caliber at this critical time in the history of the working class."

Petitions are now being circulated throughout Pennsylvania by the State Federation of Labor appealing for clemency for the imprisoned labor leader. Citizens in Monroe county are actively securing signatures to a petition to Judge Samuel Shull on behalf of Hoffmann.

Through his secretary, State Senator Thomas Duncan, Gov. Phillip La Follette, of Wisconsin, recently appealed to Gov. Pinchot to pardon Hoffmann, whose home is in Milwaukee. Gov. Pinchot indicated in his reply to Senator Duncan that he will act favorably on any recommendation that comes to him from the state pardon board in this case. Before the pardon board can act on an appeal for a pardon for Hoffmann, a petition for parole must be presented to the judge who sentenced Hoffmann.

While in jail, Hoffmann writes a weekly column for The Hosiery Worker, organ of his union, under the heading, "From the Inside Looking Out."

Government "Gypped," Labor Head Charges

Work on New Cedar Rapids Postoffice Not Up to Specifications, President Lewis, of Iowa Federation, Says.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., March 3.—In letters sent to the department of labor, the treasury department and Iowa's senators and representatives in congress, President J. C. Lewis, of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, charges that union workers are being discriminated against on the new postoffice being built here and that the job is not up to government specifications. Affidavits filed with the letters charge that the required amount of cement is not being put in each batch mixed for the postoffice job.

The affidavits are from Thomas Bigg, Donald Hadsell and Don Doyle, employed on the postoffice job as laborers. Biggs alleges that he was directed by his foreman, Harvey Buesch, to keep "mum" about the amount of cement which was being used and to keep the empty sacks under cover. The other affidavits are along similar lines.

In his letter President Lewis reviews the attempt of the contractors, J. P. Cullen & Co., to reduce the pay of building laborers from 65 cents per hour, the prevailing scale, to 50 cents an hour. He also alleges that union workers have been discriminated against because the company was compelled by the government to pay the regular scale of 65 cents an hour.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

As we saw last week the federation of American labor unions was first suggested at Terre Haute, Ind., during a convention held in that city Aug. 2, 1881, and that this convention was followed by another and similar gathering at Pittsburgh in November of the same year. At the Pittsburgh convention the actual work of the new-born federation began under the name of "The Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions of the United States of America and Canada." Thus, not only was the new organization a federation, but it was international in character as well.

A call sent out by independent trade unions for a convention to be held in Columbus, O., in December, 1886, came to the attention of the officials of the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions mentioned above. They prevailed on their Federation to alter its arrangements for an annual convention in order that it might meet at the same time and place as the independent trade unions. As a result the Federation and independent officials effected at Pittsburgh a union between their national bodies, the enlarged group representing twenty-five organizations.

At last the American Federation of Labor was an actuality in name and organization, and was no longer an undeveloped idea in the minds of a few progressive laborites. (Until 1889 the "1886 convention" was considered the first annual meeting of the A. F. L., but in that year, in support of the facts and history, the Federation resolved that its "continuity * * * be recognized from the year 1881." Why this was done—in fact, why it could be done at all—will be revealed in later articles.)

This great Federation which had been born at Terre Haute, Ind., in 1881, but which was not to receive its official and permanent title until the joint convention of the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions and certain independent labor unions at Pittsburgh in 1886, was destined to become the sovereign organization in the trades union world. We must, therefore, add to our chronicle of the development and growth of American labor unionism a brief but comprehensive study of the American Federation of Labor. Accordingly, with next week's issue of The Labor World we will begin to devote space to a consideration of the principles on which the American Federation of Labor is based.

SEZ WHICH

By H. F. B.

Editor Labor World:

I see by the papers that the government has generously allowed the farm board to devote a lot of that surplus wheat to us poor, starving devils and they are sending it up to North Dakota, where the cattle are starving, so we won't have to do without beef and meat later. The Red Cross will distribute it. How does a Red Cross worker know when a cow is hungrier than I am?

There are forty million bushels in this lot—that would be just one-third of a bushel for me, if I could get it—I mean if I was a hungry cow up in North Dakota! If I should happen to be so fortunate as to be able to secure, say even one peck of wheat, I would not give a miller any of it to make into flour. No, indeed! I would use it to make "furmity." In that way I wouldn't waste any of it, but get all the substinance, vitamines, and things. Furmity is a Virginia and eastern North Carolina dish, and is made simply by cleaning and washing whole wheat and then boiling, for three hours or more, in slightly salted water, and no picnic or barbecue up there is complete without a wash pot full of it, cooked all night the night before. Kindly tell me the modus operandi for obtaining some of this wheat, and oblige.

Will you be so kind as to inform me where I may be able to buy one shoestring at a time? I have been all over the city this week trying to buy one. It is true that I really need two, but you know how it is since this drastic cut in wages has been inaugurated (125% in my case!) a fellow has got to economize! Possibly you may have a second-hand one in some of your last winter's shoes. If you have such things, and are not wearing them this winter, possibly you might let me have them cheap. If so, kindly let me know and bring it down for me to see what sort of condition it is in.

* * *

Wouldn't it be funny if, when President Hoover and other folks full of good intentions succeed in persuading all us working people and others to dig up our "hoards" out of our old socks and things and put it in the banks, the banks would say, "We're much obliged. We needed that extra money to lend to Gov. Horton's good friends, or, in any case, to render us safe from any run on our hard-earned wealth!" and then turn a cold and fishy eye on the would-be borrower and tell him to put up gilt-edged security to 200% of his loan, or they couldn't see their way to accommodate him? This is not a hypothetical question.

Toronto City Council Opposes Pay Cuts

Toronto, Can.—On the proposal for a 10 per cent reduction in all remunuerations paid by the city of Toronto, introduced by Alderman H. L. Rogers, the city council voted overwhelmingly against reductions.

Mayor Stewart avowed his unwillingness to give leadership to a backward step by supporting Alderman Rogers. He said the city was proud of its clean, honest and efficient civic service and he believed that such conditions could not be maintained if a feeling of insecurity was engendered.

He briefly outlined several policies inaugurated by the board of control whereby beneficial economies had been introduced, and cited these as examples of how their efforts to provide a strictly business administration were of more enduring value than the easy expedient of a wage cut.

What is needed most in the city today is a loosening up of congested capital, he said.

Let's Get Together And Pull Together!

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

BIG PHILADELPHIA MEETING DEMANDS RELIEF FOR IDLE

Congress and Legislature Called Upon to Act—Pinchot Denounces Defeat of Costigan-La Follette Federal Aid Bill.

Philadelphia, March 9.—At a great meeting held under the direction of the Central Labor union in Convention hall here, congress and the Pennsylvania legislature were called upon to aid the jobless without delay. The meeting demanded that the legislature appropriate $50,000,000 for the direct assistance of the unemployed.

Speakers included President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor; Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, and Senator Edward P. Costigan, of Colorado.

Pinchot bitterly attacked the democratic-republican coalition in the senate, holding it responsible for the defeat of the Costigan-La Follette direct federal relief bill. He described the Reconstruction Finance corporation as "the most powerful political machine ever devised, with $2,000,000,000 of public money with which to tie up the big fellows to the present administration." He declared there were no party lines in Washington any more and charged that "concentrated wealth owns and operates a combination or coalition of republicans and democrats" there.

No Labor Representative.

"Is there any representative of labor in the Reconstruction Finance corporation?" he asked. "Is there any representative of the farmers? Is there any representative of the plain people on the list? There is not."

Declaring that underfed school children in Pennsylvania had increased 30 per cent in a year, he said:

"Why do the people stand for it? Why do they stand for the selfish and short-sighted control of government by the millionaires—by a handful of the over-rich—by concentrated wealth.

"In the present situation what is needed most of all is co-operation between the workers whether in town or country, whether wage-earners or farmers—co-operation for the things that both must have. I stand for co-operation of all workers to put an end to the present control of the government by concentrated wealth.

"Challenge from Over-Rich."

"The refusal to grant relief to suffering Americans is a slap in the face of the American people. It is a challenge from the over-rich, drunk with their political power. If you are the men I think you are, you will use your votes to take that power from them—for your own sakes and for the everlasting good of the nation."

Senator Costigan, co-author of the Costigan-La Follette measure, referred to "self-satisfied 'rugged individualism,'" which, he said, "our industrial leaders are fond of preaching but unhesitatingly abandon in practice when the federal government is needed to bolster up their own activities through banking bills and reconstruction finance corporations."

Other Speakers Heard.

Other speakers included the Rev. John A. Ryan, of the National Catholic Welfare council; John A. Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor; Dr. Jacob Billikopf, executive director of the Philadelphia Federation of Jewish Charities, and Adolph Hirschberg, president of the Central Labor union.

Burrell A. Blanton Answers Last Call

Father of Well-Known Local Trades Unionists Passes Away at Advanced Age.

Local 259, Moving Picture Machine Operators, at the regular monthly meeting Saturday night, named a committee to draft suitable resolutions on the death of B. A. Blanton, father of John B. Blanton, well-known member and official of the organization.

Mr. Blanton passed away at his home, 1801 Long street, after a residence in Chattanooga of fifty-five years. He was one of the city's oldest blacksmiths, having joined the local union in July, 1903, later taking a retiring card when he entered business for himself. A large number of the local union's members attended the last rites of the deceased.

Survivors are John B. Blanton, a son; Mrs. H. A. Wingers, of St. Louis, and Mrs. Nell Scott, of this city, daughters. Clifford Blanton, a son, killed in the World war, was a member of the automobile mechanics' union, and Chris Blanton, another son, was a charter member and for many years active in the councils of Local 147, Stage Employes.

The Labor World joins with the Picture Operators and hundreds of other friends in extending sincerest sympathy to the bereaved relatives of the deceased.

TYPOS NOTE WORTH OF EDWIN R. AMES

Tribute to the life and memory of Edwin R. Ames, member of the International Typographical union for more than a half-century, and who passed away at his home in Avondale last month, was paid by Chattanooga union, No. 89, at its regular monthly meeting Sunday, as follows:

E. R. Ames, a member of Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89 for more than half a century, died at his home on Arlington avenue, East Chattanooga, Jan. 19, 1932. The history of No. 89 was well known to him, and he was always interested in the welfare of the organization. Bro. Ames had been a printer for many years, having worked on the Louisville Courier-Journal in the days of the editorship of the late Henry Watterson, and many were the reminiscences of his in those days.

Brother Ames was a Christian gentleman, a regular attendant at church services, a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church of Avondale, and for many years he was a member of the board of stewards of that organization.

As a union man he was always loyal and true. As a neighbor he was kind and generous, and always ready to do a friendly act for his fellowmen, and always ready to do his part in the good of the community. He was in the News chapel on the anniversary of his 91st birthday and was cheerful in the expectation of the celebration of his 100th birthday. But "30" came to him in the way he had lived and he stated to his friends "he was ready to go." He will be missed by the members of No. 89 and all his associates. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89 deplores the loss of our member and good man and point to an all-wise Creator, who doeth all things well, and we realize that in his going it will be our loss and His gain.

Resolved further, That we urge our younger members to point with pride to his life and character and strive to emulate his cheerful acts of love and kindness.

Resolved further, That the secretary of our organization place a suitable inscription on our records, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the family of our deceased brother, to The Labor World and to the Journal of the International Typographical union.

$167,000,000 for Relief In 81 Cities in 1931

New York.—Relief expenditures in eighty-one large American cities for 1931 were about four times as great as those for 1929, according to a study of public and private relief expenditures made by Ralph G. Hurlin, director of the department of statistics of the Russell Sage Foundation.

Reports from more than 500 public and private relief agencies show actual relief grants to families in the eighty-one selected cities amounting to more than $167,000,000 in 1931, as compared with only $42,370,000 in 1929. Public agencies spent about three-quarters of the total, with a slight falling off in this proportion in 1931.

ELEVEN GOVERNORS URGE AID FOR GREAT EMPLOYMENT DRIVE

New York City, March 9.—With three weeks of the war against depression, united action for employment campaign, now a matter of history, the drive is well on its way to the 200,000 mark of workers placed, compilations at headquarters show. The campaign is under the direction of the American Legion, American Federation of Labor, Association of National Advertisers and the legion auxiliary.

The drive has been given new impetus by the action of eleven governors in issuing proclamations calling upon mayors of all cities in their states, where local organizations have not been effected in co-operating in the campaign, immediately to call a meeting of the civic leaders of their communities in an effort to bring about action in the drive to obtain employment for a million unemployed wage-earners.

Governors who have issued such proclamations are: Harvey Powell, Arkansas; C. Douglas Buck, Delaware; Louis L. Emmerson, Illinois; William T. Gardiner, Maine; Albert C. Ritchie, Maryland; Floyd B. Olson, Minnesota; Max Gardner, North Carolina; Arthur Seligman, New Mexico; George White, Ohio; Gifford Pinchot, Pennsylvania; George H. Dern, Utah.

1,000 Communities Respond.

According to reports at headquarters in the Hotel Biltmore, more than 1,000 communities has responded to date, making, however, only 20 per cent of the 5,600 cities and towns of comparatively fair size regarded as key places.

Campaign leaders have pointed out that the success of the drive is dependent on local organizations. Activities centered around local labor unions and American Legion posts have resulted in putting thousands of wage-earners on pay rolls.

The proclamation of the governors is expected to speed up organization work in lagging communities and thus place more workers in wage-earning capacities, the urgency of the unemployed crisis being sharply stressed.

Gas Industry Co-operates.

Headquarters has been advised that the American Gas association, representing the gas industry of the nation, will co-operate in every way to put additional men back to work. On the basis of each affiliated company putting only one additional worker on the pay roll, 60,000 additional workers will be put on a wage-earning status.

The expansion of industry or the resumption of normal work-time presages better times, campaign leaders believe.

UNION BARBERS SLASH PRICES

Employers and Employes Recognize Burdens of Depression and Readjust

Master and journeymen barbers of Chattanooga on Wednesday of this week announced a readjustment of prices on haircutting and other items to conform with present conditions.

George Perry, president of Local 415, in discussing the new departure, said both employers and employes recognized that hundreds of unemployed, together with many others who are working only part time, are burdened with expenses beyond their ability to meet, and in order to "do their bit" to assist their customers, the joint agreement was reached.

Mr. Perry wished it stressed that the same high quality of service and sanitation offered by the union shops will be maintained under the new price schedule, and he appealed particularly to mothers and fathers to take advantage of the new price set for children's haircutting, which is the lowest scale offered in a high-class union shop in Chattanooga in many years.

The price of haircuts for adults is also lowered, as is that for massaging and other similar items.

Union shops are located at various points throughout the city, and master and journeymen barbers point out that the union shop card displayed in all of these is the public's guarantee of skilled work and sanitary surroundings.

Great Interest Shown in Union Label Campaign

Central Bodies and Local Unions Active in Appointing Committees to Act in Big Nation-wide Drive During April.

Washington, March 16.—That great interest in the approaching nation-wide union label campaign is being displayed by the central bodies and local unions throughout the country is manifested by the number of committees that have been appointed and whose names have been received at the headquarters of the Union Label Trades department, American Federation of Labor. The campaign will be conducted during April.

The plan of the campaign is to impress on the organized workers the great need of spending union earned money for the products and services of fellow workers. The plan is also to visit merchants and urge them to stock up with union labeled merchandise; to advertise these in the newspapers, by hand bills and by attractive window displays. Local unions will be called on and urged to patronize these merchants.

To District Cities.

Discussing the campaign, Secretary John J. Manning, of the Union Label Trades Department, said:

"As in former years, the different cities will be divided into districts so that all merchants and employers of all kinds of labor can be visited by committee members in an effort to secure their co-operation.

"With the proper co-operation of employers with the members of organized labor during this campaign, work of all kinds will be stimulated and jobs will be found for many now unemployed.

"Some local unions advise that their unemployed members will be employed during the campaign in making house-to-house and store-to-store canvasses, making reports of their work. In this way, valuable data can be secured and made available to those interested.

Group Action Effective.

"Any community or any organization not benefited by the campaign will have only themselves to blame for lack of activity.

"Group action will accomplish in a period of curtailed purchasing power more than ever was accomplished in times of plenty when too often no thought was given by many to spending it with the friends of organized labor."

N. Y. Relief Fund Jobs Provided for 33,000

New York.—The emergency unemployment relief committee, headed by Harvey D. Wilson, reported that during the five months of the committee's operation a total of 1,134,083 days of work have been performed for public and non-profit agencies in Greater New York by about 33,000 unemployed men on the pay roll of the committee's emergency work and relief bureau.

During this period the bureau has expended a total of $5,214,966 for emergency work relief. Of this amount, $2,546,792 has been paid to laborers, $1,193,256 to men engaged in "white collar" occupations, and $1,468,598 to women workers.

Local Trades Unionists Enjoy Interesting 'Get-Together' Meet

SCORES BRAVE BITTER WINDS FOR BIG RALLY

Second Social Session Is Great Success.

ENTERTAINMENT COVERS WIDE RANGE

Music, Magic, Speeches and "Eats" Provide Enjoyable Evening.

Exactly one hundred and sixty-four local trades unionists braved one of the bitterest cold spells of the winter to attend the open meeting and rally staged by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council at Central Labor hall Monday night. And right well were the "faithful" repaid for their inconvenience, if expressions heard generally following the meeting are to be taken as an indication of the success of the gathering.

From the time Prof. Shelley Sands and his "saxophone steppers" opened the program until the honor guest, W. E. Cheek, concluded his address close to the hour of midnight, the assembled workers were entertained to such a satisfactory extent that not one "deserted." Prof. Sands' contribution to the evening's pleasure included a number of his own composition which stamped him as an artist in his own line, and the manner in which his charges interpreted the piece spoke well of his ability at imparting the fundamentals of his artistry to his pupils.

The meeting was called to order by Vice-President McDaniels, who opened in the absence of President Ortwein, reported ill. After a short business session, the gavel was turned over to George Forbes, chairman of the standing entertainment committee, and the festivities began. Following a few remarks by R. M. Cooke and George W. Perry, chairman of a special committee which co-operated with the regular committee in arranging the program, the chairman announced that a special guest, a "Col. Roastem," from Washington, would give his impressions of Chattanooga, and particularly of labor officials and their methods.

The "colonel" proved to be a bewhiskered gent of dignified appearance and address, and his impressions included some pretty hard raps at local unionists. He had gone well into his stunt before his hearers realized that his feature was a burlesque, and the Chattanooga Times' whiskers contest was recalled, as about 10 per cent of the guests present finally concluded that the "colonel" was Matt J. Robinson, formerly active in the local labor movement. At a later period in the proceedings Mr. Robinson delivered a brief address of a serious nature which was enjoyed by all.

An outstanding feature of the program was an address by the Rev. Paul Buchanon, a member of the Iron Molders' local union and a sincere and capable supporter of organized labor. Mr. Buchanon's remarks were greeted with bursts of applause, and he thrilled his hearers repeatedly with remarks which displayed an unusual knowledge of the history and purposes of the labor movement, together with his intelligent grasp of its program for the future.

At 10:30 a recess was taken to enjoy a feast prepared under the direction of that old master of the banquet, Zeke Witt, assisted by Charles Leonard, W. D. Canada, C. R. Ruggles, W. L. Lusk and others.

The menu was "topped off" by a large pot of steaming American Ace coffee, prepared by J. F. Shaw, local representative of the Nashville product, which has become so popular locally during the past few months. Many of the guests remarked upon the delicious aroma of the coffee, and made inquiries as to where it might be obtained, and Chairman Forbes later stated from the rostrum that among a number of local merchants who handle American Ace is the Easy Way Grocery company, where most local trades unionists purchase their table needs.

Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, delivered a characteristic address, and was given his usual close attention as he discussed various problems facing the American worker today.

The affair was regarded by Central Body officers and delegates as highly successful, as was a similar meeting held Dec. 28 of last year, and many of those who attended Monday night urged that similar gatherings be staged at intervals, in order that large numbers of members of the individual unions might be brought together for social contact and together hear discussions of labor problems by men who are devoting their lives to the cause.

Provided Thrills

"MYSTERIOUS HOWARD"

An interesting diversion was provided at the get-together meeting at Central Body Monday night by the gentleman pictured above. Mr. Howard did everything from swallowing a paper of needles and a spool of thread and pulling the needles from his lips threaded, to removing various articles of feminine apparel from the pockets of George Perry, much to the embarrassment of the tonsorial artist and the delight of the crowd. "Are you a married man?" he asked. "I am now," said George, "but I don't know how long I will be after this."

The magician is a local product, and, according to a scrapbook which he possesses, is gaining a widespread reputation for his skillful feats of mystery. He is now assembling paraphernalia for a season in vaudeville, when he will carry a company of several people and offer a two-hour show. In the meantime, he is filling local engagements.

PAY-CUT PROTEST GIVEN APPROVAL

Central Body Also Commends "Good Samaritan Inn" at Short Session.

At a short business session preceding the open meeting and get-together at Central Body Monday night, a resolution adopted and given publicity by the executive board placing the workers on record as being opposed to pay slashes for local police and firemen, was read and unanimously approved by vote of those present. The resolution, published in The Labor World last week, called attention to the fact that policemen and firemen's salaries are set by the legislature, and condemned a proposal to ask them to "accept" a cut in pay, as "subterfuge," and as unfair and unreasonable. The resolution, read by George Forbes on behalf of the executive board, was unanimously adopted without debate.

Another high light of the business meeting was a commendation of City Judge Martin Fleming and his associates for the work being done by the "Good Samaritan Inn," otherwise known as the "flophouse." It was brought out that hundreds of jobless are being fed and sheltered daily at the institution, and that the city judge is devoting a large part of his time and effort in soliciting funds and supplies and otherwise providing for the comfort of the growing army of unfortunates in the city. Secretary Gerlach was instructed to write Judge Fleming, stating the formal action taken by the body in appreciation of the generosity and splendid work of the "landlord of the Good Samaritan Inn."

NOTICE Electrical Workers

Special meeting of Local 175 will be held Wednesday, March 23, at Central Labor hall, beginning promptly at 7 o'clock. All members are urged to be present, as important business is to be transacted.

CHEEK RECALLS SIDELIGHTS ON LABOR HISTORY

State Official Presents Interesting Facts.

GUEST OF HONOR AT GET-TOGETHER

Finds Industrial Organizations Ante-Date Formation of American Colonies.

W. E. Cheek, of Nashville, secretary-treasurer of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, was a guest of honor at the get-together meeting of Chattanooga trades unionists Monday night, and delivered the principal address of the gathering.

Mr. Cheek took advantage of the occasion to trace the history of workingmen's organizations from their inception up to the present time, and his address was given closest attention by the assembled unionists.

The following interesting data was included in the remarks of the state labor official:

Industrial organizations were operating successfully before the American colonies were declared free and independent. They were known as societies and associations.

The colonial records of Massachusetts furnish the evidence that in 1630 the wages of carpenters and other mechanics were fixed by law.

The archives of Connecticut show that in 1677 the price of mending shoes was fixed by law.

In 1724 the carpenters of Philadelphia were organized. This was about forty years after the landing of William Penn and fifty years before the Declaration of the American Independence, and this organization is still in existence and bids fair to outlive another century.

On Feb. 3, 1768, the carpenters of Philadelphia bought the land on which now stands the Carpenters hall.

The American colonies elected delegates to attend a convention to be held in Philadelphia, the seat of the colonial government of Pennsylvania. It was generally understood that this convention would assemble at the state capitol, but this was refused. It was at this time the carpenters of Philadelphia tendered the use of Carpenters hall, and on the 5th day of September, 1774, the first meeting of the Continental congress was held, and on July 4th, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was signed.

The committee appointed by the first convention met in this same hall in May, 1787, to draft a constitution for the United States. On Sept. 27, 1787, the constitution of the United States was agreed upon.

The first strike on record in the state of New York was called borers employed by Robert Livingston. These men were improving land along the Hudson in 1771 by German immigrant lariver.

On July 4, 1788, forty-five trade organizations participated in the celebration of American independence and the signing of the federal constitution. The members of the organizations taking part in this celebration wore bright colored uniforms and carried silken banners. The painters displayed the motto, "Virtue Alone is True Nobility;" the tailors, "By Union Our Strength Increases;" the carpenters, "Justice and Benevolence."

In 1789 George Washington, the first president of the United States, visited the city of Boston, Mass., and twenty-four trade organizations took part in this celebration.

In the early part of 1844 in New York City the Franklin Typographical association was founded. These men organized for the purpose of putting into effect a wage scale of $11 per week. On the 15th day of April, 1844, a strike was called to enforce this wage scale. A salute of one hundred guns was fired in Franklin square in honor of the large number of employers who had agreed to pay this increase. The first national convention of journeymen printers met in the city of New York on the 2nd day of December, 1850.

During the Civil war period the labor movement was very quiet due to the fact that the war had taken many of their members and those that stayed at home were like many of the members of organized labor today—when the fighters are gone the organization is gone.

The national organization began to take form soon after the close of the Civil war and activity in the labor movement began to take on new life. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Knights of St. Crispin (Shoemakers), the Sons of Vulcan (Iron Workers) and other organizations were brought into existence.

In the city of Philadelphia in 1869 the garment cutters organized and Uriah H. Stephens was the first general master workman. The Hon. T. V. Powderly, who was mayor of Scranton, Pa., at the time this organization was formed, succeeded Mr. Stephens as general master workman in 1879. During these ten years this organization was kept a secret, and on Jan. 1, 1882, the existence of this organization was made public. The purpose was, "Agitate, organize, educate." When the banner of this organization was unfurled it displayed the motto, "That is the most perfect government in which an injury to one is the concern of all."

Between the time the Civil war closed and 1880 the Knights of Labor was the leading organization of workers in this country and much progress had been made, but due to some changes in the constitution such men as Samuel Gompers, of the Cigarmakers; John McBride, of the Coal Miners; P. J. McGuire, of the Carpenters, and other prominent leaders withdrew from the Knights of Labor and issued a call for a convention of real trade unionists. This convention met in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., in November, 1881, and organized what is now known as the American Federation of Labor.

CARHARTT JOINS UNION-HATERS

Overall Company Casts Lot With Low-Wagers and Ousts Old Employes.

The Hamilton Carhartt company, formerly known as producers of union-labeled overalls and work clothing, has joined the union-busters and wage slashers, and the product is now strictly nonunion, according to advice sent out by the United Garment Workers.

Notice from the garment workers is as follows:

The Hamilton Carhartt company of Detroit, Mich.; Dallas, Texas; Atlanta, Ga.; and Irvine, Ky., manufacturers of overalls, trousers and other workingmen's clothing, on March 1st, 1932, decided to reduce wages and run their shops nonunion. Hence we were compelled to withdraw the use of the union label from all of their factories. Therefore, the Carhartt brand of overalls, trousers and other workingmen's clothing are no longer union made.

Remember, success for one helps for success of all! Co-operate with the United Garment Workers of America by demanding our union label on all your clothing, overalls, shirts and collars.

Every time you buy goods with the label, you strike a blow at unfair manufacturers, sweatshops and prison workshops. You help wipe out the products made by nonunion people—people who are working against you.

Attention of local trades unionists is called to the fact that the product of W. M. Finck & Co. and the H. D. Lee company still bears the union label, and may be bought on the local market.

PRINTERS AID UNEMPLOYED

Local Typos Guarantee 'Pay Day' for Members Unable to Secure Steady Work.

By an almost unanimous vote members of Chattanooga Typographical union Wednesday approved a plan submitted by a special committee which will guarantee a substantial "pay day" to those members who are unable to secure sustaining employment.

The union has for many months maintained an out-of-work fund, paid from its treasury and augmented from time to time by special assessments of a small sum upon earnings. Under the system inaugurated by the vote of Wednesday, however, a heavier assessment, to be collected upon the earnings of every member for the next ninety days, is expected to prove of more substantial relief to the unemployed—in fact, it makes a flat guarantee to all of sufficient funds to keep the wolf from the door.

REJECT FIVE-DAY WEEK.

Boston Typographical Union No. 13 has rejected the five-day week plan as a means of relieving unemployment. The adverse vote was on recommendation of a special committee which studied the situation. The committee recommended that no increase be voted for unemployment relief and that the assessment of 2 per cent which has been in effect many months and from which relief of about $1,800 a week is paid be retained, and the union so voted.

UNIONS SEEK PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATION

Building Trades Petition U. S. Congress.

SEE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM LAGGING

Carpenters, Bricklayers and Electrical Workers Present Data to Lawmakers.

Washington, March 17.—Business can only resume by the strengthening of purchasing power of the masses of the people and purchasing power can only be strengthened by providing jobs for the unemployed, representatives of 700,000 building trades workers told congress in asking that congress vote funds for $155,000,000 of public construction, which has been authorized but for which the money has not been appropriated.

Addressing letters to the senate and house appropriations committee, Frank Duffy, secretary of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters, Indianapolis; John J. Gleeson, secretary of the International Union of Bricklayers, Washington, and G. M. Bugniazet, secretary of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Washington, declared that "expectations on the part of business men and members of this government that business will resume automatically as a result of merely strengthening the reserves of banks, or as a result of underwriting bondholders, has reached a stage of absurdity."

Want and need has reached alarming proportions, the statement says.

Need for Action Plain.

The letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Senator:

"The need of keeping an uninterrupted flow of public works is apparent, when it is realized that there is a lag of eight or ten months between appropriation and actual construction. Public works authorized and financed now will come to useful accomplishment next fall and winter, when, unless all signs fail, there will be additional need for relief unemployment.

"We are informed by the interdepartmental committee relating to public buildings' construction that about $155,000,000 of construction, already authorized and allocated—but for which no funds have been provided—await action of your committee. This list is for construction outside the District of Columbia, and is well divided between the states as follows:

"As heads of labor organizations numbering between 600,000 and 700,000 skilled building trades workers we strongly urge your committee not to interrupt this needed public work. We emphatically request that money be found at once to release this volume of building so that the weakening volume of private construction may be supplemented, and employment for hungry men be found.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter IV
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part VIII

II. Jesus' Social Opportunism

We will now study Jesus' spirit of social opportunism, which was His inward assurance that men are God's chosen instruments to do His will on earth. As we look at Jesus' ministry we discover with little effort that He saw clearly the two different aspects of social opportunism—for in truth it has two and only two aspects. The first He saw was that there is a vast amount of suffering and inequality in this world. Jesus saw this all about Him: political oppression, leprosy, social ostracism for one cause or another, crime, vice, indigency, sin, incapacity, etc. The second aspect of social opportunism Jesus saw grows directly out of the presence of so much human frailty and misfortunes: He saw what ought to be men's attitude toward people into whose lives have come ills and misfortune.

WM. L. MOSS

As for the first aspect, Jesus taught we are not to shut our eyes to its existence. True, it might be repulsive, we might wish that such conditions were not so but nevertheless here they are in this world and we must face them. Jesus' frank acknowledgment that these ills afflict mankind is one of the most beautiful sides of His life, ministry and teaching.

In regard to the second aspect Jesus epitomizes our attitude toward such human misfortunes in the moving story of the Good Samaritan. But there are other and, in their nature, quite different misfortunes that afflict men of which we shall hear more later on.

"What characteristics," someone asks, "are we to look for in the life and teaching of Jesus that will really prove to us He had an extremely fine developed sense of social opportunism?"

I would answer this by saying that we must look to His broadness of view as He lived His life and saw the ills that afflicted men if we are to see His sense of social opportunism. We can see it better, though, if we make a personal comparison between His life and our own. Accordingly, with such inadequate powers and ability as I possess I shall in next week's article make this comparison in brief outline, trusting each individual reader to check up on what I set forth as the comparison, using his own life as the means whereby this checking up is done, and see if what I judge to be the facts are really the ones applicable, and if applicable, are they under or overdrawn.

The New York Central railroad has a new car that is the latest in track inspection. A Sperry detector apparatus charges the rail as the car runs, moves a paper tape across an observation table, records the condition of the rails, reveals flaws in the steel and marks them with a spray of paint.

A Critical Time In Every Woman's Life.

"During a critical time in my life I took Cardui for several months. I had hot flashes. I would suddenly get dizzy and seem blind. I would get faint and have no strength.

Clinics for Injured Workers

Over a year ago Governor Roosevelt of New York appointed a committee to review medical and hospital problems in connection with workmen's compensation insurance.

The committee, which is headed by Howard S. Cullman, an expert on the subject, has filed with the Governor a preliminary report condemning the system under which insurance companies carrying workmen's compensation insurance maintain and operate private clinics for the treatment of injured workmen covered by their policies.

The personnel of the committee included Frances Perkins, industrial commissioner, and George Van Schaick, superintendent of insurance.

A subcommittee, headed by Dr. Adrian S. Lambert, made a detailed study of the company clinics and expressed general disapproval of them on many grounds. The disapproval is in effect a number of charges that the companies use the clinics to victimize the injured workers.

The report claims:

That insurance companies "lift" cases from responsible hospitals and the care of responsible medical practitioners to clinics maintained by companies carrying the risks;

That the clinic system results in the medical records concerning controversial cases emanating from doctors employed by the insurance carriers;

That the remoteness and inaccessibility of the clinics caused annoyance to patients;

And, finally, that the system has given insurance companies a pretext for refusing to continue compensation payments unless the patient continues to attend the clinics.

The subcommittee's report included the statement that the private clinic system "has fostered the conviction among hospitals, physicians, and those injured in labor that the prime object of the insurance companies is pecuniary gain and not the welfare of the patient, and in this respect is against the spirit in which the compensation law was enacted."

The Cullman committee recommended that the practice of "lifting" cases be prohibited by law and penalized by fines of from $50 to $150, and that a fundamental change be made in the law which would create a series of clinics under the supervision and direction of the state. It also declared it was very unsatisfactory for the medical records in a case to be supplied by the agents of the insurance companies and recommended that these records come from a disinterested party.

Governor Roosevelt announced that he heartily concurred with the findings of the Committee and would transmit the report to the State Legislature in the hope that the recommendations would be enacted into law.

It goes without saying that our workmen's compensation laws were designed to protect injured workers. It is regrettable that insurance companies, for their private profit, have developed methods of victimizing the injured to such an extent that legislation is necessary to stop the unjust practices.

Where workmen's compensation insurance is carried in funds owned and operated by the State, the abuses condemned by the Cullman committee do not develop.

Now Is Organizing Time

What a time to organize unions! Now as never before workers need the protection of trade unionism. Employers, sometimes stricken with greed, sometimes palsied with fear, seize upon any pretext to join the fight to cut wages.

Cutting wages increases the intensity of despair among the masses. The employing world has gone foolish with the idea that wage-cutting helps. It helps only the pocketbook of employers.

Organize unions as the one way to drive sanity into the industrial order.

The Lame Ducks in Flight

We have come a long way since the first effort to secure legislation to abolish the so-called lame duck Congress. A constitutional amendment now is before the States. Virginia was first to ratify. Probably the States will hurry action as rapidly as possible.

With ratification of this amendment, Congress will become a more responsive instrument. The old lame-duck sessions, between election time and March 4, will be no more. Presidents will not hold over until the March following their election.

Labor has from the first supported this democratic proposal. Labor is for every measure that brings government closer to the people.

Labor will naturally work for ratification of this measure in every State.

A Growing Conviction

Myron C. Taylor, chairman of the finance committee of the U. S. Steel Corporation, has joined in approval of the shorter work week to stabilize employment. The curtailed work week is the remedy advocated by the American Federation of Labor and suggested at the early stages of the depression.

Statisticians of the Federation showed the country that 35 hours of work a week was the maximum of labor to be had if all formerly employed workers were to have jobs.

The steel official, in voicing his views, takes the position that the shortened week, rather than the shortened day, be the base of operation, "if it be true that industrial plants are not destined to work at capacity." The plant will function best, he says, if it be operated continuously, and the work-week, and not the work-day of the man be shortened. It may be that in this direction leisure will be found, he adds.

The average worker is not concerned with leisure, beyond that normally expected, so much as he is with time occupied in work. In other words, the main consideration now should be putting the unemployed to work on a work-time whereby all who wish to work can have a job and be reasonably secure in it.

This, it would appear, is fundamental in bringing about a return to approximately normal conditions. When eight million workers are earning saving wages, thus completing the buying-power circle, the country will enjoy at least mildly prosperous times. When such concerns as U. S. Steel, Goodyear Tire & Rubber and other corporations see virtue in the shorter work-time, there is some hope that the country's industrial overlords are beginning to see light.

War Policies Board Asks 95% Tax on War Profits

Washington.—A majority of the war policies commission proposed an amendment to the constitution of the United States by which congress would take 95 per cent of the profits out of war.

The report of the majority of the commission contained the following major recommendations:

1. A constitutional amendment eliminating all doubt that congress has the power to take the profits out of war.

2. Until that amendment is adopted by the states, a bill conferring upon the president various detailed duties of price fixing and the regulation of industry.

3. The expropriation of no private property without compensation.

Taxing of all individuals 95 per cent of their income above the previous three-year average is included among the war-time powers given the president under the commission's recommendations.

The report was signed by twelve of the fourteen members of the commission, including P. J. Hurley, secretary of war, chairman, and Senator Joe Robinson, of Arkansas, vice-chairman.

The Norris-LaGuardia Injunction Relief Measure

By WILLIAM GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

Organized labor and its friends regard the passage of the Norris-LaGuardia injunction relief measure by the congress of the United States with feelings of pleasure and satisfaction.

Its passage represents the culmination of years of effort and persistent appeal for the enactment of this character of legislative relief.

As a result of the enactment of this legislation the word freedom will take on new meaning and the bill of rights will have added significance for all classes of labor.

No longer will it be possible for corporations to take advantage of the economic necessity of working people by requiring them to sign the "yellow dog" contract in order to secure an opportunity to earn a living.

This form of contract, always regarded as un-American by organized labor, is rendered null and void and is legally declared to be contrary to public policy.

While it has always been assumed that working people had the right to join a labor union the "yellow dog" contract has served as a weapon in the hands of corporations opposed to union labor to force many workers, against their will, to sign away this right.

This made the "yellow dog" contract highly objectionable to labor and deeply offensive to sound public opinion.

This injunction relief bill gives legal recognition to the right to organize into trade unions and the freedom of association on the part of working people.

This section of the bill will prohibit equity courts from issuing injunctions restraining labor from exercising the right to unite for mutual helpfulness, self-protection and collective bargaining.

It reiterates and reaffirms the right of labor to enjoy free assemblage, freedom of the press and to unite for the purpose of securing redress from economic oppression and injustice.

Labor regards the passage of the Norris-LaGuardia bill as a great achievement.

It believes that through the protection which this measure will afford labor can mobilize its economic strength so that it may be privileged to deal with powerful corporations and large employers of labor upon more equitable terms.

The one outstanding legal right which this bill clearly and definitely establishes is the right of labor to organize and to function in a normal, logical way.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

America's propensity for law-making as a remedy for all evils is shown in the hysterical cry for new and drastic anti-kidnaping legislation, arising out of the Lindbergh baby kidnaping. There is plenty of law to punish kidnapers now. More important than new law is the detection of kidnapers. That means more efficient police forces and more public determination to suppress kidnaping and similar heinous crime.

Into the unthinking demands for imposing the death penalty for kidnaping has come a note of sanity from Clarence Darrow. Says Darrow, who surely ought to know as much about crime and criminals as any other man:

"Those who would make death the punishment for kidnaping are damned idiots. Suppose a kidnaper were unable to get the ransom money. If his crime were a capital offense, his next step would be to kill his victim to remove him as a possible witness if he (the kidnaper) were ever brought to trial."

* * *

"I could not enjoy a vacation in your state as long as this injustice continues," Prof. Ralph E. Winger, of Union college, Schenectady, N. Y., wrote to a California travel bureau, declining to visit California as long as Tom Mooney remains in prison. "I have long wanted to revisit California," says Prof. Winger. "Unfortunately some of the officials of your fair state have found it possible to keep a man in prison for years after it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of an unprejudiced observer that he was convicted solely on perjured testimony."

Millions of Americans believe in Tom Mooney's innocence. If they would act as Prof. Winger has done, it is probable that Tom Mooney would soon be free.

Praise continues to come to President Hoover for the excellent appointment he made in naming Benjamin N. Cardozo to fill the vacancy on the supreme court caused by the resignation of the beloved Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

It is encouraging to know that strong pressure of the right sort can help to bring about an appointment as wise and sound as this selection of a man with such a good record as Judge Cardozo.

The advance criticism that New York should not have further representation was overridden on the broad and correct grounds that this was not a geographical matter, but rather was seeking a man most eminently fitted for the high position. That Mr. Hoover chose this most desirable course will greatly redound to his credit and bring him gratitude from millions. This will mean confusion for some of the president's critics and enthusiasm to his champions.

Congratulations are as much due to the people of this country as they are to the new justice and to the president.

WITH THE ELECTRICIANS

L. L. Lowe has finished his courting. It took him about three weeks. Some speed for L. L., eh, boys?

The sick at Brother Williams' home are much improved, and we hope will soon be entirely well.

One Ira Patten has a tooth that is giving him a great deal of trouble, and he will not have it pulled. W. B. Dyche offered to "jump it" for him, and—well, it nearly wound up in some hard words. But "it's springtime in the Rockies" now.

* * *

Fred Simon was seen at the city hall the other day and said he was still getting three meals a day. I wonder where?

* * *

J. H. Lofty is still like the boy on the burning deck—eating peanuts by the peck.

* * *

It used to be said Jack Frost was as busy as a switch engine. He now seems to be as busy as two switch engines. Doing what, I wonder?

* * *

R. H. Duncan was missing several days last week, and I find he was moving. Moved in the city and closer to where he was sure of something to eat.

* * *

W. P. Howard and children have been under the weather with bad colds. Perry knows what to do for his cold, but is undecided about the children.

* * *

I see Dyche is gathering in chicken literature, and it looks like he will be adding on a new side line. You know, spring and baseball are upon us, and his main sideline comes in then. "Play ball!"

Additional Notes by Bill Dyche, Pinch Hitting for Crosby:

While driving on the Dayton pike the other day, I happened to see a man running around about frozen. I thought I would stop and give him a lift and found out it was none other than good friend Crosby, with a blowtorch in his hand. I asked what the trouble was, and this is the reply: "Every single water pipe at my house is frozen, and one burst, and I have no gas for my torch to thaw them out with." I supplied the gas (from my car) and now everything seems to be lovely at the Crosby ranch.

* * *

I happened to see Fred Adamson and a crowd of helpers taking down a sign on Seventh street Saturday morning, about the size of our old-fashioned cardboard shoe boxes. At least, I thought Fred was helping take the sign down—he was on a big, big ladder.

* * *

Bill Cooper was seen on Market street with his fishing pole over his shoulder. Bill surely does not expect to catch fish on Market street these cold, dry days. Now, if it had been about three weeks ago, it might work out all right.

* * *

Where, O where, can Grady McArthur's switchbox be?

* * *

Crosby says that every chicken on his place is laying except the rooster, and if he can only get the head man to laying he will be sitting pretty.

* * *

There has been a great deal said about my being interested in the Chattanooga baseball club. Well, I certainly am interested in it and its welfare. I think Joe Engel is the greatest showman Chattanooga has ever had. E. T. Bales, with the News, writes a great deal lately about there being no news about the baseball world. Well, he just does not go where the news is. Every member of Local 175 knows that such news as there is pertaining to baseball can always be obtained at Kelly's, on East Seventh street, so it might pay Bales to go there once in a while. I claim the distinction of being the only one hundred per cent baseball fan in the city, as that is the only sport I am interested in.

Say, fellows, have you noticed that the Lofty and Patton smiles are catching? Brother W. L. Williams has caught it, and it spreads all over his face. Let's see if a few more can't catch it also.

PAPER STRIKE EXPECTED.

The department of commerce reports that following the failure of the mediation commission to settle the dispute over wages which has been in progress for some time in the Swedish paper mill industry, the employers have decided to reduce the wage rate on time and piece work by 8 per cent, to be effective beginning March 21, according to a radiogram from Trade Commissioner Basil Dahl, Stockholm. It is expected in trade circles that the employes will call a strike, the report stated.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

We find the best definition of what the American Federation of Labor actually is in its Constitution: "We * * * declare ourselves in favor of the formation of a thorough federation, embracing every trade and labor organization in America under the Trade Union System of organization." Thus we see that the very foundation of the Federation is nothing but the principle of trade homogenity; that is, each particular trade looks after its own special interest in those general matters affecting laboring men as a class.

This is the direct opposite of the ideal in such matters advocated by the Knights of Labor. That organization attempted to secretly subordinate the parts to the whole. The A. F. of L. openly endeavors to bend the whole to meet the needs of the unit.

But how is this trade homogenity made workable without the whole structure of the Federation becoming so loosely knit together it becomes impotent when facing opposition? And how is trade homogenity feasible without the Federation sacrificing many of its essentials as a parent governing body?

The answer to both questions lies in the effectual manner in which the Federation stresses home rule in purely local affairs but retains federal supervision in all general matters. In this way the humblest toiler in a trades union has at his personal disposal the tremendous power and influence of this vast national organization. (This phase of the subject will be gone into more fully later on in this series.)

The Federation, in a very happy manner, combines its unswerving singleness of purpose—the advancement of the conditions and protection of the rights of the laboring masses—with the ability to touch every trade at every point of its existence. Although centralized to the last degree and unyielding in its demands when the interests of the laboring people are at stake, it is extremely democratic in operation, its use of the referendum in questions affecting the many is proverbial. The unshakable loyalty of the individual unionists to the Federation and the cheerful readiness and promptitude with which both national unions and their locals obey the slightest wish of or undertake any work assigned them by either the convention or officials of the Federation, as well as its wide scope of authority in general, has caused it to be referred to as labor's "general headquarters" and the local unions as its fighting units along the battlefront.

SEZ WHICH

By H. F. B.

Editor The Labor World:

Now, Mr. Editor, laying aside all persiflage, whatever that is, and getting right down to the need of the hour. I own a one-eighth acre lot out at Jones Station, in the middle of the block, just beyond the station. I know it raises some fine weeds. So, in order to help some poor fellow out that way to eat, this summer, I am offering that lot to any of the residents out that way who can get to it and has the energy left to use it to make himself a garden on and raise vegetables, free of any rent charges. Of course, if he sees fit to make me a present of a mess of beans, or turnip greens, that's all right, and I will appreciate them. There must be some fellow out there who has the will to do that, and I feel sure the place would prove profitable to him. If he will communicate with me, at 612 Pine street, I'll take great pleasure in giving him a written permit to cultivate the lot for a garden or chicken range, free of charge. I'd do it myself if I was close enough to it.

What this country needs more than it does a good five-cent cigar is a thorough investigation and re-organization of the U. S. weather department! And a complete adjustment of the national calendar so us poor mortal citizens may know when springtime has come, gentlemen! The whole darned department has been crazy all the winter, and caused the spring to spring entirely too soon, and then got rattled and ordered, not a mere "cold wave," but a "frigid flood" that was fierce! Somebody ought to do something about it. We have discussed the subject entirely too long now.

Maybe when the Lindbergh baby is taken off the front page of every newspaper in this country, it may be possible for the poor, distracted parents to be able to find him. I seriously doubt their finding him before this is done. I only hope it will be done before the poor baby is smothered to death by the obscurity piled upon him to keep him hidden by abductors who are scared to death at the consequences of this foolish and insane act!

NEW TAX PROPOSALS HIT EVERY PERSON IN NATION

Virtually Everything in Range of Human Need or Consumption Comes Included in Provisions of Pending House Bill, Which Promises to Make Furore Throughout Country.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, March 17.—Few measuures presented in the American congress have aroused such intense interest, and promise to bring forth such an upheaval of protest and division of opinion, as the new federal tax bill of the ways and means committee in the lower house.

A sum of $1,096,000,000 would be raised through a general manufacturers' tax, described as a sales tax, of 2¼% on goods and commodities. Only the barest necessities of life—raw meat, raw fish, bread and milk, and seed and fertilizer for crops—would escape taxation. Virtually everything within the range of human use or consumption comes within its provisions.

In its entire aspect, the bill is a departure from federal taxation policy since the world war, and goes back to the days of the civil war for a precedent. It would virtually restore the wartime scope of commodity taxation for federal purposes.

Every Person Taxed.

Every person, wealthy and poor alike, is made equally subject to its provisions, and taxed at the rate of 2¼% in proportion to the volume of goods and commodities that each person may consume.

Prospects of a bankrupt government and nation is the specter which the ways and means committee is holding before congress to push the bill through to passage.

Lively efforts are being made by the ways and means committee to show that the greater part of the tax will be absorbed by manufacturers instead of falling on the public. Opponents of the measure assert, however, that at least three per cent, and possibly more, in additional costs will fall on the public.

Fails to Balance Budget.

The bill falls short by almost $200,000,000 of providing for the sum needed to balance the federal budget on June 30, 1933. It is proposed, however, to raise this additional sum by cuts in appropriations for governmental departments and generally interpreted as foreshadowing an effort to reduce the salaries and wages of governmental employes.

Special excise taxes are left to the house to decide. The proposal is that such taxes shall be placed on gasoline in a sum of one cent a gallon, and on oil, telephone and telegraph messages and industrial alcohol.

A tax of 50 cents to one dollar a barrel on crude oil imported from other countries is suggested.

Protests in large volume are coming from the country against nearly every item in the bill. One phase of the protests is that the way is opened for the states to divert gasoline taxes from road purposes, and to use them for operating and maintenance expenses of state governments.

The house will decide whether changes will be made in the income taxes on capital gains and losses. If changes are made, it will be to prevent undue portions of recent losses in values of stocks and bonds, and of real estate, being charged against taxable income.

Without additional restrictions, it is declared, a material part of such losses can be recouped by the owners at the expense of the federal treasury through deductions from taxable income. The bill makes increases also in the tax rates on personal incomes and on inheritances.

Sales Tax Exemptions Few.

Exemptions from sales taxes have been held down to the lowest possible minimum in the bill to avoid difficulty in getting it passed. Only those articles which can be described as dire necessities are left out of its provisions.

Increases are made in personal and corporation income taxes. Under its terms American corporations would pay their full tax in this country, without regard for taxes paid in other countries, too.

The aggregate tax levy of the federal government, and of the states, counties, towns and cities and other sub-divisions this year will run between fourteen and fifteen billion dollars.

This levy will mean, on the average, about $115 for each inhabitant, or more than $500 for the average American family. Much of the sum will be derived from corporate property, but a substantial part will be drawn from individuals in the form of income and sales taxes.

State Expenses Soar.

An increase of $1,772,000,000 in expenditures of state governments from 1917 to 1930 is shown in recent figures of the census bureau. This increase in 13 years is more than 342 per cent, or almost four and a half times the 1917 costs.

Total costs of the 48 state governments in 1930 were $2,290,000,000, as compared with a total of $517,000,000 in 1917.

Taxes for county and municipal purposes have increased in even larger sums. No statistics are available as to the total or average costs of county governments.

Labor Supports Bill for Issue Of Relief Bonds

La Follette $5,500,000,000 Public Works Proposal Demanded by A. F. of L. as Less Than "Cost of Unemployment."

Washington, March 17.—The cost of unemployment will eventually far exceed the cost of creating employment for the idle, Edward F. McGrady, legislative committeeman of the American Federation of Labor, told a senate labor subcommittee in urging on behalf of organized labor a great program of publicity works.

The American Federation of Labor, in Mr. McGrady's statement, indorsed in general Senator La Follette's bill for nation-wide public construction to be financed by a $5,500,000,000 issue of "prosperity bonds." The public works program was advocated to save the nation from the "serious human consequences" of widespread unemployment.

"The principal criticism we have heard of this bill is its cost," Mr. McGrady said. "Our answer to that is that the cost of unemployment will far exceed, eventually, the cost of creating employment."

Family Life Affected.

"We have notified the leaders in our government that already the serious human consequences of unemployment are apparent in American families. There is loss of courage, bitterness, disrespect for law, desperation. These will last long after the depression.

"We do not see any improvement in employment up to the first of this month, despite the program adopted by the present congress.

"We do not look for auy marked increase in employment for 1932 or 1933. We predict that we will have just as much suffering next winter as we have had the past winter unless the federal government will take the initiative to create work for the people.

Work Is Paramount Issue.

"We have little patience with the propaganda in the press and in congress that the outstanding thing for the present congress to do is to balance the budget. We maintain that the outstanding thing is to provide work for human beings in order that they may live in decency and health and comfort."

"BLOCK-AID" PLAN TO RELIEVE JOBLESS STARTED IN NEW YORK

New York—A number of men and women here inaugurated the "block-aid" plan to relieve the distress of the jobless.

The plan, it was explained by William Lloyd-Smith, chairman of the organization, is to set up a group covering every city block, which will deal with destitution whenever it becomes too great for charity and welfare organizations to handle.

The scheme relies on voluntary contributions not to exceed $1 a week.

Former Gov. Alfred E. Smith indorsed the plan.

Holds Predicament of Nation Due to People's Mechanization

Cincinnati, O, March 9.—The nation's predicament, despite untouched wealth in raw materials, is traceable to the fact that the people "have become mechanized, a group of automatons, a race of robots," in the opinion of Clarence Dykstra, city manager of Cincinnati, who presented his views on the depression before the city's largest group of professional men and liberals in political thought.

In 1893, said Dykstra, more than 60 per cent of the people lived on farms and were able to help themselves in times of worst stress, comparable in every way with present conditions. At the same time their relatives in cities journeyed back to the farms and found adequate relief from unemployment. Today less than 20 per cent live on farms while millions of families in cities are virtually riveted to their places, doomed to slow starvation until the depression ends.

Dykstra has been in the forefront of citizens in Ohio asking the governor to summon the legislature in special session to cope with economic problems. He has contended consistently that without federal aid almost all large cities in America are threatened with virtual bankruptcy because they are consuming ever larger portions of tax revenues caring for workless millions with resources shrinking almost daily because of failure to collect adequate taxes.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

TRADE STILL AT LOW EBB BUT SENTIMENT IS BETTER

Improved Feeling Hopeful Sign, But Unemployment, Wage Cutting, Tight Credit, Poor Purchasing Power and Hoarding by Rich Continue and Threaten to Prolong Depression.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, March 9.—People are feeling better.

That single thing in a careful study of the reports on business conditions over the country as they stand at the beginning of this month indicates a definite change for the better.

People are not quite so gloomy as they were, and have not quite the same forlorn feeling that gripped them around the first of the year. Otherwise, there is little to show a definite change one way or the other.

Business and industry are in the same rut, with very little change in unemployment, and with indications that wages and salaries, unless fixed and maintained by union scales, have been cut from 15 to 25 per cent across the country.

Unorganized Hard Hit.

Union wages have not been cut in any outstanding instance except through the voluntary consent of the workers themselves. But the unorganized wage workers and salaried people appear to have lost from one-sixth to one-fourth of their monthly incomes through slashes of wages and salaries.

Business men, to every appearance, are feeling better, but few of them seem to anticipate that material and definite recovery from the effects of the depression will be manifest before next fall.

However, there is nothing to indicate that business and industry will sink lower down the scale than it was in January and February. Those months probably will mark the low turn of the cycle of depression.

Credit Still "Tight."

While bank failures are decreasing, credit conditions are not materially easier than they were, and unemployment continues to stand at a serious and staggeringly high level. Most of the large banks have plenty of money, but they are not making other than what might be described as "necessitous" loans.

Two or three reasons appear to dictate this policy. One is that they are definitely committed to deflation of credit, business and industry. Another is that they believe credit conditions have been too easy, and credit wastefully used. A third reason is that they still fear the possibility of neighboring banks closing their doors, which might precipitate "runs" on their own deposits, and they are keeping plenty of cash on hand.

The worst of the effects of the depression are falling on those industries and factories which, during the era of inflated prosperity, went in for large programs of expansion and increased productive capacity, especially with labor-displacing machinery.

Rich Could Spend, But Won't.

Many of these have sought to continue in operation by cutting consumer prices on their outputs. In doing so, resources in a great many cases have been dissipated to the vanishing point, and they are closing their doors by the bankruptcy route.

The hoarding of money seems to be confined to the wealthier classes. They could spend, but are not doing so in any marked degree, and their funds are piling up, usually in larger bank balances.

Wage earners and people of modest means are manifestly in the tightest straits of many years. The payment of current bills by personal checks is at the lowest ebb since the armistice, and due apparently to many bank accounts having been closed out entirely.

Instalment collectors are taking in larger quantities of cash rather than checks in their weekly and monthly collections than at any time since the end of the war. Purchasing power is at a low ebb.

No Quick Recovery.

Even the most optimistic business men do not appear to expect a full return to a normal level for another year or two. The belief is expressed in some quarters that the full effects of the depression — including the slashes in wages and salaries—cannot be fully dissipated and liquidated within two or three years, and that three or four years may be necessary to recover in every way from the devastation and losses of the last two years.

Farmers appear to be the heaviest sufferers from the effects of depression, and their losses are relatively greater than those of any other class or group. However, they are less in want, and more of them are subsisting entirely on the products of their farms and their own home-grown foodstuffs than at any time in recent years.

The most difficult time in relieving suffering and distress among the unemployed would seem to be yet to come in the middle or late spring. While some factories are reopening, and employment is showing some gains, there is still abnormally large numbers of people out of work in every large city.

Relief Funds Near Exhaustion.

Relief funds collected early in the winter are still in some measure available, but will be largely exhausted in the spring. This unquestionably will result in greater distress among idle people.

On the Trail of a Sale

A concern in Casey, Illinois, called the Phoenix Fuel Company at Louisville, Kentucky, by long distance telephone, and ordered a carload of coal.

This sale did not happen by chance. The order was given because the invoices of the Louisville firm carried small printed invitations to use the convenient long distance telephone service for speed and satisfaction. S. D. McLaren, vice-president of the Phoenix Company, wrote: "You realize that it is difficult to note direct results from advertising, but in this case we know the sale by telephone was a result of the printed statement on our invoice."

The search for new methods to increase sales and widen the sales territory often overlooks the obvious means of overcoming time and distance—the telephone.

Modern long distance telephone service is not only a quick, convenient and satisfactory way to make voice-to-voice contacts with present and prospective customers—it is low in cost. You can make a voice-trip of 100 miles for about 60 cents by using day Station-to-Station service, and other distances for correspondingly small cost.

Many southern concerns are using the service to increase sales and gain good will. Perhaps we can help you make your telephone service more profitable. Call or write the telephone Business Office.

Green Favors Five-Billion-Dollar Federal Public Works Measure

A. F. of L. Support Given to Senator La Follette's Bill Authorizing $5,500,000,000 Bond Issue to Finance Large Public Works Construction Program to Provide Jobs for the Unemployed.

Washington, March 16.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, stated that the full strength of the federation would be given to the five and one-half billion dollar federal public works construction bill sponsored by Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, to relieve unemployment.

The cost of the public works would be met by the flotation of a federal bond issue.

Hearings on the bill were begun by a subcommittee of the senate committee on education.

The measure was approved by Sanford E. Thompson, Boston, president of the Thompson and Lichtner company, Inc.; Willard L. Thorp, professor of economics, Amherst college; John P. Hogan, engineer, New York City, member of the administrative board of the American Engineering council, and William N. Loucks, assistant professor of economics at the Wharton School of Finance, University of Pennsylvania.

Work for Jobless Imperative.

Mr. Thompson said the measure was imperatively needed to "employ men who are idle, utilize capital, and from the income derived by the workers to bring back consumer purchasing and thus increase employment in industry."

"The federal government," Mr. Thorp said, "has accepted the responsibility for returning confidence to our financial structure. A vigorous public works policy would further assist in recovery by injecting life into the producing mechanism. Once recovery has begun, we can count upon the cumulative forces of increasing employment and advancing prices to carry us out of the depression.

Million Public Works Employes Lose Jobs.

Mr. Hogan estimated that public works by municipal, county and state governments, normally $2,500,000,000 a year, have been cut 35 per cent and that this loss in construction would bring unemployment to about 1,000,000 persons.

Mr. Loucks expressed the belief that the bill would stiffen the general price level and increase consumer purchasing.

Mooney's Mother Urges President To Free Her Son

Plea Left at White House Denounces Case of Famous Prisoner as "Dirty Shame."

Washington, March 9.—Mrs. Mary Mooney, 84-year-old mother of Tom Mooney, union molder, serving a life sentence in California as a result of conviction on perjured evidence of complicity in the bombing of the San Francisco Preparedness day parade of 1916, called at the White House on March 5 to ask President Hoover's help in freeing her son. She was unable to see the president and handed her appeal to Theodore Joslin, one of Hoover's secretaries. He promised to bring it to the attention of Hoover.

The appeal, which called the imprisonment of Mooney a "dirty shame" on the United States and California, was as follows:

"Mr. President—A lot of people tell me you can do nothing for my boy Tom, who has been in San Quentin prison fifteen years for a crime he did not do. They talk about the federal government not having the right to step into affairs of a state. That's just an idea. I know nothing about it. But I do know that one of the presidents before you in the White House kept Tom from the gallows. If President Wilson had not investigated the case in 1917 my boy surely would have been hung. The men President Wilson had look into the case found such clear evidence of a frame-up that the president told Gov. Stevens not to hang my son.

"Then Secretary of Labor Wilson made a further investigation and found even more sure evidence of the frame-up. What they found in this investigation is printed as a government document, the Densmore report. Maybe you have seen it. It shows how your college mate, Fiekert, made up lies to convict my son. It is a disgrace to our country and to the courts.

"And now two respected lawyers of New York City, legal experts for your Wickersham commission, have made another investigation with taxpayers' money. Of course, they found the case against Tom a mass of lies. The senate has not yet allowed that Wickersham report to be published. And you who appointed the commission have said nothing.

"Mr. President, I have come across the country to the White House as my last hope of getting Tom out of prison before I die. I am 84. I won't live much longer. You can free my boy if you want to, just as President Wilson stopped his hanging. Everybody now knows he is innocent. I don't see why you want to keep this dirty shame on your country and your state of California.

"If you are not moved by that kind of talk will you not, at least, Mr. President, listen to my plea as an old mother soon to die. The White House has been my chief hope ever since Tom was convicted, because, as I told you, the White House kept him from being killed. Now won't you please give him back to me, out of prison?"

36,000 Idle in Arkansas; Public Works Bond Issue Favored to Make Jobs

Little Rock, Ark.—The Engineers Club of Little Rock adopted a resolution favoring a $100,000 municipal bond improvement issue to provide work for the unemployed.

W. A. Rooksbery, state labor commissioner, approved the bond issue. "All the plans that have been put into effect so far," he said, "have been to help the credit situation. There have been no plans initiated that will actually put men to work."

In addition to the local bond issue, Commissioner Rooksbery favored federal funds large enough to put five million idle to work. He said that the system of individual contributions for charity relief has proven unfair, for the reason that many of the rich but selfish will not contribute their share, and the relief work is now left to those who cannot afford to give.

Mr. Rooksbery said that there are 36,000 unemployed in Arkansas, with an annual wage loss of $61,000,000.

derwriting bondholders, has reached a stage of absurdity. Business can only resume by the strengthening of the purchasing power of the underlying population, and purchasing power can be strengthened only by the arrival of jobs. In times such as these, it is an accepted practice that government agencies can best lead in the supplying of jobs.

"Please bear in mind that this is needed construction; that all preliminary barriers to its accomplishment have been brushed aside; that responsibility for its needed fulfillment lies not with the treasury department, or with the executive branch of the government, but with congress—that is, with the representatives of the people, whom, it would seem, if we may point the fact out, should be anxious to remedy want and need which reaches alarming proportions."

The city council of Niagara Falls, Ontario, has adopted a resolution approving the principle of unemployment insurance and urging immediate consideration of the scheme of the Canadian federal and provincial authorities. W. C. BIRTHRIGHT GUEST OF CENTRAL BODY MONDAY EVE

Letter from W. C. Birthright, secretary-treasurer of the Journeymen Barbers' International union, contains the information that he will arrive in Chattanooga Monday morning, and he will, of course, be invited to address Central Body Monday night.

Mr. Birthright will attend the four-states labor conference which meets at Meridian, Miss., April 4, 5 and 6.

Paul J. Aymon and W. E. Cheek, president and secretary, respectively, of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, will also attend the Meridian conference.

Close to 300,000 Put Back on Job By Work Drive

Business Shows Slight Improvement as Nation-Wide Campaign to Re-employ Million Workers Enters Sixth Week.

Washington, March 23.—Verging on the 300,000 mark of workers placed since the drive opened, the war against depression, united action for employment campaign, entered its sixth week with a slight betterment in business shown in several parts of the country. The campaign is under the direction of the Amerigan Legion, American Federation of National Advertisers and the legion auxiliary.

Railroads, the textile industry and some other manufacturing industries have shown a slight increase in business. Manufacturing in San Francisco showed an employment gain of 3.8 per cent and a gain in pay rolls of 3.2, according to reports from that city.

The Big Four railroad has added men to its shop force at Anderson, Ind., and the New York Central lines has added to its workers at its shops in Malone, N. Y. The Rutland railroad and the Missouri Pacific have also increased their forces.

In Connecticut a state-wide organization s being perfected to be the fifth of a series of regional and state offices of the campaign to be opened throughout the country to handle the job-getting problems of the drive. Albert E. Lavery, of Fairfield, vice-president of the Bridgeport Hydraulic company, has accepted the chairmanship of the Connecticut campaign. He will hold a meeting or leading citizens. Arthur J. Wallace, of Greenwich, president of the State Federation of Labor, is a member of the committee.

Reports to Matthew Woll, chairman of the labor division, show that organized labor over the country has joined whole-heartedly in the campaign to help find a million jobs for a million workers. In some parts of the south central trade unions have to battle against a horde of transients who work at any job and for any wage, disorganizing scales and working conditions.

New York City, March 23.—With the battle cry, "Back to the pay rolls," in the war against depression being conducted by the American Legion, American Federation of Labor, Association of National Advertisers and legion auxiliary, workers are beginning to "get a break," statistics at the headquarters of the campaign, Hotel Biltmore, show.

When the campaign entered its fifth week of the colossal drive, approximately 240,000 jobless had been placed on a wage-earning basis, representing 1,329 communities in forty-four states.

Organized labor over the country has been heart and soul in the work of finding a million jobs for a million workers, and local unions and central bodies are strongly represented on various committees and in many instances are taking the lead in the work. In San Francisco, the Central Labor union and the legion organized the city and the first day collected $39,000 as part of a fund to pay wages for "made" work for the unemployed.

According to "Facts for Workers," the monthly economic newsletter, published by the Labor Bureau, Inc., New York City, "not a single increase and almost 300 cuts were listed by employers, unions and municipal governments for the month ending Dec. 16, 1931. Preliminary estimates for January indicated an even more accelerating trend."

BUILDING TRADES OFFICERS ASKED TO CONFER SUNDAY WITH CENTRAL BODY BOARD

Paul J. Aymon, representative of the American Federation of Labor, Thursday asked The Labor World to issue a call for a qualified representative of each and every building trades organization in the city to meet with the executive board of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at Central Labor hall.

Mr. Aymon requests that the secretary or president of each building trades union, or both, attend the meeting without fail, as important matters in connection with the new postoffice building are to be discussed and acted upon.

Food For Thought

The following excerpts from two public addresses delivered recently by prominent citizens of Chattanooga are calculated to challenge the thoughtful consideration of every citizen, high or low.

Dr. Alexander Guerry, president of the University of Chattanooga and a leader in civic and cummunity life, is speaking on "College and Freedom of Thought," and the quotations are incidental to a discussion of the relation of freedom of thought and speech in the college to our social and politicial order.

The quotations from an address by City Judge Martin A. Fleming are taken from a more or less general discussion of political and economic conditions, nationally and locally.

They are here reprinted as indicating the trend of thought among students of economics, and the growing conviction among fair-minded citizens of all groups that the present state of affairs is unsound and is leading toward destruction of our American institutions.

In a radio address delivered over station WDOD last Wednesday night, Dr. Guerry said:

"* * * Tenement houses, slums and shacks not fit for human habitation, disfigure our cities or countryside. Unemployment, hunger and suffering are around him (the average citizen). These have been more apparent and more widespread since the severe depression, but they were all too present before the blow of business adversity struck the world. Misery, crime, ignorance and serious economic adjustments are evident in the social order. Lives broken instead of given a fair chance by economic pressure or by their own mistakes to a sort of bonded peasantry, impress him with irony and cruelty of life. He views unhappiness where there could be happiness, discontent where there could be peace, chaos where there could be orderly progress.

"Such conditions seem unnecessary to the intelligent citizen. Surely a sensible people can work out a better social order. Surely civilization is not obliged to be scarred with crime, misery, poverty, disease, unemployment and cruelty. It is not an impossible task to make changes even though gradually, yet definitely, for a happier and finer civilization. As a matter of fact, it is the only sensible thing to do and he will attempt it. * * *"

Speaking, last Sunday morning, at the open forum being conducted at the Ochs Memorial temple, Judge M. A. Fleming said:

"* * * I find that there are only two cheap articles in American life—wages and human life. Several of Chattanooga's leading industries are now paying their help at the rate of 8 cents an hour. A man working at a salary rate of 8 cents an hour can, if he works twelve hours a day and doesn't take off any time for lunch, earn the paltry sum of 96 cents a day. If the policemen and firemen will be scared and intimidated by this unseen force trying to reduce their salaries, it will not be long before they will be working for 8 cents an hour.

"I have made a fairly thorough investigation and I do not find that there has been any reduction in interest on bank notes, real estate notes, on medicine, doctors' bills and most all of the necessities of life.

"A reduction of the laborer's wages would be denying him the right to live and supply his family with food and clothing, denying him a right to give them a simple education. I can't figure out why he should have a wage cut. Labor is prior to and independent of capital; capital is the fruit of labor. Labor and the poor have taken every knock on the chin and are still taking it, but the chin and the heart of the American citizen have gone the limit. Labor made capital possible and has taken its burdens so capital will have to exert itself and pay for its ride.* * *"

Green Sends McGrady and Tracy To Represent A. F. of L. at Murder Trial of Kentucky Miners

Washington, March 23.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, delegated Edward F. McGrady, legislative agent of the American Federation of Labor, and Edward J. Tracy, a Washington attorney, to be his special representatives at the trial in Harlan, Ky., of William Turnblazer and other miners on the charge of murder in connection with the labor controversy last year between the coal miners and the coal operators.

They will confer with and assist Senator Robison, of Kentucky, counsel for the United Mine Workers of America, who is in charge of the defense.

Mr. Turnblazer is president of District No. 19 of the United Mine Workers of America, with headquarters at Jellico, Ky.

The trial opened on March 21.

President Green was informed that the coal operators of Harlan county had placed an assessment of 2 cents per ton on all coal mined in that county, the fund to be used to convict the coal miners on murder charges which organized labor and other well informed citizens believe to have no foundation of fact.

The coal operators and the prosecuting authorities have endeavored to create the impression that the coal miners under indictment are communists and engaged in efforts to overthrow fundamental American institutions. This propaganda is designed to prejudice possible jurors against the defendants and thus secure convictions unwarranted by the facts.

It was pointed out that those familiar with the Kentucky coal miners and the membership of the United Mine Workers of America know this charge of communism and radicalism to be absolutely false.

McGrady and Tracy will remain in Harlan and will keep President Green fully informed of the proceedings.

New Hotel Picketed At Formal Opening

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Union pickets patroled the sidewalks around the new $4,000,000 26-story Oklahoma Biltmore hotel when it was formally opened with a dinner-dance attended by 500 persons.

The pickets carried signs proclaiming the hotel unfair to organized labor. The Biltmore was built entirely on the "open shop" plan and the hotel service is non-union.

AMERICANS ORDERED TO LEAVE RUSSIA, UNITED PRESS SAYS

Moscow—Several hundred Americans who came to the Union of Soviet Social Republics looking for jobs and other benefits of the communist state were informed that they must leave the country without delay, according to information given out by the United Press headquarters here.

The government, it was stated, has decided suddenly on tightening its regulations affecting foreigners.

Inadequate Pay, Idleness, Called Big Crime Causes

National Probation Association Reports Lack of Job Security Largely Responsible for Criminal Record in 1931.

Washington, March 23.—Unemployment, low wages, haphazard work, "blind-alley" jobs, lack of vocational guidance and lack of proper recreational facilities are cited as important factors contributing to crime in 1931, by the National Probation Association's Year Book.

The National Probation association is an association made up of juvenile court judges, probation officers, psychiatrists, criminologists, and others interested in the treatment and prevention of crime in the United States.

"Economic stability and security," states the year book, "are two of the greatest safeguards to orderly life. The experiences encountered in 1931 have not only made social workers, business men an deconomists conscious of the havoc which lack of security can bring to all classes but have made them realize that something must be done to eliminate widespread unemployment in the future. Unemployment and inadequate wages are paid for by each community in terms of dependency, delinquency, disease and related social problems."

Lack of sufficient regular family income to insure health and at least a minimum of decency and comfort are cited first in a list of causes contributing largely to crime and delinquency last year.

Pity the lot of woman. All she can do is marry you, nag you, divorce you, and then set you in the coop for not paying her a pension the rest of her life.

FORBES TO SPEAK AT OPEN FORUM SUNDAY MORNING

George Forbes, vice-president of the Tennessee Federation of Post Office Clerks, and otherwise active in local and state labor circles, will be the speaker at the open forum at Ochs Memorial temple Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

Leaders in all walks of life have been on the forum programs, and the discussions have become increasingly interesting, with a corresponding increase in attendance.

Mr. Forbes' subject will be "Labor's Part in American Civilization." Trades unionists, it is announced, are especially invited to attend.

Drastic Pay Cut Forces Walkout Of 5,000 Miners

Southern Ohio Operators Declare They Will Have No Dealings With Union and Wil Stand by "Open Shop."

Nelsonville, O., March 23.—Forced to act by a 25 per cent reduction in wages, more than 5,000 miners in the Hocking Valley, Sunday Creek and other coal fields in southern Ohio are on strike and are making a courageous and determined fight. The attitude of the coal operators, who hide behind the time-worn argument of unfair competition from Kentucky and West Virginia, has caused much suffering throughout the district and appeals have been made to Gov. George White to intercede and compel the operators to meet in conference with the miners to discuss a decent wage agreement.

The miners were almost a unit in striking against the wage cut. The men walked out when the operators in the Hocking Valley field attempted to put into effect a uniform wage scale of $3 a day and 38 cents a ton for loaders. Gov. White, upon the refusal of the coal operators to take part in a conference, sent representatives into the coal fields to investigate the situation and to report to him, with a view to mapping out a program for relief for some of the destitute families of the miners.

Coal operators of the district have adopted a bull-headed attitude founded upon the tactics of non-union operators in West Virginia and Kentucky. Officials of the Sunday Creek Coal company, the New York Coal company and the Stalter-Essex Coal company, after refusing to meet with the miners, issued a statement in which they said:

"We will have no dealings with the United Mine Workers of America and we positively will not meet representatives of this group. Continuation of the strike will mean total abandonment of several properties in the district. We are making this statement so our employes will understand that our position is unchanged and that no deviation from the open-shop policy will be considered."

The district officials of the United Mine Workers have issued an official circular, setting forth the facts in the strike situation and expressing the entire willingness of the miners to meet the operators in joint conference to work out a wage scale and working conditions that will be fair to both sides.

Illinois Coal Opeators Reject Union Demands

Chicago.—At a joint conference of operators and coal miners here, the operators refused the renewed demands of the Illinois Miners' union for an increase in the basic wage scale. A subcommittee of nine operators and nine union representatives was delegated to negotiate a contract to replace the present one, expiring March 31.

At the first meeting of the subcommittee, it was agreed that William B. Wilson, former secretary of labor and joint arbitrator for Illinois miners and operators, should sit in the conference without a vote.

Lady Harrison—You're the fifth beggar today that has asked me for something to eat. There are too many of you walking the streets these days.

Dusty Dan—I agrees wid you, ma'am. Since we've had unemployment everyone thinks they can do our kind of work and dey joins our profession.

BIG INTERESTS BACKING FIGHT FOR WILKERSON

Labor Heads Charge Misrepresentation.

"GANGLAND" TALK IS "SMOKE SCREEN"

Friends of Injunction Judge Declared to Be Concealing Facts.

Washington, March 23.—Branding as "false and misleading propaganda" the charge made by supporters of Judge James H. Wilkerson that "Gangdom" is back of the fight which is being made in the senate to prevent the confirmation of the judge as a member of the U. S. circuit court, the entire American labor movement presented its side of the story in a statement addressed to Senator William E. Borah, chairman of the senate subcommittee considering the Wilkerson case.

Wilkerson's nomination is being fought by labor on the ground that he has been guilty of outrageous abuses of judicial power and has shown extreme bias against organized labor, notably in the drastic injunction issued against the striking railroad shopmen in 1922 and in injunctions issued against the Chicago Musicians' union.

The principal statement was drafted and signed by the chief executives of twenty-one standard railroad labor organizations, representing more than a million transportation workers in this country and Canada. President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, gave a brief, but most emphatic indorsement of the position of the railroad men.

False Propaganda Charged.

"It is clear," said Mr. Green, "that the interests which are backing Judge Wilkerson are endeavoring to throw out a smoke screen to conceal the real issue.

"Charges of the gravest character have been presented against Judge Wilkerson. Those charges have not been met. Instead, the charge is made that opposition to Judge Wilkerson is prompted by the denizens of 'gangland,' but not a scintilla of evidence is produced to sustain that allegation.

"In the circumstances, it is inconceivable that the subcommittees or the senate itself will be influenced by this false and misleading propaganda."

Tribune Charges Scored.

The letter which the twenty-one chiefs of the railroad labor organizations forwarded to Senator Borah said in part:

"We are addressing you as the authorized spokesman of more than a million American railroad workers. We regret that it was impossible for you to arrange for a meeting of the subcommittee so we might appear in person, present the statement which we are embodying in this communication, and subject ourselves to such cross-examination as the members of the committee might see fit to make.

"We are willing to resent, and do hope to thoroughly expose, libelous propaganda inspired by the Chicago 'Tribune' in connection with the nomination of Judge James H. Wilkerson for a place on the U. S. Circuit court, a matter which is now pending before your committee.

"While this false and misleading propaganda originated with the 'Tribune,' it has been vigorously spread by other supporters of Judge Wilkerson, through newspaper interviews and, perhaps, to a more limited extent, by testimony presented to this committee.

Coercion of Senate Sought.

"The object of the propaganda is to coerce the senate into confirming Judge Wilkerson regardless of the fact that up to this moment the grave charges presented against him have not been refuted. In fact, so far as we know, no attempt has been made to answer some of the most serious of those charges.

"So far as these railroad labor organizations are concerned, some weeks ago they presented through their chief counsel, Donald R. Richberg, of Chicago, their reasons for opposing the confirmation of Judge Wilkerson. We unreservedly affirm

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter IV
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part IX

II. Jesus' Social Opportunism

Everywhere about us life is carried on along the lines of organizations, schemes, majorities, by and through agencies, etc. Every phase of our life has its "official representatives," its chosen and inspired spokesmen—our religion, fraternal orders, political parties, educational institutions, yes, even the social circles in which we move has its "leaders." An individual under our system of life represents nothing—seldom anybody, not even himself. He speaks for nobody—if he dares do so there are "official" spokesmen who can repudiate him if needs be. Thus individual thinking, one of the most vital things in life, is to a degree frowned upon.

WM. L. MOSS

We have forced life into certain grooves or channels, made of it in impersonal piece of social machinery and compelled the individual to become little more than a well-oiled cog in this vast complex machine. Individual initiative must always be along certain lines for the average human being, and always our lives must be in harmony at all times with the general trend of life as lived by the majority.

Character, on which Jesus laid so much stress in the Sermon on the Mount as the cornerstone of the individual Christian life, is almost entirely wanting in this "progressive" day. One need only be honest enough to keep out of jail. Once one goes to jail it is really no disgrace nor does it prove his lack of character.

We are heartily in favor of charity only so long as the other fellow is being made to foot the bill. We believe in reform only so long as someone else is being reformed—not us. We believe in right triumphing only so long as we are the beneficiaries or when it does not interfere with our lives if the other fellow is the party who will benefit. Our interpretation of life is from the narrowest view possible—we do not cultivate the capacity, which Jesus possessed in such abundance, of looking beyond the limits of our own special interests and perceiving our life's relations to the great world over which hovers the spirit of the Father nor do we see our lives as a part of the movement which He directs and which we call the Divine plan.

RUN-DOWN and WEAK

"I began taking Cardui when in a weakened, run-down condition," writes Mrs. F. S. Perrit, of Wesson, Miss. "I took one bottle, and I seemed to improve so much that I sent for six bottles. After I had taken the six bottles, I seemed entirely well.

"Before I took Cardui, I was nervous, restless, blue and out of heart. I felt depressed all the time. After I took Cardui, all this disappeared.

"I gave my daughter Cardui and it helped to relieve irregular . . ."

Industrial "Benevolence" Unmasked

The following editorial from Labor, Washington organ of the standard rail organizations, is reprinted by request of a local rail union official, who expressed the desire that members of all craft unions should read and digest its significance:

Industrial despotism lost its "benevolent" mask at the Ford plant in Dearborn recently, and the mass production which makes a few men billionaires and leaves the mass of producers on the edge of starvation was shown in all its cruel stupidity.

Some 3,000 jobless men marched out of Detroit to the Ford plant to ask for work. The Detroit police had no trouble with them; a newspaper photographer describes them as a "jolly crowd."

They came to the Kingdom of Dearborn where Henry Ford holds sway. The Dearborn police greeted them with gas bombs, turned the fire hose on them in some of the bitterest weather seen this winter. The chief of Ford's private army of detectives tried to run the marchers down in an automobile, and then the police fired. Four of the marchers were killed, and 20 or more injured.

The crowd was unarmed—the casualty list proves that. The marchers were hit by bullets; the police received in return only hand-thrown stones and chunks of frozen mud.

Henry Ford has made one of the greatest fortunes of all time, largely by the aid of just such men as he met with gas bombs and bullets when they asked for work. He held his workers in the grip of a despotism which he called benevolent. He spoke favorably of high wages. But under the fair seeming was utter tyranny.

He would have nothing to do with labor unions. He would tolerate no resistance to his autocratic will. He paced his men by machines that strained their nerves to the breaking point. When they had produced more cars than could be sold, he closed the plant; and when their meager savings were exhausted, he left them to be supported by the community, while from his safe retreat in Florida he made light of the problems of unemployment.

Henry Ford refused to give a dollar to help men who have helped him pile up a billion dollars; and when they came in numbers to ask for work, they were drenched and half-suffocated, and shot.

A few years ago, Ford was one of the most popular men in the country. He had carried mass production and the concentration of industrial power to its highest limits. He was hailed as the prophet of a new industrial era. Now, the mask is off. The hero of mass production is just a factory tyrant; as selfish, as stupid and as cruel as the tyrants—political and industrial—who went before him.

An effort is being made to blame the Communists for the trouble. There were as many Communists on the Detroit side of the line as on the Dearborn side; but in Detroit, the will of Henry Ford is not quite omnipotent.

Communist leaders rejoice at the row—and why not? Henry Ford's bombs and bullets and ice-water made more converts to Communism in one day than all the missionaries from Moscow could make in a year without such aid.

When trade unions are barred, revolutionary societies thrive and grow—and revolutionists do not long rely on frozen mud for weapons.

Arbitrary power is always abused; and there are just two effective checks on the arbitrary power of industrial magnates today. One is taxation that pares down their power with their incomes; and one is the labor organization that meets massed money with united numbers.

If the killing at Dearborn helps the American people to realize and act upon these truths, it will not be wholly in vain.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Democracy the world over has good reason to rejoice in the results of the German election. Though President von Hindenburg did not get a majority over his combined opponents, he missed re-election by only 160,000 votes out of a total of 39,000,000 and his victory in the second balloting in April is regarded as certain. Hitler, fascist, and Thaelmann, communist, both bitter foes of democracy and advocates of dictatorship, failed in their effort to overthrow Hindenburg, who stands for the maintenance of the German republic and the rule of the people.

It is important to remember that the great German trade unions and their political voice, the social-democratic party, supported Hindenburg and were instrumental in his virtual victory. They enrolled in the "iron front" of enemies of fascism and communism and succeeded in holding Germany for democracy.

In Germany, as in the United States and other democratic nations, organized labor stands firmly against dictatorship of any kind.

In his book, "The Menace of Overproduction—Its Causes, Extent and Cure," Dr. Virgil Jordan, economist of the McGraw-Hill company, says:

"It is hard to see why anybody should suffer from having too much in a world where a great deal of want is found everywhere at all times. But in this society in which serving human needs is still secondary and incidental to making money, feast and famine are constant companions or always close on each other's heels."

Dr. Jordan means that there is no reason for want in a land of plenty, which is a thought that is daily gaining ground. If industrial and political leaders do not take cognizance of the growth of this opinion and act wisely and with decision, they will have no one to blame but themselves if they find themselves thoroughly repudiated and discredited.

When it is considered that a railroad train has run more than five million miles in nine years and has been "on time" 95.6 per cent, it seems like a good record for "punctuality" and "attendance" and speaks well for railroad men's devotion to duty.

The Capitol Limited of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad has made this record since it was first put in service on May 18, 1923, between Washington and Chicago, a distance of 786 miles in each direction, or 1,572 miles round trip.

Similarly, the National Limited has an "on time" record of 97.2 per cent in more than four and a quarter million miles run since it was inaugurated seven years ago on April 26, 1925, between Washington and St. Louis, 890 miles, or 1,780 miles round trip.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

The supreme authority of the American Federation of Labor is its annual convention, and this assembly is made up of delegates chosen from national and international unions affiliated with it as well as from state, central and local trades unions. In addition to attending to the routine convention matters this yearly gathering of Federation delegates elects the national officers who form the executive council which guides its administrative affairs.

In order that the Federation may not be so inclusive as a central organization that it becomes paralyzed through inability to function properly because of its tremendous size, it is divided into five departments, namely, the Building Trades, Metal Trades, Mining, Railroad Employes and Union Label Trades. Funds of the Federation, which in reality is made of these five separate departments, are derived from a per capita tax on the membership of the trade over which each department has supervision. Each of the above departments is delegated its own autonomous sphere of activity. For example, the miners' union does not attempt to meddle in nor control the union label activities of, say, the boot and shoemakers' union, which belongs to the Union Label Trades Department of the Federation. Nor do the printers, for instance, who are members of the Union Label Trades department, attempt to take the lead in the settlement of a controversy between, say, the metal trades union and their employers. The only time when the activities of different departments make contact is when the Federation itself calls for concerted action. Until then, the unions of each trades department in the Federation apply themselves solely to their own problems, but always on the alert to cooperate with other departments when requested to do so either by the Federation or departmental officials.

Here's a good one from the lips of a well-known merchant: "The sale is never closed until the customer is so well satisfied that he tries to sell the product to someone else."

Story of Power Trust "Greed" Told to the Senate by Wagner

By GEORGE L. KNAPP in "Labor"

Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, told the senate last week how the federal power commission, created to preserve the rights of the American people in American streams, has refused even to listen to the application of an American city for a tiny portion of the water of the Niagara river.

It is a story of greed and gall almost unparalleled; the power commission and the power trust working hand-in-glove to complete a monopoly on the great boundary stream, and keep the city of Lockport, N. Y., from building a publicly-owned plant.

"Out of all the vast flood which pours down the gorge of the Niagara river," said Senator Wagner, "the United States is permitted a daily diversion of not more than 20,000 cubic feet per second. That limitation is contained in the treaty of May 13, 1910, between the United States and Great Britain.

Trust Grabs Water.

"Of this total sum, 19,725 cubic feet are held by the Niagara Falls Power company, under license No. 16, issued by the federal power commission. The remaining 275 cubic feet per second were, until recently, covered by license No. 15, held by a group of licensees."

Having secured 98.63 per cent of the American share of the waters of Niagara, the power trust decided to take in the other 1.37 per cent—the 275 cubic feet covered by license No. 15. This was mainly a matter of "inducing" the holders of that license to give it up. In May, 1928, the holders of No. 15 surrendered it to the power commission, which could then grant this water to any applicant complying with the law.

If the company had not been quite so greedy, it might have finished the deal at once. But the federal power act provides that the government may take over the project when the license expires by paying the net cost of that project.

So, to "gyp" Uncle Sam when the time came, and, meanwhile, to furnish an excuse for high power rates, the company filed a statement of its "costs" in securing the release of this 275 cubic feet of water per second, but the commission refused to accept it.

This, it should be remarked, was under the old power commission, before Bonner was brought east from California to make things easy for the power trust. William V. King, chief accountant of the commission, and Charles A. Russell, solicitor, were responsible for blocking this attempt to pad the "valuation."

Senator Wagner told the senate the story in detail. Here, it is enough to say that, while the dispute about costs continued, the commission gave the company a temporary permit, which later was renewed. This permit, on the most liberal interpretation, expires the last day of August, this year. January 9, the city of Lockport, N. Y., filed an application for this water.

"There was but one narrow question before the commission," said Senator Wagner, "namely, was the city of Lockport entitled to be heard?"

The city of Lockport was not heard. The commission held that the Niagara company had preempted this 275 cubic feet per second, although it had not complied with the law by filing a statement of expenses which the commission could accept. It had failed to comply with the law in other respects.

"The policy of the federal power act to grant preferences to municipalities is being thwarted," declared Senator Wagner.

"The senate ought not to let this matter rest where it is. We should at least become aware of the policy laid down in the decision of the commission. If we choose to approve the commission's policy, let us do so deliberately. If we disapprove it we ought to take action before the present decision congeals into precedent and precipitates into vested rights."

Story of Two Countries.

Charles A. Russell, former solicitor of the commission but summarily "fired" when the new commissioners took office, is representing the city of Lockport, and has filed suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to mandamus the commission to hear the application of Lockport. The case will be heard in March.

It only remains to note the very different results of Niagara water in the two countries which it divides.

On the Canadian side, it has been used to build up the greatest public enterprise in the world, the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, which sells current for domestic use at an average of less than two cents per kilowatt hour.

On the United States side, it has been used to build up one of the greatest units of the power trust, to add to vast fortunes, including that of Andrew Mellon; while the average cost of current for domestic use in the part of New York corresponding to Ontario in nearness to Niagara Falls is seldom less than five cents per kilowatt hour.

Union Men on Wisconsin Jobless Insurance Body

Madison, Wis.—Selection of an advisory committee to the Wisconsin industrial commission on unemployment insurance was announced by A. J. Altmeyer, commission secretary.

The committee consists of three representatives of the employers, three representatives of labor and a representative of the commission. The labor representatives are: Henry Ohl, Jr., Milwaukee, president of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor; Jacob Friedrich, Milwaukee labor leader, and Fred G. Gastrow, Madison, legislative counsel for the Wisconsin council of carpenters.

The committee has the right to arrange for the representation of other interests on the advisory group if necessary.

The committee will discuss with the industrial commission the general plan of procedure in administering the state unemployment insurance law, which becomes compulsory July 1, 1933, if by that time 175,000 Wisconsin workers are not employed under satisfactory voluntary insurance plans.

SOVIET UNION STOPS HIRING AMERICAN SKILLED WORKERS

New York.—The Amtorg Trading corporation, official agency of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, stated that despite announcements that at present American mechanics are not engaged for work in the soviet union, thousands of applications continue to pour into the office.

Officials of the corporation said the cessation for the time being of hiring American skilled workers for soviet industries is due to the temporary shortage of living quarters.

Norris Predicts Wilkerson's Defeat

Washington, March 23.—The senate will reject the nomination of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson as circuit court of appeals judge for the Chicago district, Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, chairman of the senate judiciary committee, predicted on March 15.

Organized labor has strongly protested against Wilkerson's nomination, charging that he has shown extreme bias against organized workers, in the drastic injunction issued against the railroad shopmen in 1922 and in other labor injunction cases. President Hoover is backing Wilkerson and recently praised his record in connection with the sentencing to jail of "Al" Capone, notorious Chicago racketeer and gang leader.

BORAH DENIES RETARDING SENATE ACTION ON WILKERSON

Washington.—Denial that the senate judiciary subcommittee was delaying action on the nomination of Judge James H. Wilkerson, of Chicago, to the federal circuit court was made in the senate by Senator Borah, chairman of the subcommittee.

Senator Norris, of Nebraska, chairman of the senate judiciary committee, predicted the rejection of the nomination. Organized labor opposed the confirmation of Wilkerson because of his drastic injunctions against labor in the railway shopmen's strike of 1922 and against the musicians' union.

WITH THE ELECTRICIANS

By E. E. CROSBY

Dyche sends in an old Park Row song "of the days when electricians did not have to sneak in the back way."

Heretix:

"'Twas the night before payday, and all through my jeans
I hunted in vain for the price of beans—
Forward, turn forward, O Time, in thy flight,
Make it tomorrow, just for tonight."

* * *

It seems since it was brought out that L. L. Lowe was so successful with his "courting" that Perry Howard has been induced to try it. Luck to you, Perry, but don't believe you are as fast as L. L.

* * *

I am able to report that Brother McDaniels is still a school boy. Hope he gets a good report card.

* * *

Frank Krugg is busy these last several days. Hope he don't eat up all the profit.

* * *

Grady McArthur and J. H. Lofty just simply can't give up and are still hanging out on the corner of Seventh and Cherry streets. Better stay away from the fire plug, Dutch.

* * *

Boys, the next regular meeting will be held April 6. Come one, come all.

Will soon be time to hear Jesse Clark bragging on his garden, as he always stands the crowd down that his is the best one in the south.

I think I saw Ed Carroll up to the automobile show and would you believe it he was talking about buying that $16,500 car. How can you imagine such a thing.

* * *

What has become of those electricians who use to go around bragging about how much overtime they had got in?

* * *

If anyone sees Fred Simon be sure and tell him that the price on automobile tags comes down a step the first of the month.

* * *

Hurrah, happy days are here again. I just saw Perry Howard and he extends an invitation to us all to come out to his house if we want red-worms. Boys, we all know spring is here. Let's get going.

* * *

Well, boys, I have not been around to see many of you the last several days, but it's nothing serious; just planting my garden.

Dyche seems to have the spring fever, or maybe the baseball fever. Just a-wondering which.

GREEN URGES FEDERAL CONTROL OF BITUMINOUS COAL INDUSTRY

Tells Senate Committee 1931 Convention of A. F. of L. Endorsed Principles of Davis-Kelly Bill—Mine Workers' Attorney Declares Measure Protects Both Miners and Operators.

Washington, March 23.—The strength of the organized labor movement was given to the Davis-Kelly bill creating a bituminous coal commission to regulate and control interstate commerce in coal by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; Henry Warrum, attorney for the United Mine Workers of America, and representatives of the twenty-one standard railroad labor organizations, at the second session of the senate subcommittee to consider the measure.

The subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Senator Hatfield, of West Virginia, was told by President Green that the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor and the 1931 convention of the federation unanimously supported the principles underlying the bill.

He submitted the resolution adopted by the convention, which declared that the scheme of the bill is to end ruthless competition and the wasting of our national coal resources by regulating the industry on the basis of its interstate commerce characteristics.

Benefits to Labor.

The benefits to the miners after the bill's enactment would still be determined by conference and bargaining through provisions which nullify the yellow dog contract and enable the mine workers to exercise their constitutional rights of free speech and assembly and their inherent right to affiliate with a trade union for the mutual benefit of all employed in bituminous coal mining.

Warrum Finds Bill Constitutional.

Mr. Warrum discussed the constitutionality of the federal regulation of coal mining contained in the Davis-Kelly bill. He declared that congress undoubtedly has the right to regulate the coal industry under the interstate commerce clause of the constitution, and to confirm his position he quoted from the legal report prepared by the United States coal commission in 1923.

Protects Both Mine Workers and Operators.

The bill, he said, permits joint selling associations of operators to strengthen their bargaining power and to eliminate cut-throat competition. But to permit the capital side of the industry to form such combinations and leave mine labor unable to organize and subject to individual "yellow dog" wage contracts was unthinkable. The bill, therefore, requires that the marketing associations shall recognize the right of the mine workers to organize and bargain collectively through their own representatives.

Congress Has Authority to Regulate Coal Industry.

Edmund D. Campbell, an attorney of Washington, D. C., also affirmed the constitutionality of the bill and the right of congress to license and regulate corporations engaged in interstate commerce. Mr. Campbell drafted a report on constitutional questions for the United States coal commission in 1923.

Dr. Ryan Sees Increased Industrial Justice.

Dr. John A. Ryan, professor of moral theology and industrial ethics at the Catholic university, Washington, D. C., and director of the social action department of the National Catholic Welfare council, gave the bill his unqualified support. He believed it would be the means of securing a larger amount of justice for every one concerned with the bituminous industry, including the consumers, and especially stressed the right of trade union organization, which the bill endeavors to secure for the mine workers.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

WHITNEY SAYS WILKERSON'S INJUNCTIONS SHOULD BAR HIM FROM FEDERAL JUDGESHIP

Issued Injunctions to Establish Compulsory Work and Uses Neither Mercy Nor Justice in Interpreting the Legal Rights of Labor Declares President of Railroad Trainmen's Union.

Chicago, March 23.—A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, in a radio talk over station WCFL, gave a vigorous statement of the reasons why organized labor opposes the confirmation by the United States senate of the appointment of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson, of Chicago, to the federal circuit court of appeals.

Mr. Whitney's talk was in reply to an editorial in the Chicago Tribune to the effect that Wilkerson should be confirmed because of his action as trial judge in the Capone case. The editorial also stated that labor's opposition to Wilkerson is based on the desire for revenge growing out of his injunctions in labor cases.

Antagonism to Labor.

"In labor's opposition to Judge Wilkerson," Whitney said, "there is a desire to keep from a high public office a man who many times has arbitrarily gone out of his way to pounce upon the poor working man's rights.

"As United States district judge he has shown clear antagonism to the legitimate exercise of the rights of wage-earners to organize and to act together for the protection of their common interests, which, in the industrial history of our country, too often have been trampled upon by judges who undertake to make law, rather than to interpret it fairly and in the light of the supreme written commands of the majority of the people.

Injunctions Deprived Labor of Legal Rights.

"Without notice and without any compelling reason or righteous purpose, he has issued sweeping injunctions which have deprived workers of rights confirmed in them by law.

"His criticism of labor organizations have revealed his prejudice and class conscious bias, which unfit him for promotion to a higher judicial office.

"Judge Wilkerson has attempted repeatedly to extend the authority of his court outside his jurisdiction as in the case of the notorious Daugherty injunction of 1922 and in the case in which he attempted to subpoena the president of a labor organization from outside the state of Illinois, for which action he was unanimously reversed by the United States supreme court.

Compulsory Work.

"He has attempted to deny to workers their constitutional right to refuse to work under unacceptable terms and conditions of employment.

"He has even attempted to compel men to work without a contract of employment.

"His judicial record proves his great impatience with the efforts of working men to exercise their rights or to obtain common justice at the bar over which he presides.

"To be sure, Judge Wilkerson showed admirable courage in dealing with a notorious gangster in a particular case.

"But is there any man of whom some good cannot be said?

"A man is not qualified for public office merely because he has done one, or many, good things, if by other conduct he has shown a disposition to be guided by principles which are, or will be, inimical to the best interests of the general welfare.

Lacks Mercy and Justice.

"The intense suffering which the present depression has brought to the homes of millions of working men in this country should be persuasive admonition against placing in high judicial office a man whose record proves that he is not motivated by human mercy on common justice in interpreting the legal rights of the working man."

Six-Hour Day Inquiry Approved by Hoover

Washington. — President Hoover signed the resolution passed by congress calling upon the interstate commerce commission to investigate the feasibility of establishing six hours as a basic workday for railroad employes. Eight hours is the present basic day.

The commission's report will include estimates of the cost of establishing the short day for all railway employes. The commission is also directed to determine what effect the shorter day would have on railway operation and service.

The resolution was urged by the Railroad Labor Executives' association and the American Federation of Labor, who regard reduction of hours as the only adequate method to attack unemployment caused by labor-displacing machinery.

Conferees Modify Anti-Injunction Bill

Washington.—The senate and house conferees agreed to strike from the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction bill a senate amendment prohibiting federal courts from issuing mandatory injunctions. With this change they agreed to present a unanimous report assuring final approval of the bill which has passed both houses.

After the adoption by the senate and house, the bill will go to President Hoover for his signature.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD EMPLOYES GIVE 2,500 SUGGESTIONS YEARLY

Philadelphia, Pa.—Four years ago the officials of the Pennsylvania railroad established a bureau of new ideas to bring out suggestions from employes for various sorts of improvements in the company's transportation system.

W. W. Atterbury, president of the company, announced that the employes are turning in about 2,500 practical suggestions annually. He said the percentage of ideas accepted was 33.3 per cent in 1931, 32.9 per cent in 1930, and 19 per cent in 1929.

Union Complains Of "Speed Up" in Lawrence Mills

Efficiency Methods Adding to Already Grave Situation by Displacing Employes, Textile Workers' Organizer Charges.

Lawrence, Mass., March 23.—That "we are living in this city on a human volcano that may erupt most any time and plunge the city into another strike" was the warning contained in a letter sent to Mayor William P. White by Horace A. Riviere, general organizer of the United Textile Workers of America.

Mr. Riviere cited a full-page advertisement in a local newspaper of Feb. 24, 1931, signed by Lionel J. Noah, president of the American Woolen company, which was "a promise made to the workers and the public that the appliance of efficiency experts would be discontinued."

"Now the efficiency experts are here," Mr. Riviere charges. "Yes, back again. In the Washington mill there are fourteen of them, and a similar number in all of the mills, all busy in placing workers on the unemployed list by forcing those that remain in the employment of the corporations to do more work through an additional number of machines per worker, or else a greater revolution of speed per machine."

The general local situation is greatly aggravated by the fact that the 1,500 employes in all municipal departments have not received any pay for more than six weeks. Mayor White says the city cannot borrow money from the bankers until it is shown that all departments are "operating within the budget" adopted by the city council late in January, which contemplated a cut of 20 per cent in wages or a 20 per cent reduction in working forces or working hours. The police, firemen and school department employes have so far refused to take the cut, the operation of which is the only way that these departments can "operate within the budget."

GOVERNMENT TROOPS CALLED IN MEXICAN MINERS' STRIKE

Fresnillo, Zacatecas, Mexico.—Government troops arrived here "to preserve order" about the property of the Fresnillo corporation silver mines in the wake of a strike of 3,000 workers.

The walkout came as the result of an attempt by the company to reduce wages.

The mines are controlled by foreign capitalists.

Richberg Supported.

"It is impossible to add anything worth while to what Mr. Richberg said in that letter. We want you to know that as the chief executives of these railroad organizations, we are in complete accord with the sentiments expressed by Mr. Richberg.

"We want to particularly approve his suggestion that the owner of the Chicago 'Tribune,' the man who must be held responsible for this lying propaganda, should be brought before this committee. Of course, he will not be able to sustain the charges and innuendoes which he has written into his editorials. But he should not be permitted to evade the issue."

4-STATE MEET OPENS MONDAY

Aymon and Williams to Attend Labor Congress, Representing Chattanooga.

Paul J. Aymon and Ben Williams will leave Saturday for Meridian, Miss., to attend a three-days' session of the South Central Labor congress, composed of delegates from Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, which opens Monday in the Mississippi city.

W. E. Cheek, of Nashville, and W. C. Birthright, of Indianapolis, will join the Chattanoogans at Birmingham. President Holt Ross, of the Mississippi federation, announced that the conference will consider problems of vital importance to workers in the territory covered, and delegates from each state and from central bodies and local unions are expected to attend.

Twenty-five representatives of international unions have already signified their intention of being present, Mr. Ross said.

Proposed Slashes Blow to Business Labor Head Says

Lowering of Government Wages Would Have Most Demoralizing Effect on Economic Situation, Congress Told.

Washington, March 30.—New moves in congress to cut the pay of government employes have drawn from President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, another vigorous protest against government wage reductions.

Money saved by cutting government workers' pay would do little toward balancing the budget and would lower the workers' efficiency and morale, President Green says in a statement appealing to congress to actively oppose all attempts which may be made to reduce salaries.

Government wage cuts will have a "most demoralizing effect" on the economic situation and intensify social unrest and discontent, President Green declared.

"The proposal advanced by some members of congress to reduce the salaries of government employes cannot be based upon the alleged necessity of balancing the budget," President Green's statement said. "This is made clear because an analysis of the facts and figures shows that the amount of money which would be saved to the government through the imposition of a reduction in governmental salaries would be comparatively small. At best only a few millions of dollars could be saved. Such an amount would carry little weight in balancing income with expenditures, but such a reduction in the buying power of government employes residing in all sections of the country would be keenly felt by manufacturers, merchants and business men, as well as the government employes. A reduction in the volume of sales, caused by this reduction in wages, would be greater than the actual loss in buying power. Such action would have a most disastrous effect, particularly at this time, when strenuous efforts are being put forth to increase and enlarge markets and stimulate buying power so that unemployment may be reduced and ultimately overcome.

"The effect upon the morale and efficiency of government workers who would be forced to accept reductions in wages would very greatly injure the administration of the affairs of government.

"In some branches of the government federal employes have been dividing the work available with their fellow-workers and at a personal sacrifice have been making a most direct contribution toward the relief of unemployment. There are many thousands of government employes who always have been and who now are underpaid. Even the members of congress and expert, trained men and women working in different departments of the government are receiving salaries far below a fair and just remuneration for their services.

"No one can dare assert that the salaries paid members of the supreme court, the judiciary, members of congress, trained men and women employed to do special work for the

An Unfortunate Attack

Mr. George Forbes, prominent in city and state labor circles for many years, and, particularly more recently, an active participant in many civic and fraternal projects looking to the upbuilding of Chattanooga and the peace and prosperity of its citizens, was, almost overnight, transformed into a wild-eyed, ranting Communist by an editorial writer in the Chattanooga Times, who construed remarks made by the labor official as "loose, inflammatory, unrestrained, inciting," or what have you.

Basis for the editorial attack was an address delivered Sunday morning at the open forum being held at the Julius and Bertha Ochs Memorial Temple, and Mr. Forbes, together with other prominent citizens who have from time to time expressed their views on questions of public interest, was an invited guest of the forum promoters, and although the rules provide that the speaker shall submit to thirty minutes of questioning following the address, first adverse criticism came in the newspaper editorial, published Tuesday morning and consuming a full column of the morning paper's valuable editorial space.

Several who heard the address, however, and many who read the report in Monday's daily papers, professed to have found nothing of a subversive nature in any of its phases. Citizens in various walks of life rather described the remarks as altogether constructive and temperate, with a solemn warning that some measures must be devised to check the constant increase in unemployment and consequent starvation for thousands. But—

"Nothing is to be gained," the editorial said, "while everything may be lost, by preaching prejudice, class hatred and waving the red flag of revolution * * *"

It has become quite a fad of swivel-chair oracles in these parlous times to brand all and sundry who protest against a social system which starves one man and enriches another beyond all reason, as "radicals, reds, communists," or by any other opprobrious epithet which the vocabulary of the paid writer includes. But when an editorial writer in Chattanooga, even by inference, places a citizen of the type of George Forbes in one of those undesirable groups, said writer goes a long way. While Mr. Forbes, it may be said, is unperturbed by the attack, he has in his favor the fact that he has for years been an employe of the United States government, and an honorable record for service to his country in time of war—as a volunteer. But of deeper significance, and what is vastly more important, is that he spoke last Sunday as a representative of a unit of the American labor movement, and his remarks have, in the main, the hearty approval of his associates in organized labor. Who is there left today who will deny the patriotism of the American Federation of Labor and its program?

Without particularly referring to the Times editorial writer, it might be said also that if some of those who sit behind mahogany desks and dictate platitudes for the prints, complacently concluding that "God's in His heaven, all's right with the world," would take the trouble to go out into the highways and byways and listen to expressions from some of the half-starved victims of this depression, they might not be so ready to jump to the conclusion that he who warns against impending danger is uttering "loose, inaccurate" phrases, or has joined the so-called "radicals." Such writers might be of more service if they joined with those who recognize danger in starvation of thousands of patriotic citizens and are earnestly striving to bring about some plan of relief which will assure the perpetuity of our beloved country and its institutions.

The general conclusion of the Times editorial writer appears to be that there is no hope for the program of the American Federation of Labor. Assuming that this impression of his expression is correct, we sincerely trust it will not be shared by any considerable number, for when the times comes, if ever, that patriotic, law-abiding, peace-loving American workingmen are denied the hope held out by their 100 per cent loyal organizations, then may God help us all!

In our opinion the editorial was thoroughly unjustified, to say the least of it, and its conclusions were not borne out by the facts in the case. This estimate of the incident is given weight by every one who heard the address Sunday, and with whom The Labor World has been able to communicate. It is fully supported by regrets expressed by Rabbi Benjamin Parker, who invited Mr. Forbes to speak on "The Part of Labor in American Civilization," by others who are actively identified with the forum, and by scores of citizens who have besieged Mr. Forbes and other labor officials with telephone calls and personal visits to express their confidence in him and their disagreement with his critic.

The cry of "peace, when there is no peace," is mockery, and our problems will not be solved by attacks upon a patriotic citizen who has the foresight and the stamina not only to face facts but to state them publicly.

GEORGE FORBES DISCUSSES "LABOR'S PART IN AMERICAN CIVILIZATION" AT OCHS TEMPLE

"The Part of Labor in American Civilization" was discussed last Sunday morning by George Forbes, local labor official and civic leader, at the open forum being conducted at the community center of Ochs Memorial Temple. Mr. Forbes sketched the progress of labor through organization, and pointed out its value to the government in times of national stress. He called attention to humane legislation placed upon the statute books, and compared living conditions of a century ago with those of today, claiming for intelligent thought among wage-earners a share of the credit for all such progress.

He outlined the program of labor for the future, and offered suggestions as to relief in the present depression.

At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Forbes answered numerous questions from his audience, and was congratulated upon his remarks by practically every person present.

He said, in part:

Prejudice and ignorance are the two greatest drawbacks to American civilization. We are getting away from them more every day. Travel, education and meetings like these you are conducting will eventually make brothers of us all. With 26,000,000 autos running all over this country, people getting better acquainted and understanding each other, it's going to change our feelings toward our fellow citizens, and with $500,000,000 being spent on foreign travel by American tourists every year, the end of our wars is just like prosperity—it's just around the corner.

The prejudice of the wealthy and well-to-do against the workers also must be eradicated. They must realize that unless the workers are making good wages, there is no prosperity and the depression will continue. The cause of our depression is our antiquated industrial and economic system. In this age of invention and modern machinery we have failed to make an equal and just distribution of earned wealth; thereby preventing the purchase of our products by those for whom they were intended. A man with a modern machine can produce more in a six-hour day and a five-day week than his father did with his twelve-hour day and a month's time.

With our purchasing power curtailed by a slash in wages and a machine hand able to produce more in five years than he could purchase with his wages of a lifetime, is it any wonder that we hear the cry of over-production? The only thing we have not modernized is our beer making machinery and with that we have gone back to the primitive.

The program of organized labor must be adopted or a better one substituted for our capitalists' greedy system of more for dividends and less for wages. Industry must give more thought to the producers and consider their welfare as a vital factor in our economic system, or some morning they will wake up to find so swift a change that all the king's men can't put Humpty Dumpty back together again.

Of the 8,000,000 unemployed in this country, how many could be depended upon to uphold a capitalistic system that denied them and theirs the right to a mere existence? What do you suppose is in the minds of these men as they return to their hungry family with the same old story, "no work?"

One hundred and fifty years seems a long time to stand on your head, but in the evolution of the human race it is only a day. The men who are out of work today are the same flesh and blood as the men who staged

GEO. FORBES SUBMITS "RETORT COURTEOUS"

George Forbes, object of an editorial attack by a writer in the morning paper by reason of remarks made in an address Sunday morning, Thursday gave out the following interview to The Labor World:

"If the worthy editorial writer of the Chattanooga Times would devote more time to reading history and helping decent, forward-looking citizens to peacefully and patriotically correct a system that is leading our beloved country to chaos, and, as I suggested Sunday, help to establish a system of more general distribution of work and a more equitable division of earned wealth, instead of writing inflammatory articles against those who are upholding the established institutions of our government, he would be a much more useful citizen.

"Another point that I touched upon in my talk was the retirement of superannuated employes. That might help in his case, also. I am surprised that he did not use my remarks about modern machinery as an argument against the Eighteenth amendment.

"In regard to his reflection upon my patriotism, when my country needed fighting men I volunteered for service—which is a better demonstration of patriotism than filing an exemption."

PRINTERS TRY RELIEF PLAN

Novel Method for Assisting Unemployed Adopted by Local Union.

(By Wrong Font)

The Chattanooga Typographical union has introduced a new plan for taking care of its unemployed members, which apparently is going to be a huge success. It has been enthusiastically received by the members who are working steady, on whom rests the burden of providing the means for payment of unemployment benefits.

The new plan involves the purchase, by the union, of time from the regulars, to be given to the unemployed. The latter part of the week the chairman of each chapel posts on the bulletin board the number of days work it is necessary for the union to purchase for unemployed members in that chapel. Then all regulars who wish to sell a day's work draw to see which ones sell. The lucky regulars then get a day of leisure for which they receive two-thirds pay. The unemployed members work in their stead and receive full pay.

This plan enables the unemployed to receive more pay each week than if they drew benefits direct from the union, and makes the burden lighter on the regularly employed members, because of the fact that they will receive two-thirds pay from the union when they give a day's work to an unemployed member under this plan.

Bakers' Union Offers to Make Bread for Needy

Volunteers to Co-operate in Effective Use of Farm Board Wheat to Relieve Hunger Among Unemployed.

Washington, March 30.—The Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International union, in a telegram to President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, has offered the services of its members in making bread from federal farm board wheat for the country's needy.

The telegram, signed by Charles F. Hohmann, secretary of the international union, and the other officers, said:

"With reference to the legislation passed by congress directing the United States farm board to distribute forty million bushels of surplus wheat among the needy unemployed and, as we understand, it is provided in this legislation that this distribution be in the form of bread, therefore the Bakers' International union offers theirs and their local unions' services in effectively and practically carrying out free of cost this legislation and will use our influence with our union employers accordingly. We authorize and request you to transmit this information to the properly constituted authorities, the United States farm board and the Red Cross."

Mr. Green announced that the offer of the organized bakers was promptly transmitted to the representatives of the farm board and the American Red Cross.

ALIENS ROUNDED UP AND PICKETS JAILED IN OUTLAW COAL STRIKE

Wilkes-Barre, Pa. — Pennsylvania police started a round-up of aliens whom they charge with inciting violence and stoning workers in the insurgent strike in the anthracite region.

The strikers broke away from the authority of the United Mine Workers of America and struck in defiance of the district officials of the union. Their major demand is the equalization of work.

Martin F. Brennan, of Shamokin, president of District 9, United Mine Workers, denounced the strike as illegal and appealed to the men to return to work. "As sure as the sun will set, the insurgent movement is bound to fail," he told them in a statement.

At Jessup the authorities sent eleven insurgent pickets to jail for ten days. They were charged with stoning miners on their way to the Underwood collieries.

HOLDS SCHOOLS SHOW FAILURE IN ESSENTIALS

O'Guin Declares System Needs Revision.

TOO MANY BOOKS HANDICAPS TRAINING

Modern Education Fails of Purpose to Develop Better Citizens.

By W. W. O'GUIN

Recently thirty-one seniors at Knoxville High school were asked when and where George Washington was born, and not one answered correctly.

Four frankly stated, "I don't know." One said he was "born at home." Another said he was born in 1775, the year he took command of the revolutionary forces. Only one told where he was born, and even that one did not attempt to give the date of his birth.

A class of eighty-eight in an eastern school was reported to have "flunked" completely on this question.

As an old-fashioned school teacher who taught when teachers did not have anything else to do but teach, and children did not have anything to do but study, I have for a long time believed our present system of education was falling short in fundamentals.

These reports of the lack of information of our present-day high school seniors is but a confirmation of the views I have held, in common with thousands of others, that our teachers and our pupils are required to cover entirely too much territory at one and the same time.

The failure of these particular students is no reflection upon these particular high schools. No doubt Chattanooga and Hamilton county could do no better. When a 10-year-old child has so many books to carry to school that he needs a truck or a wheelbarrow to carry them, it is little wonder that he fails to grasp the fundamentals, and but little if anything else.

Teachers are not at fault. They are doing the best they can. No teacher can cram so great a variety of facts into the head of a young child at one time as is now required by our educational authorities. In fact, the teacher has thousands of things to do these days that were not required of her twenty-five years ago.

A few months ago, a university professor, commenting upon the failure of university students to acquire much information during their college days, said the great trouble was in the high schools, which send students to the universities without any foundation upon which to build an education.

A few years ago I attended a meeting of the Nashville city board of education, as the representative of a Nashville newspaper, and I heard the superintendent of the city schools, in an address before the board, declare that "teaching has become a lost art. The teacher has so much to do besides teach that she has no time left for teaching," he told the board.

Noticing that I was taking notes of what he said he asked that I refrain from publishing his statements. When he started again I began noting again, and he courteously told me that if I did not stop it, he would have to ask me to leave the meeting. I stopped but went to him after the meeting and begged him to let me quote him in my news story. He steadfastly refused, declaring it would place his job in jeopardy.

I have always thought of him as an efficient superintendent lacking only in courage. Since that time he has lost his job, too.

Why, under our present system, before a girl can go out into a farming section and teach an elementary school she must be able to pass an examination in vocal music, but she need not know a solitary thing about agriculture. This always seemed a bit unusual to me as well as all out of joint.

For several years I have had occasion to associate with young college men and have found them woefully lacking in the information essential to their business. Most of them could

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter IV
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part X

II. Jesus' Social Opportunism.

It is a fact that one's life today is largely lived according to program. In a casual way we call our manner of living "civilization," implying an advance over life's antecedent stages of the past centuries, but if we were a little more exact in expressing ourselves we would say, or rather admit, that life today is what we have permitted it to become, for any "civilization" is just what men themselves make it.

WM. L. MOSS

If we have allowed life today to become systematized and institutionalized, thereby externalizing human relationships, and through these methods of living we as human beings have lost much of our former spirituality and feeling, then are we not justified in asking, with reference to our manner of living, "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" In other words, can we with justice expect anything else than loss of both spirituality and sacrificial love if we allow our lives to be guided and controlled by those very elements which, mankind's history itself presenting the most convincing illustrations, inevitably produce such regrettable fruits? Honesty compels us to admit we cannot anything else.

"But the world was what it is before I was born," someone says. "I am not responsible for its present civilization. I must either get in step with civilization or be trampled underfoot by its onward march of progress." On this point Jesus has no direction to give, no criticism to offer, but in another sphere of man's life He makes things clear for us, for He speaks plainly concerning our inward [illegible]. He approaches, then, the social question from within and deals not with institutions or systems, but with individuals. No matter what a man's environment, Jesus would awaken his desire for the higher life. He was right, for within the problem of better social conditions lies always the problem of the better man. Herbert Spencer once said, "There is no political alchemy by which you can get golden conduct out of leaden instincts." Applying all this to what has been said above in this article, we learn that, since every civilization is created by the human beings who live it, as individuals we must not hope our civilization will become better unless we as individuals each contribute his part toward making it better. "Cleanse first," said our Teacher, "the inside of the cup . . ." That a man's first social opportunity is a personal one.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—In what state was the United Mine Workers of America organized?

A.—In Ohio. The union was formed at Columbus, Jan. 25, 1890.

Q.—Who was the first president of Typographical Union No. 6 of New York City?

A.—Horace Greeley, famous editor and newspaper publisher.

Q.—Has organized labor indorsed the development of waterways?

A.—Yes. The 1909 American Federation of Labor convention indorsed proposed deep waterways projects and asked congress to appropriate money for their construction. Similar declarations have been made since then.

Five hundred coin-operated radios have been installed in a big Chicago hotel. Guests have their choice of stations and a maximum volume setting prevents annoyance. The instruments have been installed on a percentage basis, at no cost to the hotel.

Something to Think About

Throughout the land the mode of living is being changed for great numbers of men, women and children.

Unemployment is doing something tragic to our people.

The current issue of the American Federationist paints a graphic picture of this change. Every trade unionist will want to read it and a lot of bankers, stock brokers, Morgans, Rockefellers and others OUGHT to, but probably will not read it.

Turn to the back pages, buried among advertisements, where the field reports are to be found.

Read the things that come in from the field—what organizers and other observers write.

Here, in these records, is one of the most biting reports yet written of the damnable effects of unemployment.

Here is a story that tells more than professors and "experts" can tell. These reporters ARE the genuine experts. They SEE what is happening.

* * * *

Standing out like deep gloom spots are the reports of evictions and losses of homes by foreclosure.

Families that have saved for years cannot make their payments and the homes go under the hammer.

Doubling up of families is reported from city after city. Three, four and more families, piled together in houses too small for one.

A mill town reports families grouping around one family in which there is the possessor of a mill job. Only families containing a mill employe can have a house. That house becomes a refuge.

A southern town reports white families moving into Negro sections.

Town after town reports community chests broke or inadequate.

Down, down, down the scale these thousands go, planting their tired feet ever nearer the bottom.

* * * *

Many, thus driven down, will never get back up. No wave of so-called prosperity will ever lift them again. One reason is that there will never again be the jobs and another is that they will have lost too much of the courage necessary to fight their way back.

Civilization, as we have it, is for those who can fight upward. It was not made for those who have lost heart and courage.

Men and women are being unfitted to live in the environment that has punished them.

The statisticians don't tell us about these things. They tell of human units, but not of human beings.

An organizer writes: "My neighbor is being forced to lose his home."

Another writes: "Workers are moving into less desirable districts, the trend being toward the slum districts."

* * * *

Humanity is the one prime asset of a nation. The nation is losing that asset—FAST.

We have never had a peasantry or proletariat, as Europe has known those classes. We have never had that loss of spirit and self-confidence and self-respect that moves a democratic and free people to dig in and fight against adversity. This depression is sinking thousands beyond the recovery point. THAT, Messrs. Bankers, Politicians and Co., is something to think about.

Brandeis Calls the Turn

It is by no means necessary to agree with the recommendations of Mr. Justice Brandeis in order to agree with his striking declarations of last week that the present order of things is in a terrible state of disorder and inefficiency.

Brandeis spoke out, in the course of a court decision, pointing to the conflict between law and natural development, bitterly slashing away at the social injustice of our time and declaring that perhaps more regulation of corporate conduct is required.

Great wealth and corporate power have wrought enormous abuses. The learned justice leveled his arraignment well and labor will agree. It will agree also that there is danger unless there is remedy. That the remedy must be more Government regulation is not so clear.

However, if enough are convinced that there are wrongs that demand rectification the chances are that in the end America will find the right remedy.

Congress and Unemployment Relief

The failure of Congress to provide relief for the nation-wide distress caused by the refusal of employers to employ around eight million working men and women was strongly condemned by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in a radio address from Washington on the unemployment situation.

"All classes of people have been hoping," Mr. Green said, "that the economic condition would improve and that the number of unemployed would be substantially reduced.

"This mental attitude was fostered and encouraged through the belief that when Congress met something substantial would be done to relieve human suffering and to create work opportunities.

"They believed that Congress, with a full sense of appreciation of the seriousness of the situation, would appropriate funds for relief purposes and launch a wide and comprehensive public works program which would provide work, directly and indirectly, for millions of people.

"In fact, it was this hope and belief which influenced many people to appeal for a special session of Congress last summer.

"The attitude of Congress toward the distressing economic condition which so seriously affects the entire nation has been most disappointing.

"Notwithstanding the inability of local and State relief agencies to supply adequate relief to those who are in dire need, Congress has failed to supplement their efforts through the appropriation of relief funds or through the origination and extension of a public works policy.

"The refusal of Congress to pass the Costigan-La Follette measure, which provided for an appropriation of three hundred and seventy-five million dollars to be used for relief purposes in the different States and communities where suffering is intense because of unemployment, was a bitter disappointment to the masses of the people.

"When men, women and children are hungry because wage earners are denied an opportunity to earn a living, they cry for food.

"Under such stress they cannot be convinced that they should go hungry merely because it is alleged that Federal funds cannot and should not be appropriated to buy food with which to feed them.

"The hungry cannot draw the fine line of distinction between the alleged duties and obligations of the communities, the States and the Nation.

"There is just one course to pursue in waging a successful war against unemployment at this time.

"Relief must be supplied for the purpose of meeting the requirements of an acute situation and work opportunities must be created so that those who are able and willing to work may be privileged to do so.

"We know full well that it becomes the duty of society to relieve distress, to supply food to the hungry, and to thus protect our social order so that the democratic institutions of Government may remain perpetuated and secure."

A Pied Piper to Lead Jobless

A "rat killing time" is no longer a figure of speech in Little Rock, Ark. In fact it has become a means of giving a number of unemployed men jobs.

Every building owner in the city has been requested by the War Against Depression, United Action for Employment Committee, to give orders for rat extermination in their buildings.

A Pied Piper in the person of Merlin Moore, from Pine Bluff, was engaged, and orders from any one wanting to get rid of rats, mice and roaches on their premises will be solicited. The work must have expert supervision, but those making up the various crews of exterminators may be anybody who hasn't a job and wants to work. Mayor Knowlton named March 16 as "rat and mouse" day. The American Legion, American Federation of Labor, and other allied organizations in the campaign to find a million jobs for a million workers do not draw the line on the jobs; what they want is action, and they appear to be getting it in Little Rock.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Each succeeding depression swings down deeper. There is a limit to the tensile strength of all things, including societies and governments.

How far down can depressions go without becoming collapse?

If that could be foreseen it would be almost possible to measure within a year the hour of collapse, unless control is developed and exercised through an organized, disciplined human race in industry.

Let the savants, the doctors of philosophy and the professional economists analyze that and see what they can do to it—or about it.

Surely there is an herculean task ahead for labor, for trade unionism.

A task also for everyone else. For full success in this business of governing industrial progress and continuity requires organized human machinery in every sphere of industrial usefulness.

The great burden is upon labor, because labor sees the way.

But all others have their grave responsibilities.

If they will not help, at least let them have the good grace and the far-visioned patriotism not to get in the way.

For if collapse does come, the whole works will crash!

If all communities did as well as organized labor in raising relief funds, there would be far less distress and misery than now exists. Take, as one example, the relief work of Typographical Union No. 6, New York City.

With 11,000 members, No. 6 has donated more than $3,000,000 for its unemployed in eighteen months. Relief began in July, 1930, and has been maintained ever since, the union just having voted to continue it. In comparison with the $18,000,000 raised by New York City's emergency unemployment relief committee in the entire city, with its millions of inhabitants, the contribution of "Big Six" is an outstanding achievement.

It has become increasingly evident that President Hoover's plan of maintaining prosperity by keeping wages up has been thrown to the winds by the industrial concerns of large proportions operating nonunion establishments. It is plain basic industries are proceeding upon the theory that the payment of dividends is the most important thing and that whatever happens to labor is no concern of theirs.

The inevitable consequences of that course of thought and action are to further reduce purchasing power of the masses of the people of this country so that their entire income will be devoted to absolute necessities and eliminate the purchase of those things which make for an improved standard of living and leisure in which to enjoy it.—The Typographical Journal.

Drastic legislation proposed in congress ostensibly designed to curb communist activities is dangerous. Such proposed legislation menaces fundamental constitutional rights. There are plenty of laws now to deal with violence or conspiracies against the government.

The influence of every intelligent citizen should be set against any effort to force American thinking and American political activity into rigid channels. Every such effort is anti-democratic and subversive of American principles and institutions. The rights of individuals and minorities to think, speak, print, assemble and vote as they please must be safeguarded, so long as the exercise of these rights does not break the peace of the community. Otherwise society falls into an intolerant stagnation, and all hope of progress is at an end.

WORK FOR JOBLESS MILLIONS IS THE MOST IMPORTANT THING

McGrady Tells Senate Committee That Creating Work for Our Eight Million Unemployed Is More Important Than Balancing the Budget—Gives A. F. of L. Support to La Follette Public Works Bill

Washington, March 23.—The most important thing for the congress of the United States to do is to provide work for the eight million unemployed in order that they may live in decency and comfort.

Balancing the budget is a secondary matter.

These were the emphatic statements of Edward F. McGrady, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, to the senate subcommittee on education and labor, in giving the full support of the federation to the La Follette bill to provide for an administration of public works, to expand the public works plan, and to authorize a $5,500,000,000 bond issue to finance the projects.

Cost of Unemployment.

"The principal criticism we have heard of this bill," Mr. McGrady testified, "is its cost. Our answer to that is that the cost of unemployment will far exceed eventually the cost of creating employment.

"We have notified the leaders in our government that already the serious human consequences of unemployment are apparent in American families. There is loss of courage, bitterness, disrespect for law, desperation. These will last long after the depression.

Unemployment Figures.

"We do not see any improvement up to the first of this month in spite of the program adopted by the present congress. Our survey gathered from 29,000 points in the country during February shows in all skilled trades 21 per cent unemployed and 20 per cent employed part time, in the building trades 63 per cent unemployed and 16 per cent unemployed and 24 per cent part time, and in the printing trades 18 per cent unemployed and 31 per cent part time."

Mr. McGrady presented the following comparative figures on unemployment in these trades for the last three years during the month of February:

	Per Cent
	1930	1931	1932
All trades (unemployed)	22	27	31
Building trades	43	52	63
Metal trades	18	29	37
Printing trades	5	10	18

"We don't look for any marked increase in employment for 1932 or 1933," Mr. McGrady told the committee. "We predict that we will have just as much suffering next winter as we have had the past winter, unless the federal government will take the initiative to create work for the people."

Recommends Home Building Loans.

The witness especially commended the provision in the La Follette bill to loan $100,000,000 to limited-dividend corporations for construction of houses.

"There are 12,000,000 families in the United States today," he said, "that are housed little better than animals. There are millions of houses in which there is no running water, no heat, no gas, no electricity. This is largely true in the agricultural areas, particularly in the southern states." He described such housing provisions as "money well spent," which would "draw great dividends."

Balancing the Budget.

"We are not afraid that the government will be unable to balance its budget," continued Mr. McGrady. "We have little patience with the propaganda in the press and in congress that the outstanding thing for the present congress to do is to balance the budget. We maintain that the outstanding thing is to provide work for human beings in order that they may live in decency and health and comfort.

Why the 10-Hour Day Now?

It is evident that too many employers are taking advantage of the acute needs of men and women and are forcing them to return to the archaic 10 and 12-hour work-day. Every employer who does that is adding to depression, not easing it. There ought to be some kind of social stigma attaching to conduct that increases human burdens at a time when the whole nation cries for relief.

Memorial Offers Musical Success

Famous Comedian Comes With Company of 75 Artists.

MISS PAULA STONE

Probably the most beloved man in the American theater, and the peer of any current comedian, Fred Stone, with his tricks and his clowning, his grotesque dances and his hilarious songs, will come to the Memorial auditorium on Tuesday, April 5, in his latest and biggest musical comedy, "Smiling Faces." This is far and away the most sumptuous extravaganza in which Mr. Stone has ever appeared, both as to the colorful, elaborate settings, and in richly opulent costuming.

Further, Mr. Stone is surrounded with the most excellent array of supporting artists, not only that has ever appeared with him, but that has been gathered in one show in many seasons. First and foremost in his support is his engaging daughter, Paula Stone, whom audiences took instantly to their hearts when she made her debut with her father in "Ripples" a couple of seasons ago.

Then there are the nimble-footed singing comedian, Roy Royston; the vivacious Viennese soubrietto, Lotti Loder, and the captivatingly droll Billy Taylor. The alluring evolutions of the Albertina Rasch dancers are another great feature of the production, as well as the singing and dancing ensemble of seventy-five, which includes a host of Broadway's prettiest and most fleet-footed show-girls and dancers.

Not only does "Smiling Faces" boast of a consistent and interesting story, but there is ample opportunity for Mr. Stone to display a whole new bagful of his typical startling stunts and tricks. There are many musical numbers—an even score, in fact—and many delightful dance numbers, in many of which Mr. Stone and Paula participate.

f you should happen to drop into Times composing room some et and see a mad scramble around man holding a hat in his hand, think someone is passing out a ful of cigars or taking up a collection. It will merely be the regulars drawing to see which ones will get a night off with part pay. The regulars are very enthusiastic about the new plan of the union for taking care of the unemployed members.

Some free lance photographer came up the other night and took a group picture of the men. He came back the next night with the proof to take orders for copies of the picture, but I don't think he had much luck. Maybe if he would give a drink with each picture he would sell more.

"If I got constipated, I would get dizzy and have swimming in my head. I would have very severe headache.

"For a while I thought I wouldn't take anything—maybe I could wear out the headaches; but I found they were wearing me out.

"I found Black-Draught would relieve this, so when I have the very first symptoms, I take Black-Draught and now I don't have the headache.

"I am a firm believer in Black-Draught, and after using it 20 or more years, I am satisfied to continue its use."

SENATOR HEBERT KNOCKS UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Washington.—A system of federal unemployment insurance would be "impractical if not unthinkable," Senator Hebert, of Rhode Island, chairman of the special senate committee on unemployment insurance, said in a radio address.

In the place of unemployment insurance he suggested reserves by employers, with voluntary contributions by employes, the entire amount to be placed in a trust fund set up individually for each employe.

HOOVER PROCLAIMS MAY 1 NATIONAL CHILD HEALTH DAY

Washington.—President Hoover proclaimed May day, 1932, as Child Health day and invited all welfare organizations to unite in suitable observances to "awaken the people of the nation to the fundamental necessity of unremitting effort for the development of the health of the nation's children."

The other morning, sitting in my office, I heard someone coming down the hall singing, "You Can Put Rocks in My Shoes, But You Can't Stop Me from Lovin' You." Well, it got to my door and in popped one Ira Patten. He just kept on singing, and after so long a time took a dollar out of his pocket, smiled, looked at the dollar and the song broke out afresh.

The smile that bubbles from the heart, that loves its fellow-man, will drive away the clouds of gloom and coax the sun again. It's full of worth and goodness, too, with manly kindness blent. It's worth a million dollars and doesn't cost a cent."

NO FEDERAL LOANS FOR BUSINESS RANK AND FILE

Vast Corporate Interests Benefit from Federal Funds But Little Fellows Get No Aid—Big Banks Fear Open Hearings on Federal Reserve System Reorganization Bill.

Washington, March 23.—Few periods have produced such dramatic moments in the economic and financial fortunes of the American people as are to be observed in Washington at this time.

Measures of far-reaching consequence, involving new precedents, are under consideration, with the legislative and administrative branches of the government in a state of turmoil, and, in many respects, of uncertainty.

The administration is seeking to lean toward inflation, at least enough to overcome the effects of drastic deflation. Difficulty is being faced in marketing government securities. The understanding is that large banking interests have served notice on the government that it must balance its budget with higher taxes before they will assist in marketing additional securities.

Under the concentrated attack of a group of members of both parties in the house, the manufacturers' sales tax bill has been subjected to drastic and sweeping changes. Surtaxes on incomes have been raised to practically the war-time level, with a maximum of 65 per cent on net incomes of $4,000,000 or more.

Other increases made in the bill are expected to increase the total revenue from this source by $200,000,000 above the provisions when the bill was introduced.

These increases are preliminary to a concerted assault upon the sales tax, which as originally proposed, was intended to raise $595,000,000 of the entire $1,096,000,000 in new revenue sought in the Crisp bill. The present indications are that the bill will not be disposed of by congress for some time, possibly not before midsummer.

The expected drop in income tax returns on March 15 was more than realized by the treasury. The receipts for the fiscal year, when the full returns are tabulated, will probably be about $1,000,000,000, compcompared with $1,860,000,000 last year, and $2,411,000,000 in the year before. This is a decline of about 60 per cent in two years.

A veritable storm is gathering over the head of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, with division of opinion within its own ranks, and the president is trying to act as a mediator. Most of the loans made so far have been to vast corporate interests. Some banks have been relieved, but little has been done to restore to communities any part of the more than $4,500,000,000 that has been carried down as deposits in bank crashes.

Financing financiers will not restore prosperity, it is pointed out, nor will it prevent other banks from going to the wall. The understanding about the corporation when it was launched was that it would assist the rank and file of business and industry to easier credit and getting men and women back to work.

So far at the head of the line of borrowers has been the great railroad corporations, and usually going away with a handsome slice of funds. The railroads are making little effort to rely upon self-help.

This corporation has two billion dollars at its disposal now and no informed person believes that this sum will be more than one-third adequate in providing for demands which it must eventually meet if any material progress is made in accomplishing its mission.

The bill of Senator Glass, of Virginia, to effect a reorganization of the federal reserve structure, is also in the doldrums. Demands from bankers to be heard on the bill have poured in from all over the country. Large banks fear, however, that open hearings may develop a flood of complaints from little banks, and stories of how they have been squeezed to the wall with a further "deflationary" movement in business and industry as a result.

The country in its present weakened condition, is is claimed, could not withstand the shock of the revelations in the offing.

Ravages of unemployment, with reduced standards of living, continue at an unduly high level, with suffering and privation generally on the increase. Distress calls upon charitable agencies are unprecedented, and apparently greater in volume than at any time in the last half century.

FEDERAL REGULATION DECLARED ONLY HOPE FOR COAL INDUSTRY

Miners and Operators, Advocating Davis-Kelly Bill, Tell Senate Subcommittee Government Control Is Sole Method by Which Coal Business Can Be Saved from Utter Ruin.

Washington, March 30.—Federal legislation for regulation of the bituminous coal industry is the only method by which the coal business can be stabilized and saved from utter ruin.

This was the statement made not only by representatives of the United Mine Workers of America, but by prominent coal operators to the subcomittee of the senate committee on mines and mining which is holding hearings on the Davis-Kelly coal regulation bill.

The Davis-Kelly bill proposes to establish a system under which all corporations that mine or ship coal in interstate commerce shall be required to take out a federal license. Under such license such companies could then organize selling pools, and regulate and limit production to correspond with demand. Cut-throat competition among coal companies, which has been and still is one of the major evils of the coal business, would thus be elimniated.

Miners' Rights Recognized.

The bill also would give miners the right to organize and bargain collectively with their employers through representatives of their own choosing. Coal companies taking out a license would be prohibited from discharging an employe for joining the union.

Howard Showalter and John H. Hatfield, large West Virginia operators, told the subcommittee they favor the passage of the Davis-Kelly bill, because it affords the only possible remedy to save the sick industry. J. B. Hosford, head of a large coal company in the Pittsburgh field, made a similar statement. He said nothing except government regulation would do any good.

"What is the lowest wage that is being paid to coal miners in the Pittsburgh field?" Hosford was asked.

"I have heard of men who get as little as a dollar a day," was his amazing answer.

Green Urges Bill.

In a strong plea for the bill, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, told the subcommittee that conditions among the miners "are not living—just existing."

"More children are starving among mining communities than anywhere in the country as a result of present economic conditions and destructive competition in the industry," he said.

Edmond D. Campbell, Washington attorney, testified that congress can constitutionally regulate coal corpotions operating in interstate commerce. Campbell, who investigated constitutional phases of proposed federal regulation of the coal industry for the John Hays Hammond commission in 1923, said that the Davis-Kelly bill is entirely constitutional under decisions of the United States supreme court.

Henry Warrum, Indianapolis, counsel for the United Mine Workers, supported Campbell's contention and indorsed the bill on behalf of organized labor.

Bill's Foes Seek Delay.

Non-union coal companies, represented by the National Coal association, are endeavoring to delay all action on the bill, because they know if it can be brought to a vote it will quickly be passed by both senate and house.

Some time ago a college boy, born and reared in Hamilton county, asked me what is the county seat of Rhea county.

Is there not something wrong with the system that turns out this sort of product? The only excuse for public education is that it makes better citizens. If it is failing in this then there is no reason for it. Does the development of atheists make better citizens? If so, in what way?

In my judgment it is time the masses were demanding that our educational system be revised so that the training given will more aptly fit the student for the battle of life.

MORE ABOUT FORBES' SPEECH

the Boston tea party or the French who stormed the bastille, because they were told to go and eat grass.

The Russians, who so completely exterminated the royal family only a few years ago, were a very patient people, inclined to be meek and mild and supposed to have been under perfect control. The hunger urge is something that cannot be restrained by social laws and the temperament of the American people, once they have lost control of their better selves, would make a Commanche Indian look like a Sunday school teacher.

The principles and progress of organized labor have justified its existence; most of the humane legislation that is on our statute books today was passed either at the request or with help of organized labor. The free schools, free textbooks, child labor law, workmen's compensation law, safety device law and many others are the results of our efforts.

But as to our future program: We believe that human rights are greater than property rights, we do not believe that the multitude should be enslaved and starved that a few might prosper. We believe that a business that wants to pay big dividends to stockholders and high salaries to officers and not pay a living wage to the workers is a menace to humanity and cannot justify its existence. And by a living wage we mean a just wage, one with which a man can support and educate a family. Another principle is security of employment, a so-called living wage is miscalled if the employer is free to lay off the workers and thus have them carry the burden and the sacrifice when a depression sets in.

The practice of dismissing employes in order to cut down expenses and costs while dividends to stockholders and salaries to officers are not disturbed is also unfair. If the business of this country, and by business I mean both employer and the employe, had created a fund out of their earnings to be used in an emergency like we have now, instead of paying enormous dividends to stockholders and million-dollar bonuses to their executives and spending wages needlessly and extravagantly, old man depression would only be a transient instead of a regular boarder. There is no more justification for the continued existence of a business that cannot carry its normal working force in time of depression than for one that cannot pay a living wage.

The red menace is a matter that bothers the minds of organized labor less probably than any other group. However, we are despised and feared more by it than any other of the American organizations. They could not hope to recruit members from the bankers association or the chamber of commerce, but they did hope to disorganize and recruit to their own cause the members of the American Federation of Labor. The seed of the Russian red movement was planted in American soil by the reds, but it is being fertilized by the oppression of the workers by big business; the depression was the sunshine and rain that made it take root and sprout, but the American labor movement was just the boll weevil to them. If labor in this country had not been well organized, with wise men like William Green and Frank Morrison at the head, the red movement would be a matter for the army to cope with, instead of just being a problem for a few policemen.

government, in addition to the many thousands of federal employes, are commensurate with the services rendered by them, and yet if congress imposes a reduction in the salaries of government employes practically all of those just enumerated will be compelled to endure further personal sacrifice in serving the government of the United States.

"One of the most stabilizing influences in this distressing period of our history has been the fact that the government has steadfastly maintained wage standards wherever possible. If, after three years of economic distress, this policy is abandoned and reductions in wages and salaries are forced by the government upon its employes it will have a most demoralizing effect both upon the economic situation and upon the efforts which are being put forth to prevent reductions in wages in private industry.

"Labor has exercised great patience and endurance during the most trying period in the economic life of the nation. It has strongly opposed wage reductions in private industry. In localities where lower wage standards have been forced social discontent is manifested in no uncertain way. A reduction in the salaries of the employes of the government forced upon them by action of congress would greatly inflame the minds of labor and its friends and thus an intensified state of social unrest and social discontent would prevail.

"Some leaders of congress have admitted that practically no financial benefit would accrue to the government through the imposition of a reduction in the salaries of government employes. It has been asserted by some that a reduction in wages should be imposed because of its psychological effect. Surely this is not a good and sufficient reason for the imposition of a horizontal reduction in the salaries of thousands of government employes. The real psychological effect would be to influence employers in private industry to further reduce wages.

"The officers and members of the American Federation of Labor are appealing to the members of congress to exercise sound and sober judgment at this critical period in the economic life of the nation. We are asking them to oppose actively and sincerely all attempts which may be made to impose a reduction in the salaries of the government's faithful and efficient workers."

Silk Union Plans To Press Drive For Stabilization

New Organization to Demand Regulated Hours of Work as First Step in Big Campaign for Better Conditions.

Allentown, Pa., April 20.—The newly organized American Federation of Silk Workers, affiliated with the United Textile Workers of America, is to undertake at once a campaign to stabilize conditions in the principal eastern silk textile manufacturing centers.

Mass meetings will be held in all silk centers to develop public pressure for a demand for regulated hours of operation in silk textile manufacturing establishments as one step in the stabilization campaign.

This program was adopted at the second meeting of the American Federation of Silk Workers held here. Election of officers and the adoption of plans for an intensive organization drive for unemployment insurance were other features of the meeting.

Arthur McDonnell, veteran representative of the United Textile Workers, presided at this meeting which was opened with the reading of an outline for future activities recommended by the Associated Silk Workers' joint board of Paterson which had been requested to present these proposals.

Allentown Called to Lead.

Sixty delegates representing unions from Paterson and Phillipsburg, N. J., West New York, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Easton, Stroudsburg, Allentown, Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, Pa., enthusiastically applauded Clarence Moster, of the Allentown Central Labor union, who called upon the Allentown Silk Workers to lead the fight in the silk industry for better conditions.

Moser pointed out that, during the period 1920 to 1930, although improved machinery was increased by 50 per cent and profits increased by 91 per cent, wages to workers increased only 16 per cent because of lack of strong labor unions.

Carpenters Call State Meeting

L. E. Smith, president, and W. E. Cheek, secretary-treasurer, of the Tennessee state council of carpenters, have issued the call for the thirteenth annual convention of this organization, to be held in Nashville on April 28 and 29.

After a busy session of two days the delegates will again assemble on Monday morning and will represent their local unions in the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

PREVAILING WAGE INDORSED.

All candidates for mayor and city commissioners of Cedar Rapids, Ia., declared themselves in favor of the prevailing wage rate and employment of home labor on city contracts.

FIVE-CENT MEALS PROVIDED FOR JOBLESS IN MONTREAL

The "Folks" Kitchen, of Montreal, Can., established by Harry Hershman and operated by the People's relief organization for the unemployed, has furnished over 30,000 meals to the hungry jobless during the last four months. A minimum charge of 5 cents is made for meals, in order that those who dislike the thought of charity may feel that they are paying for what they get. In addition, hundreds who cannot even afford the 5 cents are fed free. A number of Montreal labor unions have indorsed the project and generous contributions for additional funds to save hundreds of jobless from starvation.

IDLE RELIEF IN WYOMING.

The trades assembly of Casper, Wyo., voted to continue for thirty days their unemployment relief plan of furnishing sleeping accommodations to the jobless. Since the assembly started this work last fall more than 1,150 nights lodging have been given to the homeless. It is not believed that the unemployment situation will improve much this year. Consequently the cots will be stored for use again in the fall. Very few union men have applied for this help, over 90 per cent of the cots furnished having been to unorganized workers.

ONE WEEK'S WORK PER MONTH FOR IDLE OF HIBBING, MINN.

The village council of Hibbing, Minn., decided to provide one week's work a month for the unemployed. It is called the "week-a-month" labor plan.

"Hibbing has never been faced with an unemployment situation similar to the one existing at this time," says the St. Louis County Independent. "Hundreds of men, who under normal conditions have never appealed to the village for work, are now applying not only to the employment office, but to individual members of the council to give them at least two weeks so that they will be able to get by until things open up around the mines or other summer employment presents itself."

ROTATION OF WORK RECOMMENDED FOR LOS ANGELES CITY EMPLOYES

Los Angeles, Cal.—The city government of Los Angeles has laid off over 300 employes this year. Expressing its belief that the emergency should be met by reduction in working hours instead of lay-offs, the Los Angeles local of the Technical Engineers' and Draftsmen's union urged that the salary ordinance be amended to permit the re-employment of all dismissed city employes in their former positions on the basis of the eight-hour day and five-day week.

If either a shortage of funds or work should occur, the union's resolution said the working time should be reduced to whatever extent necessary to keep all the employes at work with a proportionate reduction in salary but no reduction in the daily rate of pay.

The resolution was approved by the Los Angeles Central Labor council.

HERE'S A TALE ABOUT A SNARK IN KENTUCKY

Writer Pillories Cumberland "Justice."

REVIEWS INCIDENT IN HARLAN COUNTY

Literary Masterpiece Chides State's Attorney for Buffoonery.

Ever meet a snark?
What? Never even heard of one?
Well, here's a perfect description.

Mr. John Wiltbye, writing in "America," a religious weekly, reviews the hippodrome perpetrated recently by public officials in Harlan and Bell counties, Kentucky, when a group of students took it upon themselves to investigate conditions among the miners of that benighted community, and straightway ran into the law in all its majesty as practiced in the Cumberlands, and were "shooed" away from the state with pompous ceremony.

Mr. Wiltbye's description of the circus—or tragedy, according to the viewpoint—constitutes, in the opinion of The Labor World, one of the most scintillating and effective gems of sarcasm which it has ever been our pleasure to read, and it is passed on to our readers for their enjoyment and edification:

When Daniel Boone went over the mountains and first gazed upon the delectable country of Kentucky, my native commonwealth, he had nothing worse to fear than "bars" and cats and Indians. No troll lay in wait to trip, no poltergeist disturbed his dreams, and communists had not been so much as heard of. But the scene has changed since Daniel made that gap in the Cumberlands a gateway for the pioneers who poured in from Virginia and the Carolinas. Today if you would travel Boone's path into the old commonwealth, you need a passport, and not a little red booklet from Washington either, but a document that will survive the scrutiny of a snark.

Now a snark, as all the world knows, is a most unpleasant companion, even on a sunny day. Its taste, the poet sings, is meager and hollow, but crisp, and it rejoices in a most ambitious nature; which last I take to mean that it has a weakness for its name in headlines on the first page of the newspaper. Of course, there are many different sorts of snarks, all undesirable, such as those which have feathers and bite, and others which have whiskers and scratch; but the infallible mark by which your true snark is distinguished from the bogus, is that which is most commonly, but, as I think, incorrectly, designated as the Third.

The Third is its slowness in taking a jest,
Should you happen to venture on one,
It will sigh like a thing that is deeply distressed,
And it always looks grave at a pun.

The growth of snarks has been most marked, I regret to say, ever since Kentucky began to vote for republicans. In my day we bore with republicans as we did with any other affliction permitted by an all-wise Providence, but we herded them, as far as possible, in the mountains, where they shot up one another most effectively, with results that to a normal democrat were positively gratifying. Meanwhile as was fitting, the democrats occupied all the offices, and drew all the salaries. They waxed fat and unwary, until one of them, Col. Richard W. Tate, the state treasurer, commonly known as "Honest Dick," walked off with every penny in the till, and never stopped until he got to Japan. That put something of a crimp in the party; while but a peccadillo, it was hard to explain; and in 1896, after 104 years in the Union, the old commonwealth grew petulant, and sat a republican in the governor's chair. Since that time, as any democrat can understand, snarks have burgeoned, particularly in the lush soil of the mountain districts. But the snarkiest snark of them all is Brother Walter B. Smith, attorney for the commonwealth, it appears, with headquarters at Middlesboro, in the county of Bell, adjacent to the county of Harlan.

That assertion will be affirmed by any of the young ladies and gentlemen who departed from the effete east, on Holy Thursday, bound via bus and two Fords, for Bell and Harlan counties. If ever a group went a hunting for a snark, it was this assemblage of college girls and boys. They found him, too, in the person of Brother Smith, standing vigilant guard in the Cumberlands—whereat, just as happens in the books, they softly and silently vanished away. But not so silently, after all.

It is difficult to tell any story in which a snark figures. Your wits tangle up, like a fly in a saucer of molasses. So let us take a fresh start. Why did these young ladies and gentlemen desert their college homes for a visit to Harlan and Bell counties, Kentucky?

Well, it appears that they are social-minded persons, and they desired above all else to find out why the miners and operators and the officials cannot live in peace and harmony while the coal is being dug out of the hills. Or was being dug out. So they decided to go down to Kentucky, and by interviewing all the parties concerned, amass an amount of information which might or might not be assessed, evaluated, tagged, and corrected to mean elevation and average humidity, at some later time. Leaving New York on Thursday, they calculated, wind and weather permitting, to get over the mountains, and begin their exhaustive investigations by Saturday noon.

By investigating hard all that afternoon, and beginning again on Sunday morning, these social-minded investigators (most of whom, probably, had never met a Kentuckian in situ in all their lives) felt that they could bring the intensive investigation of the troubles in the coal fields to a close by Sunday afternoon. We work fast these days. Then they would wearily climb into the old bus and the Fords, freighted with knowledge, wisdom and data—with data, at any rate—to trundle over the mountains back to Broadway.

It is difficult to see in this bunch of simpletons dire peril to the civilization that has struck deep root in the counties of Harlan and Bell. Being a snark, however, and therefore totally devoid of a sense of humor, Brother Smith reached a different conclusion. Wrapping himself in the old flag, he went out to guard the mountain passes. Presently the cough, the choke, the snort, the grind, of the ancient bus and the moribund Fords, fell on his vigilant ears. His senses had not deceived him! The Red army was at hand, and all the churches, schools, hearthstones, and civilization itself, of the counties of Harlan and Bell (originally christened Josh Bell county) trembled on their hitherto unassaulted bases.

A pause as the motors shifted their weary gears, but in a brief moment history can be made. Like the young Napoleon at Arcoli, Brother Smith bared his bosom—figuratively, I trust, since the morning air in the mountains is a trifle raw—and as there was no bridge at hand to be immortalized, advanced to the middle of the road. Quickly his henchmen followed him, the flower and chivalry of the counties of Bell and Harlan, and more quickly than my machine can tap out the tale, the academic invaders from the effete east were in the toils of the law. Huzzas made the welkin ring, and tears coursed down the bronzed cheeks of Brother Smith's shock troops, as they realized that all the churches, schools, hearthstones and civilization itself, no longer tottered in the counties of Harlan and Bell. Even the stills were safe.

"Who are you?" demanded Brother Smith, in firm, even in stentorian tones. "Do you believe in God? Have you any connection with the communists?" Or, at least, these are the winged words reported by the esteemed New York Herald-Tribune, on the day that followed the battle in the mountains.

Now, after a cramped night in a bus, this seemed a jarred and jangled welcome, somewhat out of tune with that hospitality for which Kentucky is noted in the guide books. The students retorted in words both winged and barbed, and as the tumult grew, Brother Smith decided to retire with his quarry to the courthouse. "Are we under arrest?" inquired a slow-witted student from Boeotia. "You are being investigated," was the snaky reply. I begin to think that some of these students, if not full-fledged snarks, were more than a bit snarkish.

When the curtain went up at the courthouse, the Hon. George E. Vanbeber was discerned, R., advancing, C., to the bench, and the investigation began. A student demanded his lawyer, naming John R. Neal, of Covington. Since Mr. Neal lives somewhere down in Tennessee, and not in Covington, there was point in the reply of the snark that it would take

Not Too Late to Start Campaign For Union Label, Manning Says

Washington, April 20.—It is not too late to start in the big April union label campaign, John J. Manning, secretary-treasurer of the Union Label Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, pointed out this week. The campaign is being conducted throughout the nation under the direction of the Union Label Trades Department.

"Success in any undertaking is accomplished by hard work," Mr. Manning told International Labor News Service. "Just sitting idly by waiting for something to happen or waiting for some one else to do something, will never bring success.

"What is true of one line of endeavor is equally true of another. To make a success of the April union label campaign, every trade unionist, every local union, every central body and every international union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor must act together and spend all union earned money for the products and services of brother trades unionists.

"There is a great opportunity during the period of the campaign to explain to those outside of the movement that the purpose of the campaign is to maintain union standards of living and wages. Many converts to the cause of union labeled merchandise and union services will be made when the campaign is made clear to them.

"It is not too late to start the campaign now. Those who are not actively engaged in the campaign are invited to start now. The Union Label Trades Department is ready and willing to do all possible to help all interested now or later. Free label literature can be secured by writing to 202 American Federation of Labor building, Washington, D. C.

"Deep appreciation is expressed to those who are co-operating in the campaign and doing all possible to relieve unemployment among trades unionists by means of their purchasing power."

Railroad Unions Ask Disapproval Of Merger Plan

Labor Urges Commerce Committee to Reject "Four-System" Proposal on Ground It Is Not in Public Interest.

Washington, April 20.—Disapproval of the "four-system plan" of consolidating eastern railroads was asked by the Railway Labor Executives' association, representing twenty-one railroad labor organizations, in a brief filed with the interstate commerce commission on April 16. The commission was asked to reject the plan on the ground that it is "not in the public interest."

The commission was asked to approve the plan by the Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio and Chesapeake & Ohio railroads, which are parties to the consolidation proposal. The New York Central, also a party to the plan, did not join in the brief.

The brief of the Railway Labor Executives' association was filed by Donald R. Richberg as counsel. The brief asked by the commission not to "commit itself" to any plan of consolidation that might adversely affect railroad workers and the communities on the railroads involved, by preclusion of future changes which might become necessary.

"We desire to make it entirely clear," the brief said, "that the employes of the railroads here involved are opposed to the four-system plan as a whole, on the ground that the proposed consolidations will not be in the public interest; and we earnestly request that the commission take no action upon the present recod which will in any way commit the commission to the approval of any consolidation of railroads which may be proposed in conformity with said plan."

It was declared that if the commission should give its approval in whole or in part to the carriers' plan so as to bring about modification of the commission's plan, "and such approval should carry with it the express reservation that the commission is not thereby committed to the approval of any consolidation as unification of railroad properties as proposed in the pending application; but that the commission, not having undertaken unification as outlined in the pending application is in the public interest, will be entirely free, upon the making of any application for unification of railway properties here involved either to disapprove of such application if it appears upon the evidence presented that such unification is not in the public interest, or to attach such terms and conditions upon such unification as in the judgment of the commission may be necessary to protect the public interest."

UNION POLITICAL ACTION IN UTAH

The Ogden, Utah, Trades and Labor assembly instructed T. E. Myers, secretary of the assembly, to urge every local union in the state to cooperate in forming a non-partisan political organization for the election of men and women to office who are favorable to the enactment and enforcement of legislation in the interest of labor and the common people.

UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE TO OPEN MONDAY

Outstanding Men on Week's Program.

OPEN DISCUSSIONS ON PUBLIC WEAL

Citizens Invited to Participate in Talks on Timely Topics.

An exceptional opportunity to hear addresses by outstanding national leaders of various types of thought will be offered in the Institute of Justice presented by the University of Chattanooga beginning Monday, April 25, and continuing throughout the week.

Dr. Alexander Guerry, president of the university, has secured acceptances of invitations to appear upon the program from such leaders as the following:

Patrick H. Callahan, Louisville, business executive and author; Charles Abram Elwood, sociologist, author and teacher; John Erskine, college professor, author, critic, composer; William H. Kiekhofer, college professor, author; Gordon Jennings Laing, educator, author; Frank J. Loesch, lawyer, author; Harley Leist Lutz, economist, teacher; William E. Mikell, author, professor of law; Roscoe Pound, university professor, author, and Norman Thomas, socialist, author.

Each and every one of the above men is a nationally known authority in his particular field, and the subjects selected are of general interest, particularly at this time. It is planned to have round-table discussions following the addresses, in which the public is invited to participate.

"The institute is a means by which the University of Chattanooga attempts to have an open discussion of social, economic and political matters affecting the public welfare," Dr. Guerry said. "There is no admission charge for the addresses or for the round-table conferences. The public is cordially invited. A limited number of reserve seats, however, will be sold for the evening addresses to those who wish definite reservation for the series of evening talks, which may be secured by communicating with S. F. Bretzke, comptroller of the university."

The institute opens Monday morning at 10:30, and will continue each morning and evening throughout the week.

The institute proved a most interesting and profitable move last year, and it is believed that, with the type of men on this year's program, even larger crowds will take advantage of the opportunities offered by the very commendable action on the part of the university authorities.

Park Barber Shop Newest Venture

The Park barber shop, located at 111 East Seventh street, is the newest business institution of this character for Chattanooga. But there is nothing "new" about the names of those who are connected with the enterprise.

John Harrison, one of the best known "boss barbers" in Chattanooga, is the proprietor, and associated with him are two others no less known, in the persons of C. E. Milliken and A. H. "Tommy" Thomas. The new shop is equipped in modern style, and Mr. Harrison reports business "is fine, thank you."

CARPENTERS REDUCE WAGES.

The carpenters' union of Birmingham, Ala., announced a reduction in its wage scale to 75 cents an hour for expert workers. Secretary H. E. Hagood stated the work done by members of the union is guaranteed, and that if the work is not satisfactory it will be done over again at the union's expense.

The Social Ideals of Jesus of Nazareth

An Interpretation

Written for The Labor World
By WILLIAM L. MOSS

Chapter IV
JESUS' TEACHING ANALYZED
Part XIII

II. Jesus' Social Opportunism.

The curse of modern social life is not its ownward sweep; this is only natural progress, and we cannot stay it, try as hard as we may. This becomes clear when we think of life as an immense clock which the Master Clock-maker has set in motion. We cannot control the unceasing clockwork movement of the larger mechanism of life, i. e., civilization, or the natural progress of mankind. But the smaller movements of social progress and decay, the restricted pendulum movements, so to speak, of life that go on within a narrow space of time from generation to generation are not beyond our control. Just as a clockmaker uses certain mechanical devices to keep the swing of the pendulum of a clock within definite limits in order that the timepiece will run rhythmically and assure its owner of chronometric accuracy, so men can bring the smaller movements of social progress and decay in life under control and keep them within reasonable and proper bounds, thus minimizing the chances of one human being exploiting another.

WM. L. MOSS

But how? We must look, as I have repeatedly pointed out in this series of articles, to the individual for help. Social progress and decay, as indications of the larger and ever-forward lateral movement of life, the progress of mankind itself, affect the individual. So it is to the individual to whom we must look to make man's social life bearable. This calls for the devotion of the individual to a spiritual ideal of social life. But what can an individual do, someone asks, in a life where the masses of men are fighting, not for their ideals, but for their very daily bread? What can an individual do amid such widespread destitution and the overcrowding of our cities; what can he accomplish in the face of flagrant vice and universal political corruption; how can he have the heart to talk ideals to a people gripped by industrial slavery and kept down through starvation wages?

CLERKS RENEW AGREEMENTS.

The Retail Clerks' Union of Seattle, Wash., secured renewal union agreements from twenty-seven stores with more on the way, according to a report by Leo L. Ledwich, business representative of the union.

Restless, could not sleep

"THERE were days when I felt like I could not get my work done. I would get so nervous and 'trembly' I would have to lie down. I was very restless, and could not sleep at night.

My mother advised me to take Cardui, and I certainly am glad she did. It is the first thing that seemed to give me any strength. I felt better after the first bottle. I kept it up and am now feeling fine."—Mrs. T. R. Gibson, Fort Payne, Ala.

The Blond and the Gray

The most recent of several Hollywood stars to be received by President Hoover is Jean Harlow, the platinum blond.

Somehow, we seem to remember that when another well-known California woman called upon the President a few weeks ago, the doors of the White House were found closed. She was the 80-year-old mother of Tom Mooney, now serving a life sentence in a California prison for implication in the bombing of a preparedness parade in San Francisco in 1916, a crime which it is now generally agreed he did not commit.

How About Industry's Soldiers?

Congress—the most radical in years—has given us the lame duck amendment, the anti-injunction law and several other things. Now it is enmeshed in the problem of whom to soak for taxes and what to do with the bonus.

Legion officialdom, standing on its convention record, declares against the bonus. Legion posts by the dozen declare for it. A great many congressmen are for it, harking to the posts, rather than to the national officers.

The debate thus far has given the nation a staggering picture of the meaning of bonus legislation. More important, it has let the light in on the fact that the men who went to France are not the favorite sons when it comes to benefits.

* * * *

The soldiers of industry tell no such story of easy paths to just treatment. Not even now are there compensation laws in all states. Many have bad ones, some have none.

There is no glamor about the risks of industry, but a man can be made just as much a cripple in just as short time in a factory as on a battlefield.

It is a fine thing to have good treatment for anybody. It is a lot finer to have it for all.

To conclude it all, the best way to secure justice for all who toil, whatever their place in the scheme of work, is to organize strong trade unions.

The American Legion is just now getting a splendid lesson in trade union value, while labor and legion work side by side. Let it be hoped this lesson is not under-rated or soon forgotten.

LOS ANGELES LABOR LEADER GOES TO CIVIL SERVICE BOARD

The city council of Los Angeles, Cal., confirmed the appointment of A. W. Hoch as a member of the municipal civil service commission. Mr. Hoch has been active in the labor movement of Los Angeles and California for a number of years. In 1930 he was elected president of the California State Federation of Labor an dre-elected in 1931. He is also business representative of the Los Angeles local of the International Association of Machinists.

FARM AND LABOR POLITICAL CLUB

The Contra Costa Farm and Labor Political club was organized at Richmond, Cal. The club believes the farmers and the workers are the joint victims of the present economic situation and that they should join forces for their mutual benefit.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The subcommittee on child labor of the White House conference on child health and protection has made a "discovery."

"An income earned by the chief wage-earner of the family sufficient to maintain a decent standard of living is basic to a normal solution of the problem of child labor," the committee announces, recommending first that this problem be solved.

This is just what organized labor has been contending for many, many years. If the subcommittee had only gone a little further and pointed out that strong organization of the workers is "basic" to maintaining "a decent standard of wages," it would have really said something.

It requires a page in the New York Times to list the serial numbers of the bills turned over by Col. Charles Lindbergh to the kidnapers of his infant son.

It is one of the most graphic exhibits of the rule of gangdom that has come to this nation.

One learned professor is moved to suggest that we return to the days when outlawry was punished by summary death at the hands of any citizen.

Some states still have laws permitting this treatment of criminals. Outlawry is proclaimed against a man and he may then either give himself up or be liable to execution at the hands of whoever chances first to meet him.

We shall come to our national senses and return to a condition of sanity and freedom from gangsters or we shall come to some such method as the learned professor proposes. It is idle to suppose that the American people will much longer tolerate bandit rule brought about by racketeers.

The mental state of the German people with reference to reparations may be explained partly by their understanding of the accounting methods used in calculating the damages done to France and Belgium, as compared with the accounting methods used in calculating the values of the ships, goods and other properties seized by the allies or turned over after the peace treaty.

For instance, it is claimed by the Germans that the four million tons of German shipping which were taken from them had an actual value, at the time of delivery, of 5,753 million marks; while the allowance made for this property in the credits given by the reparation commission amounted to only 749 million marks.

It is claimed also that for military stores actually valued at 200 million marks, allowance was made by the reparations commission in the sum of only 89 million marks.

Based upon a tabulation made by the Institute of Economics, Washington, D. C., the German claim is that while the total disbursements by France for reparation of damage in the zone of war and occupation amounted to 14 billion marks, the actual values turned over to France amount to more than 20 billion marks.

UNEMPLOYMENT

TWENTY-FIVE MILLION JOBLESS

At the opening of the sixteenth annual conference of the International Labor Organization of the League of Nations at Geneva, Switzerland, the statisticians of the organization estimated that the world army of the unemployed totals between 20,000,000 and 25,000,000, with from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 dependents. The conference will discuss methods of reducing the number of the jobles.

$600,000 RELIEF FUND URGED FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington—Welfare organizations urged the appropriations committee of the House of Representatives for "prompt action and approval" of the measure appropriating $600,000 for unemployment relief in the District of Columbia.

The community chest during the early winter secured pledges for $2,000,000 for the care of the needy, but the associated organizations declare the heavy increase in unemployment distress is far beyond the ability of the charity groups to handle.

President Hoover gave his approval to the request for the $600,000 relief measure.

JOBLESS RELIEF IN TACOMA

The laborers' union of Tacoma, Wash., uses the newspapers to ask those who have odd jobs around the garden or home, foundations to be dug and similar work, to call up the union office, which will furnish the men from the union's unemployed members. The men, the union says, can be relied upon to do the work effectively. The union has jurisdiction over hod carriers and building and common laborers.

JOBLESS CITIZENS ORGANIZE LEAGUE TO HELP SELVES

The jobless workers of Tacoma, Wash., organized the Unemployed Citizens' league of Tacoma. "The main purpose of the league," officials explained, "is to render to the unemployed through themselves mutual aid looking towards their own sustenance. They propose to co-operate in securing fuel for their homes and to raise through co-operative gardens foods, such as potatoes and vegetables, which will help greatly in reducing the cost of living not otherwise obtainable." The Tacoma school board gave the league permission to hold its meetings in public school buildings.

THEATER OWNERS USE RUMP PICTURE OPERATORS' UNION

The Utah Labor News charges the managers of the Rialto and State theaters in Salt Lake City and the Colonial theater in Ogden with employing members of a rump union organized with the purpose of aiding the employers in defeating the just demands of the two locals of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators of the United States and Canada in these cities. It is claimed the union members were locked out without the customary two weeks notice called for in their contract.

KROGER GROCERY PICKETED.

As part of their campaign against the "unfair" stores of Dayton, O., the Meat Cutters' union picketed the Kroger grocery and meat market. The Kroger, Atlantic and Pacific and Piggly-Wiggly chain stores are on the "we don't patronize" list of the entire organized labor movement in Dayton.

TAXI DRIVERS' FEE ABOLISHED.

The city council of Los Angeles, Cal., repealed an ordinance requiring taxicab drivers to pay an annual fee of $2 to the city. Officers of the taxicab drivers' union have sought this action for some time. With underpaid drivers, every little helps.

Jobs and Men

A Series of Contributed Editorials Discussing Industrial Conditions.

THE Industrial Workers of the World, whose strongholds in the last few years have beeen the agrarian sections of the west, represent the revolutionary spirit in workingmen's organizations. They have made no secret of the fact that they wished to turn the laboring man's efforts to stay the encroachments of capital upon his political and economic rights into a class struggle of the most bitter and sanguine sort. The Industrial Workers above all else oppose the spirit of mediation and compromise (intrinsic parts of collective bargaining, and which is characteristic of the American Federation of Labor's dealing with capital) and their officers and organizers have consistently preached that as workers surrender their attitude as the enemies of capital and are willing to arbitrate they become obstacles in the way of their own economic advancement.

Largely, the Industrial Workers have been forced, by their bitter opposition to the whole program of the A. F. of L., to become the uncontested friend of the industrial outcast (or "unemployable") and the immigrant worker, both classes really needing education and not organization. The "floating" type of worker, a vagrant at heart, and only working when forced to do so by an inward urge, having its seat in his stomach, needs education, and the newly-arrived immigrant, unable to speak the language of the people among whom some enterprising steamship line's agent has deposited him in return for his lifetime's savings, is in dire need of Americanization more than anything else. The fact that the vagrant and immigrant were being boosted by a labor organization to a position of the same importance as the skilled and taxpaying worker clearly demonstrates some stand had to be taken in regards to them. The public accepted the A. F. of L. and not the Industrial Workers as the spokesman of the skilled and taxpaying American workman and decided to educate the immigrant, leaving the vagrant to be dealt with by the better class of American workingmen. Accordingly, social service and patriotic societies as well as fraternal orders and other organizations many years ago instituted "Americanization classes" in practically every city of any size. Thus, while it is not generally recognized, the A. F. of L. has been directly responsible through its stand as an organization, and the activities of the rank and file of local labor unions for another distinctive step of advancement for a portion of the common people.

SPEEDWAY SIGNS UP WITH BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL

The Oakland Speedway association of Oakland, Cal., signed an agreement with the Building Trades council, pledging the association to recognize the wage scale and agreements of the building trades in its maintenance and construction work. When the agreement was signed the council removed the association's name from the "we don't patronize list."

WAGE CUTS OPPOSED BY TACOMA PLUMBERS

The Plumbers and Steamfitters union of Tacoma, Wash., adopted a resolution opposing wage cuts for city, county or state employes. The union pointed out that any action to decrease American living standards would neither aid in restoring prosperity nor in lightening the taxpayers' burden.

NION PRINTERS MAINTAIN OR INCREASE WAGE SCALES

ng-Time Contracts and New Temporary Agreements Granting Concessions to Publishers Enable Typos to Prevent Pay Cuts and Demonstrate Benefits of Organization.

New York, April 20.—"Except in a isolated jurisdictions, printers' nts are maintaining prosperity era gs on newspapers either by con- ts that have been signed for long ods or by making some working essions to renew scales from year ear. Most of the exceptions are ements to temporary wage reduc- s in return for shorter workdays," me H. Walker writes in Editor Publisher, organ of the newspa- publishing business. The article inues, saying in part:

"A study of International Typo- hical union negotiations outside the larger centers reveals a condi- where publishers are continuing e scales effected during 1929 and through the depression period. increased wages are not entirely of the picture in the story of new racts. Scales that are being re- ed, largely on one-year agree- ts, nearly all represent peak es reached under terms of pre- ly negotiated three-year con- cts.

Big Cities Keep Up Scale.

New York City and Chicago, where agreements affect so many ers, naturally hold the spotlight the labor stage at this time, but tically every other city and town the country is having its own wage ing controversy. The two big s with basic pay for printers e $60 a week play a large part keeping the average scale for spaper printers up to $52 a week. tually all of the larger cities of country have reached that aver- or bettered it. Printers of the ller places have it as their goal. As a general rule publishers are anding pay reductions in negotia- s toward new printer contracts. re are some instances, notably in x Falls, S. D., where employers e signed renewals without asking revision. There are other cases cord where the printers have ntteered to accept a wage reduc- pending return to normal condi- or to maintain working forces. Birmingham (Ala.) News-Age- ld printers have agreed to a con- tract that provides a 7 per cent wage reduction in 1932, 2 per cent in 1933 and return to the 1931 scale in 1934. In Youngstown, O., every department, except the composing room, has taken a wage reduction. Eugene, Ore., typographical union has rejected a demand for a 15 per cent cut.

"Because they claim it would interfere with their own relief program, printers in Pittsburgh have rejected a proposal for a 10 per cent reduction in the next six months, subject to another half-year extension. By a supplementary agreement, Huntington, W. Va., local has accepted a reduction. A temporary scale has been put into effect until Sept. 30 in Peoria, Ill.

"Exceptions to the rule include the signing of a three-year contract in Ashtabula, O., providing a $5 increase by 1934; a five-year contract in Charleston, Ill., with a $5 boost; and three-year agreement in Paducah, Ky., with a $3 increase.

"Worcester (Mass.) Post not only agreed to a new three-year contract at the prevailing scale recently, but installed new equipment in the composing room. Danbury, Conn., printers will enjoy existing wages for three more years under their new contract. Likewise, old standards have been renewed in Atlanta, Ga.; Altoona, Pa., and Lansing, Mich.

"Maintenance of wages has made possible a large amount of direct relief to unemployed printers and their families by I. T. U. locals themselves. President Howard recently announced that no union printer had been forced to apply for public charity. In addition to direct relief payments and voluntary five-day schedules, the I. T. U. with a membership of 80,000 in 800 towns and cities has paid out a huge sum in pensions.

"The condition among printers generally prompted President Howard to report to the I. T. U. membership that 'our organization has weathered the most disastrous economic storm of the century and our members have suffered less and sacrificed less than any other class of workers in America.'"

ew York Relief Fund to End Unless $20,000,000 More Is Provided

w York City, April 20.—In a r to Mayor Walker, Frank J. lor, commissioner of public wel- , said that the city's unemploy- t relief work, affecting nearly 00 of the 828,000 persons now iving aid from public or private cies could not go on unless an tional $20,000,000 is provided for period from June to November.

mmissioner Taylor urged imme- e consideration of the problem a view to timely action. He ted out that all of the $12,500,- appropriated by the city unem- ment relief would be exhausted the end of June and that all of $18,000,000 raised by the emer- y unemployment relief commit- would be gone before many weeks.

"Never in the history of the city of New York has there been so much poverty and misery appealing for public aid," Taylor's letter said. "Never have so many families reached the end of their resources. Never have so many been threatened with eviction, illness through lack of nourishment, and even starvation, as at the present time. The work of the welfare department and the other associated activities during the past winter has been more extensive than that performed by the Belgian relief commission during the world war."

ST. JOSEPH BUILDING TRADES CONDEMN CONVICT QUARRIES

The Building Trades Council of Jefferson City, Mo., protested against practice of state penitentiary officials in using convicts in competition with free labor in that city.

The council declared the prison officials are operating a quarry in Jefferson City and delivering crushed rock at $1.10 per yard, which it was stated is below actual cost to employers of free labor. As a result other quarries are being closed or operated on part time, with unemployment for many of the employes.

The council charged that convicts are paid 5 cents a day, while free labor receives 45 cents an hour for the same class of work. The free labor quarries deliver crushed rock at $1.50 per yard and cannot compete with prison quarry prices of $1.10 per yard.

COMMUNISTS' SCHEME BLOCKED

The effort of the communists to secure a foothold in the Central Labor union of Dayton, O., were blocked when the union refused to send delegates to the Ohio conference of unemployed councils. The proposition to send delegates was made to the central body by representatives of the Dayton unemployed council, which was spotted as being a communist organization. President Breidenbach declared the communists have for years been trying to inject poison into organized labor, "always trying to disrupt it."

LABOR TEMPLE REFINANCED.

The Labor Temple of Portland, Ore., was refinanced by the sale of $65,000 two-year, 5 per cent bonds. The new issue retired the 7 per cent bonds for a like amount issued in 1930. The bonds were sold to local unions and individual members.

THE INTERNATIONAL TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION—A BUSINESS INSTITUTION

Above layout was used in the magazine section of the Chattanooga Times recently, and its reproduction here is a courtesy of that paper. Accompanying the pictures was a splendid story of the work of the International Typographical Union, and Chattanooga union, No. 89, written by J. H. Crump, who also furnishes the following descriptive matter: (1) A front view of the lawn and main building of the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs, Colo. Note the beautiful arrangement of walks and flower beds. (2) Harris D. Hix, president of Chattanooga Typographical Union, No. 89. (3) Finney T. Carter, secretary-treasurer of Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89. (4) I. J. Gardner, who holds the second longest continuous membership with No. 89, forty-two years, forty years of which he has been foreman of the Times composing room. (5) A part of the dairy buildings and herd of thoroughbred cows which furnish dairy products to residents of the Union Printers Home. The dairy is unsurpassed by any privately owned dairy in Colorado. (6) T. J. Davie, one of No. 89's oldest members. He was a charter member of the old Central Labor Union when it was organized in 1896. He worked for twenty-five years in the Times job department, and is now Will Shepherd's man Friday on the Hamilton County Herald. The Union Printers' Home

By A. H. Holland, Librarian

For more than a third of a century the Union Printers' Home has stood a magnificent monument to the humanitarian propensity of a great labor union. It has been a tremendous undertaking for the International Typographical union to erect and properly support an institution devoted exclusively to its sick and aged members, therefore the success of the home is phenomenal—almost unbelievable. The institution is worthy of any man's investigation. It is a real show place. It is different. It has a fixed purpose and is performing a great service.

To consider the home in terms of dollars and cents only is to create a wrong impression in the mind of the reader, yet something of the magnitude of its monetary strength and requirements must be recited to give a proper understanding of its importance and permanency.

The maintenance and operating expenses of the home for a recent year were more than $300,000. Of this sum, $30,000 was expended for miscellaneous improvements and repairs. To meet this enormous outlay 78,000 men and women of the International Typographical union have pledged their substance.

The home property includes a farm of over 275 acres which is cultivated intensively. The wide expanse of grassy lawns, studded with stately elms, maples and poplars and other varieties of shade and ornamental trees and shrubs, and a wealth of blooming flowers, is a delight to the eyes of summer visitors and a source of continual satisfaction to the residents. Special attention is given to husbandry and horticulture and the institution employs an experienced farmer and florist. Rare plants and flowers are propagated during the winter season in large greenhouses. Back of the park looms the imposing four-story red and gray volcanic stone main edifice. Situated on an eminence, the home overlooks the cities of Colorado Springs and Manitou. In the distance is an unobstructed view of Pike's Peak and miles of mountain terrain. For the greater part of each year the peak is snowcapped and its hoary head alternately glistens in the sunlight and is an attraction for ominous storm clouds.

The home farm products for one year amounted to over $30,000, and showed a net profit of approximately $5,000. Supplies for table use taken from the farm consisted of 42,390 gallons of milk and cream, 5,839 pounds of butter, 3,177 pounds of veal and 14,898 pounds of pork. The garden produced sixteen varieties of vegetables throughout the summer season. In season fresh fruits and vegetables are used almost exclusively, though at other times it is necessary to depend upon canned goods. Every article of food is inspected and carefully prepared so that it may be served in an appetizing manner. Accepted business practices are followed in the purchase of the many supplies required for the home.

The highest number of residents housed in the home at any one time has been 352. The average number taken care of in recent years has been 345. Because of deaths and those who may vacate in the course of a year, the yearly turnover of residents will ordinarily reach 175. The comfortable housing of the residents is the first consideration of the management, and is being accomplished in the best possible manner. The buildings as a whole are substantial and commodious. The rooms of all residents are cheerfully and comfortably furnished. The kitchens are sanitary and the dining rooms bright and inviting. The food is plentiful, good and wholesome and the variety is sufficient to permit of the careful dieting of residents in the interest of their health.

Though a tuberculosis sanatorium is connected with the home the institution has a wider scope. Thorough and intelligent treatment is given residents whatever the nature of their ills. High blood pressure, diabetes, heart disease, etc., are successfully combatted by the home methods.

The medical staff of the home is kept at a high state of efficiency. The percentage of cures and helpful treatment among the residents is as high as could be expected. The hospital furnishings and equipment are of the best. Kindly care and home environment surrounds the aged and afflicted residents. Medical meetings are held at intervals in the institution, which claim the attention of the residents and have a tendency to educate false notions about diseases out of their heads. Lectures delivered at these meetings by members of the medical staff are instructive and interesting.

The aged member of the Typographical union, who comes here to spend his declining years, finds a delightful home atmosphere and careful attendants ready to administer to his needs. It has been aptly said of the home that it is the most uninstitutionalized institution in the world today. It is the mission of the home to promote health and happiness. It has a well defined theory that physical well-being is necessary to a contented mind and the building of bodily strength.

The social life of the home covers a wide range of amusement activities. At intervals the residents themselves stage minstrel shows and musical and literary entertainments. Recently here has been organized among the residents a home lyceum and popular and instructive affairs have been staged under its auspices. The weekly picture shows given during the ten months of the year in the library auditorium are a source of pleasure to every resident who is physically able to leave his room. Special affairs are arranged for the holiday season and there is an appropriate observance of Easter and memorial days. Croquet furnishes pleasant outdoor diversion in nice weather. There are billiards, checkers and chess to while away the time and many residents take keen delight in the card games which are usually in progress throughout the days and evenings.

Sunday afternoon religious services are held at the home throughout the year. The meetings are conducted by Colorado Springs ministers of various church denominations and are always the occasion for the offering of good music by church choirs and other high class talent.

The home possesses a splendid library of more than 10,000 volumes, and receives sixty daily papers and over fifty weekly newspapers, magazines and periodicals. The library contains works of fiction, poetry, literature and science and many residents devote a large share of their leisure time to reading.

There have been substantial and ambitious improvements in the home property in the building line. An $85,000 building has reached the foundation stage. This structure will be built of brick and concrete, will contain seventy-eight individual rooms equipped with every modern convenience. There will also be a roof cottage and basement garage. The erection of this building has been made necessary by the continual and growing demand for more accommodations for residents. The management hopes to be so situated in the near future so as to admit every worthy applicant for the home as soon as he has been approved for entrance.

Governor Kills Bill Breaking Contract With State Workers

Albany, N. Y., April 20.—Governor Roosevelt vetoed senate bill 614, introduced by the senate finance committee, which would require state employees enrolled in the state retirement pension to pay an additional assessment of three per cent of their wages into the retirement fund for one year, beginning July 1, 1932. The governor, in his executive budget, provided that the state should continue this payment out of the treasury as in former years, but the majority of the legislature cut the item of about $1,500,000 out of the budget and passed senate bill No. 614 instead. The state will now assume the three per cent again and thus relieve state employes from a virtual reduction of about three per cent in wages.

Governor Roosevelt filed a memorandum with his veto of the bill, saying in part: "I am vetoing this measure because it is one of the most unfair, unjust, discriminatory pieces of legislation sent to me by the legislature since I have been governor. Stripped of all camouflage, the legislature proposes to tax all members of the employes' retirement system 3 per cent of their salaries, for the purpose of paying, in part, a debt of the state on which for ten years the state has made payments.

"I do not propose, while I am governor, to permit the great Empire state to break its contract with the thousands of faithful, loyal, hard-working employes who have elected to make the state service a career and who are insuring against old age by contributing to this pension system. It is neither just, fair nor honest for the state to do this. The legislature, in order to preserve the integrity of the fund, will next year have to make the necessary contributions for this year as well as next."

A. F. OF L. REITERATES STAND AGAINST FEDERAL PAY REDUCTION

Green Declares Wage Reduction Would Lower Living Standards of Government Workers, Spur Private Employers to Slash Pay and Intensify Economic Degradation Accompanying Unemployment.

Washington, April 20.—A conference of a large number of the executives of the national and international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor met at the headquarters of the federation to consider the continued attempts of some members of congress to force pay cuts upon government employes. William Green, president of the A. F. of L., presided.

At the conclusion of the conference, President Green made the following statement:

"The representatives of millions of working men and women who met at the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor repeated, with increased emphasis, their opposition to the imposition of wage reductions upon government employes.

"They voiced their unanimous protest against such a proposal and directed that an appeal be made to the friends of the masses of the people in congress to defeat it.

"Reports received at the offices of the American Federation of Labor from all sections of the country show that labor is greatly alarmed over the reported attempts of some members of congress to force pay cuts upon government employes.

"These workers know that if congress cuts wages the last line of defense against lower living standards for millions of working men and women will be broken down.

"Our boasted American standard of living will then be a myth.

"Wage cutting action by congress will serve as a signal to private employers to do likewise.

"This, in turn, will result in intensified economic and social degradation in the industrial sections of the country where unemployment, hunger and misery now acutely exist.

"This is no time for congress to launch upon an unsound economic pusillanimous program.

"It should not add to the spirit of social unrest through the pursuit of a wage-cutting policy.

"It should strive to build mass morale, inspire hope, stimulate buying power, restore prosperity and increase spiritual values.

"Congress can do this by announcing to the world that the American standard of living, prevailing among the employes of the government of the United States, will not be lowered through the imposition of a reduction in wages.

"The American Federation of Labor, speaking for the working men and women of the nation, appeals to the members of congress to preserve and protect the living standards established by government employes through years of effort.

"Do not add to the economic misery of our beloved country by voting to impose wage cuts upon thousands of faithful, trained, valuable government employes who, by the very nature of their employment, must depend upon congress for the protection and preservation of their living standards."

Building Trades Council Fights Move to Cut State Workers' Pay

Houston, Tex., April 20.—In a letter to organized labor in Texas, the Houston Building Trades council declares its unyielding opposition to reductions in the wages or salaries of any group of state workers. After referring to a move to call a special session of the legislature to cut the pay of all state employes, the letter says:

"The state employes are our coworkers, and in many instances their salaries and wages are too low already. Furthermore, we as workers have had enough of this wage cutting, and it is time to call a halt.

"To reduce the salaries and wages of state employes will only tend to reduce the buying power of thousands of more workers, and thereby help to retard the recovery of prosperity, and will only make an already bad situation worse.

"We therefore most respectfully request that you communicate immediately with your state senators and representatives, and vigorously protest against the calling of any special session of the Texas legislature for the purpose of cutting salaries and wages of any group of workers."

UTAH STATE BOARDS REFUSE PAY CUT URGED BY GOV. DERN

The state university and the state insanity board refused to cut the wages of their employes in accordance with the suggestion of Gov. Dern, who recommended that all state departments slash their pay rolls. Those familiar with the situation believe the proposed wage slash will be a failure. It is claimed the wages paid by Utah are even now too low, and are in fact less than the average in other western states.

UNION PRINTING PUBLICITY.

The union printers, pressmen, stereotypers and bookbinders of Little Rock, Ark., organized an allied council publicity committee to create a demand for the union label on printed matter and to give publicity to firms who use "Build Arkansas Industries" as their slogan and then have their printing done elsewhere.

SNARKS

too long to fetch him. "Of course," conceded the snark, with that courtly air indigenous to the inhabitants of Josh Bell county, "we can wait, but you will wait inside of our nice new jail." Naturally, all the students, being students, shouted that they, too, wanted to go to jail.

Frowning darkly, the snark perceived that he was being foiled. Whoever heard of an investigated person, with access to counsel, anyway? So without further ado, he said that he would require all the students to put up a peace bond, not because of an offense done against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth, but because they looked like persons who would do that very thing at the first opportunity. The Hon. Vanbeber missed this opportunity of quoting Madame Roland, and the show—the investigation, I mean—went on.

In the next scene, Brother Smith told the students all about the nice gentlemen who had helped to capture them at dawn. "They are the sons of the pioneers of this nation," he said, in his snarkiest manner. "All that is sacred to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness is represented in these people you have here." He was sure that the students, on the other hand, were at best suspected characters. He suspected them, to begin with, and what other sort of people would come to Bell county voluntarily? "There are no two sides to this proposition; you are going to do what we say. If you come here to investigate, we are going to do the first investigating." And so on and so on, for half a Tribune column.

At this point, Col. Reed Patterson was introduced to the court, as a prominent attorney of Pineville, Ky. Just how he got into the film is not clear; possibly the snark had cannily retired to consult with a Boojum. Col. Patterson was martial in demeanor and verbiage, but I am inclined to think that he is a courtesy colonel, like Jack Dempsey, who was recently raised to the Kentucky peerage by Gov. Ruby Laffoon. Standing by the county judge, Col. Patterson let it be known that he and his people were tired of having visitors from the east coming in and investigating them. "The streams of these mountains will run red with blood," brayed this priceless ass, "before we will surrender our country."

There really wasn't much to be said after this gory apostrophe, directed against the students, the bus, and the two Fords. But the students said that they had no money for bonds, and the snark said that in that case it became his painful duty to expel them from the counties of Harlan and Bell; and the curtain went down. When last heard from the students had climbed into the bus and the Fords to chug back to the east. Departing, they muttered sundry sentiments, one of which was that since an Englishman in their party had been slapped by one of the sons of the pioneers of this nation, they were going to lodge a complaint with the British ambassador. Another student, a lady, I think, and a very young one, said she was going to tell Senator Costigan all about it—the old meanies!

That about finishes the story of the Snark, with a touch—and more than a touch—of the trial of the knave for stealing the queen's tarts. But it's a sad story, after all. Brother Smith probably enjoyed himself, and I have no doubt whatever that the students did. But what about the miners?

Still, that's the wisdom we commonly bring to the solution of labor problems in this country. We hire a few snarks, and then all that troubles vanishes softly and silently away. However, it always comes up again. Some day it may come up with such fury that, to paraphrase the sanguinary Col. Patterson, the streets of our cities will run red with blood, as we surrender our country.
